Communication Masts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make the erection of communication masts subject to the normal local authority planning procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 17 December 1993]: I have no plans to change the selective planning controls over the erection of telecommunication masts which were introduced in January 1993.

The erection of masts up to 15 m in height has a general planning permission, under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. But if a local planning authority considers that a proposed mast would threaten amenity, it may determine that prior approval is required for its siting and appearance. The mast may not then be erected without that approval. A planning application is required for masts above 15 m, and in protected areas such as conservation areas and areas of outstanding natural beauty.

I am satisfied that these powers strike a reasonable balance between the need to protect amenity and the needs of the telecommunications industry.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Children's Homes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to exempt residential establishments which care for children with multiple handicaps who require a very warm atmosphere and which are labour intensive (a) from VAT on fuel and (b) from bearing the cost of statutory sick pay.

Sir John Cope: VAT is designed as a broad-based tax on general consumer expenditure. In line with this principle the changes in the taxation of fuel and power will apply across the board to all consumers. Special treatment or particular sectors would produce inconsistencies. The revenue and environmental objectives of the changes would be put at risk. It is far better to provide extra financial help to those who need it via the benefit system, and this is what the Government have done.

Subject to parliamentary approval, the Statutory Sick Pay Bill 1993 will end the reimbursement of 80 per cent. of employers' SSP costs from April 1994. At the same time, employers' national insurance contributions will be reduced to ensure that employers as a whole are more than compensated for their additional SSP costs. Small employers will receive further help in the form of full reimbursement of any SSP paid after four weeks' sick absence.

Grace and Favour Accommodation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis and how frequently (a) grace and favour accommodation and (b) accommodation for members of the royal family no longer on the civil list at the occupied royal palaces is assessed for taxable value; when the last assessment was; what is the gross value of these assessments; and on how many of each category tax is actually paid.

Mr. Dorrell: The same income tax rules apply to grace and favour accommodation as to other living accommodation. Accommodation which is taxable is assessed each year along with other income. The information requested by the hon. Member about the number and value of assessments on grace and favour accommodation is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

As regards the tax affairs of certain members of the royal family, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 December 1993 at column 844.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Nelson: Since 1979 the following members of the House of Lords have held appointments on quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations for which I have responsibility:

(a) Securities and Investments Board (SIB):
Lord Runciman: non-executive director; duration of appointment four years from 1986; salary £8,000 pa in 1986 to £10,500 in 1989. Deputy chairman; duration of appointment four years from 1990; salary £32,500 pa.
Lord Stewartby: non-executive director; duration of appointment two years from 1993; salary £13,500 pa.
Lord Alexander of Weedon: Deputy chairman; duration of appointment three years from 1994; salary £32,500 pa.
(b) Financial Services Tribunal (FST):
Lord Grantchester: chairman; duration of appointment three years from 1988 to 1991; paid a daily fee for work done.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Nelson: Since 1979 no former British representative members in the European Parliament have held appointments on quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations for which I have responsibility.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the reduction in the sterling exchange rate since (a) August 1992 and (b) February 1993 in terms of 1990 weights for United Kingdom imports plus United Kingdom exports of manufacturers; and what are the corresponding figures for the ecu and non-ecu currencies;

(2) if the country weights used in the Bank of England index covers total United Kingdom imports as well as United Kingdom exports;

(3) what is the reduction in the rate of exchange between sterling and non-ecu currencies since (a) August 1992 and (b) February 1993; and if he will publish a table showing the rate of exchange for sterling against non-ecu currencies for each year since 1970;

(4) what was the composition of the Bank of England index for the pound sterling, together with the weights attached to each currency, in 1975 and 1985; and what was the equivalent for 1990 in each case.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for the sterling exchange rate on the dates requested and corresponding figures for separate EC and non-EC currencies can be found in the monthly CSO "Financial Statistics" publication and in the monthly OECD "Main Economic Indicators" publication. A single exchange rate index against non-EC currencies is not available. Sterling exchange rates in terms of 1990 weights for United Kingdom imports and exports could be constructed from data in the CSO "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", but only at disproportionate cost. A table of rates of exchange of sterling against separate non-EC currencies for each year since 1970 could be reproduced only at disproportionate cost.

From 2 February 1981 to 2 January 1989 the weights of the Bank of England sterling exchange rate index were based on average trade flows at 1977, with a base year of 1975. From 3 January 1989 to the present day, weights have been based on disaggregated trade flows at 1980 with a base year of 1985. The weighted composition and methodological construction of the sterling exchange rate index at the dates requested are available in the Treasury "Economic Progress Report" for March 1977 and the Bank of England "Quarterly Bulletins" for March 1981 and November 1988.

Sovereign Immunity

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 842, in which OECD states sovereign immunity arrangements in respect of repayment of taxes upon business are more severe than in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: The arrangements which most OECD countries adopt in this area are not statutory and comprehensive information about their practice is not available. An exception is the United States of America which, under section 892 of the IRS code, provides a statutory exemption for the investment income of foreign Governments. Although details are not available, I understand that a number of other OECD countries adopt a similar approach in practice.

Unified Budget

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the impact of the date of the unified budget on retail sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received a number of letters on this subject. The Government recognise the importance of pre-Christmas consumer expenditure to businesses, especially retailers, and will continue to take this factor into account in deciding the most appropriate dates for future Budgets.

Fears that retail sales would suffer this year in the run-up to the Budget in November have, however, proved groundless. Retail sales have been on a strong upward trend for over a year, and stand at record levels. In the three months to November—the three months before the Budget—they were 3·6 per cent. up on the equivalent period in 1992.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the losses in customs and excise duties arising from the operation of the European single market and cross-channel shopping; and how this has changed from previous estimates.

Sir John Cope: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 10 December at column 403. The latest estimate of the total revenue loss—£175 million—compares with an estimate of £250 million published in March 1992.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total net payment to the EC since 1 January 1973.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom's total net contribution to the European Communities' budget from 1973 to 1993 is £20 billion.

Barlow Clowes Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list the names and addresses of the parties he has brought legal proceedings against in connection with the affairs of the collapsed Barlow Clowes Group.

Mr. Nelson: In the course of proceedings against third parties to reduce the cost to the taxpayer of its ex gratia payments scheme for Barlow Clowes investors, the Government have issued over 500 writs. The details of these writs could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Customs and Excise, Gatwick

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many passengers arriving at Gatwick in charter or scheduled flights from the Caribbean on 21 December 1993 were strip searched; what sex the passengers were who were strip searched; what illegal substances were discovered; how many passengers objected to or refused to be strip searched; and under what powers passengers are strip searched.

(2) what illegal substances were found by Customs and Excise officers on passengers from Jamaica who arrived on charter or scheduled flights from the Caribbean arriving at Gatwick on 21 December 1993; if he will give details of the circumstances; and how many passengers were charged with any related offences;

(3) how many Customs and Excise officers were on duty during the day at Gatwick South Terminal on 7 December 1993: 14 December 1993; 21 December 1993: 28 December 1993 and 4 January 1994.

Sir John Cope: On 21 December 1993 a total of three passengers—two males and one female—arriving at Gatwick on flights from the Caribbean were subject to strip search by Customs. No objections were raised and no passenger refused to be strip searched. No illegal substances were found on the passengers searched. In the search of passengers, Customs act within the provisions of section 164 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

No illegal substances were found by Customs on any passenger arriving from Jamaica who arrived on charter or scheduled flights from the Caribbean arriving at Gatwick on 21 December 1993. Consequently no passengers were charged with any related offences.

The only staff based specifically at Gatwick south terminal are those who deal with demand-led activities such as duty collection, VAT retail export schemes, custody officers and so on. The numbers of these for the dates in question are as follows:

	Staff
7 December 1993	15
14 December 1993	15
21 December 1993	16
28 December 1993	21
4 January 1994	14

For anti-smuggling purposes, including intelligence and investigation, Customs staff are not based at any particular terminal at Gatwick but are required to respond to the perceived risk at any given time. The total number of these staff on duty at Gatwick on the days listed was as follows:

	Anti-Smuggling	Intell. and Invest.
7 December 1993	75	23
14 December 1993	67	25
21 December 1993	55	22
28 December 1993	66	17
4 January 1994	57	17

Stamp Duty Reserve Tax

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received on the issue of the imposition of stamp duty reserve tax on American depositary receipts issued on behalf of United Kingdom companies; and from whom.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 December 1993]: I have received a few representations on this matter.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made about the impact of stamp duty reserve tax on rights and scrip issues arising from American depositary receipts issued on behalf of United Kingdom companies on inward investment into the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will outline the Government's policy on the taxation of rights offers and scrip issues taken up by American shareholders of American depositary receipts issued on behalf of United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 December 1993]: Higher rate stamp duty reserve tax applies to all new shares going into depositary receipt form, including rights and scrip issues. This reflects the fact that stamp duty reserve is not charged on transactions in the depositary receipts themselves. These arrangements provide a fair balance between investment in depositary receipt form and investment through direct shareholdings.

Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the regional distribution of the civil service has changed since the Government's current relocation policy was introduced in March 1988; and what plans he has for monitoring and reporting the relocation of civil servants.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the Government's delegated relocation policy it is for departments and agencies to review the location of their work regularly and systematically with the intention of locating where best value for money is offered.

The annual publication "Civil Service Statistics" records the regional distribution of civil servants by Department. The 1993 edition shows that between 1 April 1988 and 1 April 1993, influenced by relocation and location decisions, the number of non-industrial civil servants in London and the south-east reduced by nearly 7,000 while the numbers outside the south-east increased by over 4,600. Departments and agencies have also moved civil servants between regions outside the south-east.

The Government intend to continue monitoring the location of civil servants and publishing the results in "Civil Service Statistics", thereby making evident the changing regional distribution of the civil service. This monitoring will continue, but central monitoring of decisions to relocate civil service posts will be ended.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Exhibitions

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Voluntary Service Overseas, to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 21 February to Friday 25 February.

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the "BBC Marshall Plan of the Mind" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 28 February to Friday 4 March.

Data and Video Network

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what consideration has been given to allowing access via the parliamentary data and video network to Government computer data bases which are accessible by the public; and if he will list those data bases which have been considered.

Mr. Waller: The Central Office of Information press data base is the only Government computer data base accessible by the public which is at present available as part of the parliamentary data and video network pilot experiment. It contains the text of press notices issued by some Government Departments, and is available via the POLIS service.

The Library of the House already subscribes to various data bases and is considering the possibility of providing the United Kingdom official publications, census and other data bases, available on CD-ROM, over the network. The Information Committe hopes to publish its report on the parliamentary data and video network early in 1994. Any decisions involving increased funding for the PDVN will need to await that report and its consideration by the House.

Stationery

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what was the total amount of stationery issued to each hon. Member during the year 1992-93 in terms of (a) sheets of paper, (b) franked envelopes and (c) unfranked envelopes.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: During the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 7,279,870 sheets of paper; 4,807,376 post paid envelopes and cards; and 1,080,735 unfranked envelopes were issued to Members.

Visitors

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will carry out a survey of the number of visitors in the public gallery at 3 pm, 5 pm, 7 pm, 9 pm and 11 pm on Monday 17 January, Tuesday 18 January, Wednesday 19 January, Thursday 20 January and at 11 am on Friday 21 January 1994 or other suitable dates; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Serjeant at Arms has undertaken to conduct a survey of the kind suggested; and will write to the hon. Member in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has one special adviser, Mr. Peter Barnes. His duties vary.

Family Benefits

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) the number of United Kingdom families with children and (b) the numbers of United Kingdom children, dependent on family income supplement or family credit in 1979, 1989 and 1992.

Mr. Burt: The information provided is for Great Britain only:

Number of families with dependent children	[1]7,100	[2]7,100	[3]6,900

Entertainment

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will itemise under heads of expenditure how the budget for entertainment within his Department was expended in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Hague: The Department does not have a budget for entertainment. Any such expenditure is met from within the budget for hospitality. I refer the hon. Member to answers I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 20 October 1993, at column 247, 23 November 1993, at columns 34-35, and 30 November 1993, at column 450.

Benefits

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to ensure that those claimants for the new incapacity benefit who suffer from diseases with cyclical patterns such as ME are not disadvantaged by the objective medical test for the benefit.

Mr. Scott: Claimants with such conditions will not be disadvantaged. Doctors from the Benefits Agency medical services, who will apply the new more objective medical test, will be required to consider the effect of conditions on ability to work over a period of time not merely at the point when they conduct the medical examination or when the claimant completes the questionnaire.

Family Credit

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of lone parents on family credit receive (a) the maximum applicable level of family credit, (b) within £10 of the maximum applicable level of family credit and (c) within £20 of the maximum applicable level of family credit;

(2) what percentage of families on family credit receive (a) the maximum applicable level of family credit, (b) within £10 of the maximum applicable level of family credit and (c) within £20 of the maximum applicable level of family credit.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

	Lone parents percentage	All cases percentage
Families receiving maximum family credit	28	24
Families receiving within £10 of the maximum family credit	43	35
Families receiving within £20 of the maximum family credit	58	47

Mr. Scott: The information for Great Britain is in the tables. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, is responsible for Social Security statistics in Northern Ireland.

Housing Benefit

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the figures showing the total amount of housing benefit subsidy in the private sector broken down into (a) DOE and (b) local authority where the rent was above the level agreed by the rent assessment officers and where the tenants were (i) elderly, (ii) adults with special handicaps and (iii) families with dependent children, for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1992-93 and the latest available date for the current year;

(2) what amount of housing subsidy is produced by (a) central Government and (b) local authorities to private landlords, where the rent is above the level agreed by the rent assessment officers, where the tenants are (i) elderly, (ii) disabled, (iii) adults with special handicaps and (iv) families with dependent children for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Notes:
1. No benefit subsidy in respect of rent allowances is paid by the Department of the Environment.

Social Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are used for determining the maximum deduction from income support to repay a loan from the social fund; what is the minimum level of benefit left payable; what changes he is considering to the criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In determining the rate at which social fund loans are repaid the applicant's commitments are taken into account. The normal repayment rate is 15 per cent. of the applicant's Income Support applicable amount, less housing costs. Where the applicant has existing commitments the rate may be set at 10 per cent., 5 per cent. or lower. In exceptional circumstances, with the applicant's agreement, the repayment rate may be set at 25 per cent., leaving a minimum 75 per cent. of the applicable amount, but only if it is clear that the applicant can afford to repay at this rate. All aspects of the social fund are closely monitored, including repayment rates for loans.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the publications and television channels in which his Department advertised the introduction of disability living allowance in April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Advertising the introduction of disability living allowance—DLA—in the publications and on the television stations shown in the table, was one part of a successful, multi-stranded publicity campaign which was targeted at disabled people, carers, advisers and health professionals. By the end of November 1993 over one million claims to DLA had been processed and over a half a million awards of benefit made.

All aspects of the social fund are closely monitored, including the guidance issued to social fund officers.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many landowners in Northern Ireland are receiving annual payments under the arable area payments scheme (a) in each band of £25,000 up to £500,000 and (b) over £500,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In Northern Ireland, 3,090 landowners are receiving annual payments under the arable area payments scheme of up to £24,999, and four landowners payments between £25,000 and £49,999. No landowners are receiving payments higher than these amounts.

Agri-environmental Funding

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much will be spent in Northern Ireland in each year from 1993-94 to 1995-96 on (a) environmentally sensitive areas, identifying the amount allocated for the new access option, (b) new nitrate sensitive areas, (c) the moorland scheme, (d) the new habitat scheme, (e) the new countryside access scheme, (f) the organic aid scheme and (g) the total amount of money being spent on the agri-environment scheme in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Planned expenditure in Northern Ireland for each of the schemes under the agri-environment programme is set out in the table.

	1993-94 '000	1994-95 '000	1995-96 '000
ESA Scheme	—	2,700	4,000
Moorland Scheme	—	—	90
Habitat Creation Scheme	—	—	100
Organic Aid Scheme	—	60	60
TOTAL	—	2,760	4,250

The NI programme, which is still subject to EC approval, does not have provisions for nitrate sensitive areas, countryside access or access in environmentally sensitive areas—ESAs.

Mr. Ancram: No sugar beet is grown in Northern Ireland. Information on the numbers of growers of linseed, horticultural crops and oilseeds is not available for any year prior to 1993. Where rules on disclosure permit, the information requested is as follows:

Training

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his policy in respect of independent companies tendering for public contracts in competition with the existing training centres to manage training, education and enterprise programmes;

(2) what is his policy in respect of independent companies entering into partnership with the existing training centres to manage training, education and enterprise programmes.

Mr. Tim Smith: Responsibility of the the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 5 January 1994.

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your questions about policy in respect of independent companies tendering for public contracts in competition, or entering into partnership, with existing Training Centres.

The Training and Employment Agency currently has sufficient contracted capacity to manage and deliver its training programmes. Independent companies and other organisations do operate in competition with Training Centres. There is no bar on such organisatiions entering into parternship with Training Centres for those purposes.

I hope that you find this helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Russian election and referendum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The elections and referendum have given Russia her first post-Soviet democratic Parliament and a constitution which guarantees democratic institutions and individual human rights. This is an historic advance. No single party won an overall majority in the new Parliament. The democrats and reformers have won about one third of the seats. The extreme nationalists did unexpectedly well, but we should keep this in proportion; they have 64 seats out of the 450 in the lower House, the Duma. President Yeltsin has said that Russia will continue on the path of reform and Britain will continue to support that progress.

British observers, including several hon. Members of this House, concluded that the election procedures, although complex, were adequate to ensure a fair poll and reflected the views of the Russian people. Copies of their report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he will be giving to the liquidators of BCCI when they visit Abu Dhabi to discuss BCCI.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No request for assistance during their visit to Abu Dhabi has been received from the liquidators of BCCI.

Consulate, Dusseldorf

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the civil service grade of Mr. Bullen who works at the consulate in Dusseldorf; and what training he and other members of staff have received in dealing with members of the public.

Mr. Goodlad: Mr. Bullock—not Bullen—is a locally engaged visa clerk. He received all necessary training in the consulate general in Dusseldorf to enable him to deal with members of the public. Other members of staff at the consulate general have received the training necessary to undertake their particular duties.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visitors' applications have been made in Dusseldorf for each year since 1983; and how many refusals have been made for visitors' visas.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Separate statistics are not available for the number of "visit" applications and visitor refusals made at the British consulate general, Dusseldorf since 1983.

The following figures are available for non-settlement applications—including visitors, students, and working holidaymakers.

Year	Received	Refused
1991	18,327	287
1990	17,327	282
1989	12,067	147
1988 / 1983	no figures are available

Ex-Soviet Nuclear Plants

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the take-up of technical assistance in the Commonwealth independent states for making safe nuclear power plants in the states of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 6 December 1993, at column 74.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Foreign Affairs Council of 20 and 21 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 and 21 December.

The Council agreed negotiating mandates for new partnership agreements between the European Union and Tunisia and Israel.

There was a brief discussion on follow-up to the European Council on 10 and 11 December. The presidency noted that follow-up work would fall to the Greek and German presidencies and the Commission. The Commission called for an early decision on interest-rate subsidies for small and medium-sized enterprises, in the light of the European Council conclusions calling for a conclusion by the end of the year.

There was a brief discussion of the outcome of the Uruguay round negotiations: the Commission confirmed that it would seek to improve EC access to third country markets before market access schedules are finalised on 15 February. The Council also agreed on the need for an early discussion of trade policy towards central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

There were ministerial negotiating sessions with the four applicants for Community membership. Excellent progress was made. A large number of negotiating chapters have now been closed, including the difficult environmental standards chapters and all of the Maastricht chapters except economic and monetary union.

On the former Yugoslavia, Ministers prepared for their meeting with the parties on 22 December. The Council subsequently discussed the Union's joint action on the delivery of humanitarian aid to Bosnia. They agreed to make 48 mecu—£39 million—available for urgent needs, notably in the energy sector, of which the financing would be split 50:50 between the Community and member states.

Ministers agreed to invite the President of the Commission to propose a middle-ranking Commission official to act as the Cyprus observer for the Union. His terms of reference will be "in the light of the Council's review in January 1995 of the question of Cyprus' accession to the European Union, to report periodically to the Council on the implications of political developments in Cyprus for the requirements of the acquis of the Union, including progress in the UN Secretary-General's good offices mission for Cyprus."

The Council discussed the Commission's proposals for new free trade agreements with the Baltic states.

The Council approved unanimously a joint action, covering the first phase of the initiative for a pact on stability in Europe. This involves a conference to launch the initiative to be held in April 1994 in Paris.

The presidency reported on progress made so far in agreeing negotiating directives for the Community in the mid-term review of the Lomé convention. Negotiations with the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries will begin in 1994.

The Council discussed outstanding nominations to the Committee of the Regions. The Portuguese—Portugal is the only country yet to make nominations—said that they would aim to do so before 15 January, the date agreed by the last special European Council as the deadline for the first meeting of the Committee.

The Council adopted a decision to put into effect from 1 January 1994 the code of conduct it had agreed on 6 December on public access to documents held by the Council. The Netherlands and Denmark voted against.

The Council briefly reviewed progress towards agreeing a regulation on a common export regime for dual use goods.

The Council voted to remove tariff concessions from the Austrian subsidiaries of GM and Grundig, both of which had received illegal state aid. Germany, the Netherlands and Luxembourg voted against. The decision on Grundig was subsequently suspended following full repayment of the state aid.

The Council discussed the proposed budget discipline decision without reaching agreement.

The EC/India co-operation agreement was signed by the Commission, the presidency and the Indian Commerce Minister in the margins of the Council.

Dealings with Companies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what dealings he or any member of his Department has had, whether for export promotion or for any other purpose with (a) ATE International Ltd., (b) Admincheck Ltd., (c) Advance Electronics Development Ltd., (d) Arctic Centre ICE Ltd., (e) Atlas Equipment Co. Ltd., (f) Atlas Air Conditioning Co. Ltd., (g) Dominion International, (h) Endshire Export Marketing, (i) Falcon Systems, (j) Geodesigns, (k) Investacast Precision Castings Ltd., (l) Meed International Ltd., and (m) Rajbrook Ltd.; and if he will give the purpose of his dealings with each of these companies.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lomé Convention

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of agreement in the latest round of the general agreement on tariffs and trade for the future of the Lomé convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The mid-term review of the fourth Lomé convention is under way. This will involve negotiations between the EC and the Africa, Caribbean and Pacific—ACP—states on possible changes to the convention to reflect developments since it was agreed in 1989. These negotations must be concluded by March 1995. The convention itself will expire on 1 March 2000.

The mid-term review takes place in the context of the successful conclusion of the Uruguay round. However, the Final Act agreed on 15 December does not affect the status of the convention.

Sudan

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in the last three months regarding the persecution of Christians in the Sudan; and what action he is taking to promote an end to the conflict in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive many representations, both from the Churches themselves and from interested human rights organisations. We have welcomed the initiative of the Kenyan, Ugandan, Ethiopian and Eritrean Presidents to try to encourage dialogue between the Government of Sudan and the factions of the Sudan People's Liberation Army. With other European Union member states, we are encouraging the parties to respond positively to mediation efforts.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure that the operation of THORP does not contribute towards the international proliferation of materials useful for the manufacture of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy of non-proliferation aspects of reprocessing at THORP is set out in the statement of Government policy on reprocessing and operation of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield: a copy of this statement is in the Library of the House. The statement makes it clear that we consider that any potential proliferation risks associated with the operation of THORP are satisfactorily met by the existing arrangements to prevent theft, sabotage and diversion.

EC Voting

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out for each member state of the European Community (a) its estimated population, (b) the number of votes allocated to its respective ministers in the Council of Ministers when voting on the basis of a qualified and weighted majority, (c) the approximate population represented by each vote, (d) that population expressed as a percentage of that member state's population and (e) the population per vote expressed as a percentage of the total approximate population of all member states of the European Community, together with the respective totals and the requisite number of votes and assenting member states required for assent.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

Member state	Estimated population (millions)	Number of votes in council	Approximate population per vote (thousands)
Belgium	10·1	5	2,020
Denmark	5·2	3	1,733

The number of votes which constitutes a qualified majority is 54. There are numerous combinations of member states whose total number of votes in Council reaches or exceeds this figure.

Mr. Goodlad: There are currently no former MEPs. To answer the question in full would incur disproportionate cost.

Foreign and Security Policy Unit

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the Foreign and Commonwealth Office established its common foreign and security policy unit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With effect from 16 March 1992 the existing European political co-operation unit, which had been part of the EC presidency department in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, became the common foreign and security policy unit.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on an application to enter the United Kingdom made to the high commissioner in Islamabad on behalf of Israr Ahmed, who was born on 30 May 1989, REF-IMM/CO 442.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the correspondence unit migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to let the hon. Member have a substantive reply in due course.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the high commission in Islamabad will take a decision on applications to grant British citizenship to Mr. Wajid Aziz, born on 15 January 1981 and Miss Majida Aziz, born on 15 January 1984, reference CON/4534; when these applicants were interviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British high commission in Islamabad refused on 3 August 1993 the passport applications submitted on behalf of Mr. Wajid Aziz and Miss Majida Aziz. The children's alleged father, Mr. Abdul Aziz, was interviewed that day but the interviewing officer was not satisfied that the children were related, as claimed. The reasons were explained to Mr. Aziz at the time and the passport fees refunded.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on an application by Nasreen Akhtar, REF: IMM/B6820 to enter the United Kingdom made to the high commissioner in Islamabad; whether the high commissioner has received the result of a comparative DNA test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the correspondence unit migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to let the hon. Member have a substantive reply in due course.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is going to be taken by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad on an application to visit the United Kingdom by Mrs. Tasawar Fatima; when the post agreed to undertake to reconsider the application following representations by the hon. Member for Bradford, West; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In October 1993 the high commission in Islamabad took the decision to maintain the refusal of entry clearance to Mrs. Tasawar Fatima. I am sorry that the hon. Member was not so informed at the time.

German Constitutional Court Judgment

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that the English translation of the judgment of the German constitutional court of 12 October 1993 is made available to the general public as soon as possible and placed in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: A translation was placed in the Library of the House on 3 December 1993. It will be published in the International Law Reports later this year.

European Union Funding

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the powers he has under English and Community law to prevent the European Union providing financial resources within the United Kingdom to British organisations for a purpose which is avowedly political within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Within the United Kingdom, organisations which are duly constituted and have lawful objectives are entitled to seek funding from any source. There are no powers under domestic or Community law to prevent funds being disbursed on behalf of the European Union in accordance with Community law.

EC Visitors' Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received to date from the representatives of any country concerning their nationals being required, from 1996, to obtain visas to visit the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have received no representations to date about the proposed European Union common visa list. The Commission's proposals have not yet been formally communicated to the member states by the Council secretariat. When they are, they will be made available to Parliament in accordance with normal scrutiny arrangements.

Jamaica

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens wishing to visit Jamaica during 1993 were (a) refused entry, (b) detained and (c) deported; how many such persons were able to appeal against refusal to grant entry; how many appeals were (i) upheld and (ii) rejected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am aware of no cases of British citizens visiting Jamaica who were refused entry, detained or deported in 1993. I am informed that Jamaican immigration legislation makes no provision for appeal against refusal of entry.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is issued to Jamaican citizens wishing to visit the United Kingdom as to whether they should apply for pre-entry visas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Jamaican citizens seeking to visit the United Kingdom are advised by both the Jamaican Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the British high commission in Kingston that prior entry clearance is advisable, but not mandatory.

Prospective visitors contacting the high commission, whether or not they apply for prior entry clearance, are advised as to the documentation required. Information leaflets are freely available and telephone enquiries, personal callers and correspondence are dealt with by trained entry clearance staff at the British high commission. Local airlines and travel agents are also conversant with requirements.

EU Agricultural Harmonisation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Foreign Affairs Ministers Council meeting of 21 December 1993 in regard to enlargement of the European Communities; and what outstanding matters remain on health, environment, and agricultural harmonisation between the European Union and European Economic Area.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Excellent progress was made at the negotiating sessions with Sweden, Finland, Norway and Austria at the 21 December Foreign Affairs Council. A large number of negotiating chapters were closed.

The European economic area—EEA—came into force on 1 January. On health, the EEA extends EC legislation to the participating European Free Trade Association — EFTA—states—Norway, Sweden, Austria, Finland and Iceland—so that EEA nationals are entitled to reciprocal health care benefits in all EEA member states. On the environment, the agreement provides for increased co-operation between EEA states but does not include the harmonisation of environmental legislation. On agriculture, the EEA does not require the participating EFTA states to bring their support arrangements into line with the common agricultural policy, but they have agreed to adopt much of the EU's regulatory legislation in the veterinary, phytosanitary and other areas. Except where transitional periods are agreed, or derogations granted, the four members of EFTA currently negotiating to join the EU will have to adopt the entire body of Community legislation in these areas on their accession.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry Commission

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what land in Lancashire and the north-west the Forestry Commission proposes to sell under the current disposal programme.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission has no forest land on the market at present in Lancashire and the north-west.

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, by location, the annual fuel heating bills for each of her Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Jack: Office heating is not distinguished separately in the fuel bills for the 260 or so sites occupied by the Ministry and its executive agencies. It would be disproportionately expensive to calculate such costs, but readily available global figures for all types of energy are as follows:

1992-93	4,035,098

This represents a six per cent increase in real terms when adjusted for inflation and the floor area occupied. The increase is due to operational requirements, particularly in the Ministry's laboratories, and the introduction of information technology equipment to most offices over the past three years. We are, however, stepping up our energy efficiency measures with a view to achieving reductions in consumption by 1995-96.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in her Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Care is taken to ensure that the special adviser does not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. She is not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in her Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My special adviser is Dr. Elizabeth Cottrell. She advises me on all policy issues.

Milk Industry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent Britain's demand for milk and milk products is satisfied by domestic production; what are the main sources of imported milk products; to what extent the gap is affected by the extent of the Milk Marketing Board's promotion of the use of home-produced milk; and what effect she expects the Milk Marque to have on the shortfall between domestic production and demand.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom produces sufficient milk to meet its needs for liquid consumption and for protein products like skimmed milk powder. It is, however, only 85 per cent. self-sufficient in butterfat, so production is insufficient to meet the demand for cheese and butter. Imports of milk products into the United Kingdom come mainly from other EC countries. In 1992, 92 per cent. of our cheese imports, 231,693 tonnes, came from the EC, with the remainder imported mainly from New Zealand, 7,964 tonnes, Canada, 4,068 tonnes, and Australia, 2,500 tonnes. In the same year, 97 per cent. of our imports of yoghurt, buttermilk and whey originated in the Community. For butter, the position is rather different since a large proportion, 41 per cent., of our imports comes from New Zealand under a preferential access agreement which was concluded at the time of our accession to the EC. The remaining 59 per cent. of our butter imports come from the Community.

The level of the United Kingdom's self-sufficiency in milk has less to do with the promotional activities of the milk marketing boards than with the total amount of milk quota available to our producers. Our national production quota is insufficient to meet the total domestic demand for milk and milk products; the introduction of new milk marketing arrangements next year will not alter this position.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of whether the national interest and that of milk producers would be better served by the bulk of our milk being handled by processors who have a proven track record in the development of new products instead of by Milk Marque, the successor of the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales will have to have regard to all the circumstances when deciding whether to approve the Milk Marketing Board's reorganisation scheme. One of the main purposes of ending the milk marketing scheme is to allow producers to decide to whom and on what terms to sell their milk. I look forward to when they will be free to do so.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's working definition of the term "marketing"; and what connection Milk Marque will have with marketing.

Mr. Jack: Milk Marque's objects are set out in its constitution. They include

"the activities of marketing and preparation for market of milk produced by its Members on land occupied by them and used for agriculture".

It is for Milk Marque to decide how to pursue this object.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her policy on the concept of an interdependent partnership between milk producers and an established milk processor with a vested interest in generating demand for new milk products and satisfying it from British farms.

Mr. Jack: The Government welcome the establishment of new partnerships between producers and processors which are in accordance with our objectives of establishing a competitive market in raw milk.

Diseased Cattle

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will take urgent action to institute a system of full compensation at market price of cattle bought under the animal health regime of other EC countries which were found to have been diseased at the time of purchase.

Mr. Soames: The Department has no plans to extend the current compensation arrangements for cattle.

Fur Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the regulations concerning Arctic foxes kept on fur farms.

Mr. Soames: There is no legislation relating specifically to the keeping of Arctic foxes.

EC Surplus Foods

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the butter and beef EC surplus foods that have been distributed in each London borough in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Figures for the amounts of food distributed annually since 1988-89 in each London borough are not available.

Maize

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate she has as to the acreage of maize crops planted with EC subsidy, not harvested because there is allegedly no market; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The most recent Commission estimate is that some 3,635,000 hectares of maize were harvested in the Community in 1993. There is no information about the area of maize which has not been harvested, the reasons why it was not harvested or whether any area-based payments were made on such crops. Crops do not have to be harvested to qualify for such payments but they do have to be sown in line with locally recognised standards and maintained until at least the beginning of flowering in normal growth conditions.

Milk

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reasons underlay the change in instructions to the Milk Marketing Board concerning the butterfat base of transferred milk quota.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry's supplementary note on the butterfat base of converted milk quota reflects guidance issued in November by the European Commission which clarifies the application of the provisions in the EC regulations. We are bound by the EC regulations and have no discretion as regards their implementation.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the new rules regarding butterfat base will come into operation; and if they apply to applications already received by the Milk Marketing Board for which the market price has been agreed.

Mr. Jack: The Commission's clarification of the rules concerning the calculation of the butterfat base of direct sales quota converted into wholesale quota applies to all applications to convert quota since the beginning of the current quota year on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the effect of article 7 of Commission regulation 1546/86 on the allocation of milk quota to landlords who are not operating a holding.

Mr. Jack: Article 7 of Commission regulation (EEC) No. 1546/88, which was repealed in 1993 and replaced by Council regulation (EEC) No. 3950/92 and Commission regulation (EEC) No. 536/93, deals with the transfer of milk quota. Where an entire holding is transferred, the corresponding quota is transferred in full to the producer who takes over the holding. Where part or parts of a holding are transferred, the corresponding quota is distributed among the producers operating the holding in proportion to the areas used for milk production. Where the transfer takes place as a result of the termination of a tenancy, the producer taking over the holding might be the landlord. A holding is defined as all the production units operated by the producer within a member state of the Community.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the allocation of milk quota to landlords who are not operating a holding.

Mr. Jack: Milk quota is allocated to producers for use on land occupied by them. Landlords may hold quota only if they are in occupation of a holding.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under which article of the Dairy Produce Quota Regulations 1989 he instructs the president of the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors to appoint an arbitrator to act between a landlord, transferer and transferee.

Mr. Jack: The Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1989 now superseded by the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1993, required that where there was a transfer of part of a holding the apportionment of quota relating to that holding had to be notified to the Minister within two months. The transferer and transferee were also required to sign a statement agreeing on the apportionment of milk quota according to the areas used for milk production, and the transferer had to supply a consent or sole interest notice in respect of the entirety of the holding. Where these requirements were not fulfilled, the apportionment had to be determined by arbitration. Paragraph 1(3) of schedule 4 provided for the Minister to apply to the president of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors for the appointment of an arbitrator, if within two months of the transfer, no arbitrator had been appointed by the parties.

The parties to an arbitration would usually be the transferer and transferee. Landlords have an interest in any quota apportionment in respect of a holding owned wholly or partly by them because of the clear link established in the EC regulations between quota and land. If a landlord with an interest in the holding does not sign the consent notice then this would require the apportionment to be decided by arbitration.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given to the position of producers who have high butterfat producing breeds of cows in respect of the changes in the rules about the butterfat base of milk.

Mr. Jack: The EC regulations on the butterfat base for milk do not specifically provide for producers who have high butterfat producing breeds of cows, except where the producer's entire wholesale quota has been allocated from the national reserve and where production commenced after 1 April 1992. Producers in this position are required to provide proof each year that they maintain within their herd breeds of animals which justify a higher than average butterfat base.

Neptune Flood Warning System

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will place in the Library a map of the marker buoys located offshore which are financed by her Department as part of the Neptune flood warning system.

Mr. Jack: I am placing in the Library a map showing the locations of the tide gauges around the coast which provide information on sea levels to the national storm tide warning service, which is operated on the Ministry's behalf by the Meteorological Office.

Neptune is a local warning system of events which may lead to flooding on the west coast between Llandudno and the Solway Firth. It is operated by the National Rivers Authority and draws on information from tide gauges at Workington, Heysham, Fleetwood and Liverpool, as well as gale warnings from the Manchester weather centre and surge forecasts from the storm tide warning service. The National Rivers Authority has carried out a wave measuring experiment, using wave rider buoys, in Morecambe bay over the past 12 months with the aim of improving understanding of wave conditions for forecasting purposes.

Relocation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the costs and benefits of relocating parts of her Department's headquarters' work from the south-east, with particular reference to the financial implications of moving work from Guildford to York.

Mr. Jack: The overall costs of running our relocated operations in York will be significantly lower than a similar operation in the south-east. There are, in addition, distinct operational benefits in bringing together under one roof in York a number of related, but previously geographically separated, divisions, especially those with close working links with the new MAFF central science laboratory under construction at Sand Hutton, just outside York. The main costs of the move cover expenditure on moving staff and fitting out costs for the new building.

Agriculture Wages Board

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she now expects to complete her consideration of the response she has received to consultative document on the future of the Agriculture wages board.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I hope to be able to complete my initial consideration of the responses soon. It will then be necessary to consult other ministerial colleagues with an interest in the matter.

I hope that an announcement on the way forward can be made before Easter.

Herbs

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to restrict the availability of herbs and herbal ingredients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have no plans at present to restrict the availability of herbs and herbal ingredients used as foods.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all those organisations from which she has recently received representations calling for restrictions on the availability of herbs and herbal ingredients.

Mr. Soames: We have received no such representations.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans she has (a) to extend the current voluntary ban on comfrey and comfrey products to other herbs and herbal ingredients or (b) to introduce a compulsory ban on any such herb; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if the review of herbs from which medicinal licences have been withdrawn by the Department of Health but are still on sale as foods has now been completed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have no plans either to alter or to extend the action that we have already taken on comfrey. The review of other herbal substances by the independent expert committees that advise the Government on food safety issues has been completed—and the conclusion that there were no problems requiring action was announced in the September edition of the Food Safety Directorate bulletin.

Area Payments

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the administrative cost of operating the area payments system; and how many staff are involved in the procedures.

Mr. Jack: The arable area payments scheme is one of a number of schemes covered by the integrated administration and control system—IACS. It is not possible to give precise costs for administering each of the individual schemes within this joint system but the estimated United Kingdom cost for administering the arable area payments scheme for the 1993-94 financial year, including an appropriate share of the cost of IACS, is £7·2 million, involving some 365 man years.

These figures do not include certain initial development costs.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent on the payment of the new area allowances in the current financial year; what is the maximum individual sum paid to date; and what is the general purpose of the area payments.

Mr. Jack: Arable area payments made by the end of December 1993 totalled £692 million. This does not include the final instalment of the area payment for oilseeds, which is due to be made early in 1994.

Under the integrated administration and control system, a single application must be submitted in respect of all holdings farmed by the same individual or organisation and some applications cover a significant number of separate holdings; the maximum total payment to an individual IACS applicant to date has been just over £1¼ million.

Arable area payments were introduced as part of the 1992 package of measures to reform the common agriculture policy. They are intended to compensate farmers for significant reductions in EC support prices for cereals over the next three years and to replace earlier support systems for oilseeds and proteins.

Set-aside

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government are seeking to change the EU regulations which prevent the development of forestry on agricultural set-aside land.

Mr. Jack: The Government believe that use of set-aside land for woodland should be further encouraged. The United Kingdom has taken the lead in pressing for the EC rules to be changed to allow arable land withdrawn from production under EC forestry schemes to count as set-aside under the arable area payments scheme. My right hon. Friend the Minister achieved significant progress at the Agriculture Council last month, when the Commission was asked by the Council to carry out a study of the relationship between set-aside and arable land taken out of production for forestry or environmental purposes. We are pleased that the matter is at last to be given serious attention, and we shall continue to press for a satisfactory outcome.

Woodland planting on set-aside land is not entirely ruled out under the present rules of the arable area payments scheme, provided that the trees are not used for commercial purposes and that no EC-funded grant, other than set-aside, is paid.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies she is conducting into possible alternative uses of set-aside land.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom has taken the lead in the EC in seeking to enable set-aside to be used for longer term environmental purposes, by pressing for arable land taken out of production under forestry or agri-environment schemes to count as set-aside under the arable area payments scheme; the Commission has now been asked by the Council to study this. We will also be encouraging farmers to put their set-aside land to recreational use through the proposed countryside access scheme which we hope to launch later this year.

Set-aside land may also be used to grow crops for non-food use, such as oilseed rape, linseed, and short rotation coppice.

We are keen to encourage crops which have the potential for commercial viability. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and, in some cases, other Government Departments are funding research into industrial oilseeds, energy crops, fibre crops and an assessment of novel crops. MAFF, with other Government Departments, also funds joint research projects with industry through the LINK—crops for industrial use—programme.

Forestry, Cornwall

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all the plantations at present owned by the Forestry Commission in Cornwall, and those disposed of within the last 10 years giving, in each case, their acreage and the extent of public access, indicating which are included in the current disposals programme and setting out her plans to ensure no future erosion of rights of access.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission manages 3,290 hectares of woodland in Cornwall. The commission is preparing a list of the individual woods and I shall send a copy to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. The commission is compiling a list of the areas sold in 1993 and a copy will be placed in the Library when this is completed.

The Commission does not maintain detailed records of the extent of public access to individual woods.

The areas of forest land in Cornwall that the commission is currently offering for sale on the open market are as follows:

Name	Area (hectares)
Croft Pascoe	45
Hay Wood	54
Penance and Derrys	7
Port Elliot Estate	108
Prideaux	24
Wheal Par	5

Rights of way over commission land are unaffected by a change of ownership. In addition, arrangements for securing continued public access to former Forestry Commission woodlands after sale, by way of prior agreements entered into between the commission and local authorities, have been in place since October 1991. These arrangements are currently being reviewed.

Fish Diseases

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect EU directive 91/87 has had on the implementation of the Diseases of Fish Act 1983, with respect to fish farms in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The fish health directive 91/67/EEC came into force on 1 January 1993. It provides for measures, applicable throughout the Community, to safeguard zones of proven high fish health status within the context of the single market. Great Britain and Northern Ireland have secured such approved zone status in respect of the most serious fish diseases and accordingly we are able to restrict introductions of fish, particularly the salmonid species, from other parts of the Community on the basis of the disease risks which they might pose. We are also seeking additional guarantees in respect of trade in species susceptible to some of the less serious fish diseases.

We have thus carried forward in the EC context the United Kingdom's longstanding disease controls embodied in the Diseases of Fish Acts of 1937 and 1983, with the controls largely unchanged. The Community measures will be supplemented later this year by new arrangements which member states must apply in the event of an outbreak of serious fish diseases. Overall, we are confident that these measures, taken together, will afford sound protection to our farmed and wild fish stocks and provide United Kingdom producers with new trade opportunities.

Organic Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration she has given to the effect of her decision to concentrate support for organic farming on new entrants; what information she has as to the support given to organic agriculture in each other EU member state and on the competitive pressure placed on existing organic enterprises; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the proposed aid scheme which she has discussed with representatives of organic farmers. The decision to concentrate aid on those wishing to convert to organic farming represents the best value for money in terms of increasing the area of land farmed organically.

I shall write to the hon. Gentleman concerning aid in other member states.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(2) if she will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(3) if she will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not held centrally and collection of the information would be at disproportionate cost. Summary details of appointments made by my right hon. Friend, including details of remuneration, are contained in "Public Bodies", published annually by the Cabinet Office and available in the Library of the House.

Potatoes

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress she has made in her discussions with other members of the EU Council of Agricultural Ministers to achieve an effective, comprehensive and fully supportive potato marketing regime to replace the United Kingdom scheme.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 December at column 852.

Dover Sole

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are the recorded landings of Dover sole in area 4c from beam trawlers of 17 m and over in each year since 1983;

(2) what is the yearly total of recorded Dover sole fish landed from over 10 m and under 17 m boats in area 4c in each year since 1983.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is as follows:

Landings of Dover sole by United Kingdom vessels from ICES area IVc

Note:

All quantities are given in tonnes liveweight. Length bands given relate to registered, not overall, length because prior to 1989 vessel lengths were measured in terms of registered lengths only. No comparable data is available for 1983 and the final figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Arable Areas

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many holdings in each county of England have taken up the arable area payments scheme;

(2) how many hectares have been taken up under the arable area payments scheme in its first year of operation for (a) cereals, (b) oilseeds, (c) proteins, (d) linseed, (e) simplified scheme and (f) set aside in the county of Nottinghamshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: County-based figures will be published as soon as possible and I will place a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many landowners in England are receiving annual payments under the arable area payments scheme (a) in each £25,000 band up to £500,000 and (b) over £500,000; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This information can currently be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many holdings there are in each county of England in 1992 and 1993 growing (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds.

Mr. Jack: The following table gives the requested information for 1992. Data from the June 1993 agricultural and horticultural census are not yet available by county.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring is conducted of the arable area payments scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It is not Government policy to publish specific information about monitoring arrangements, as that could seriously hamper effective enforcement. However, a number of techniques are used to monitor compliance with the scheme, including detailed checks of area aid applications and field inspections.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Agriculture Council of 13 to 16 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 17 December, Official Report, columns 1071-72.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much will be spent in England in each year from 1993-94 to 1995-96 on (a) environmentally sensitive areas, identifying the amount allocated for the new access option, (b) new nitrate sensitive areas, (c) the moorland scheme, (d) the new habitat scheme, (e) the new countryside access scheme, (f) the organic acid scheme and (g) the total amount of money being spent on the agri-environment scheme in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Forecast expenditure on agri-environment payments, including new schemes planned for launch later this year, is shown in the following table:

	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
Environmentally Sensitive Areas	18·0	31·0	43·1
Nitrate Sensitive Areas	1·6	1·6	8·3
Moorland Scheme	—	—	1·6
Habitat Scheme	—	—	3·0
Countryside Access Scheme	—	—	4·5
Organic Scheme	—	0·8	1·5
Countryside Stewardship	7·5	9·3	9·8
TOTAL	27·1	42·7	71·8

There is a single budget for environmentally sensitive areas, which includes the new access option, and a single budget for nitrate sensitive areas, which includes both current and new areas.

Sheep Quota

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment she has made of whether all farmers will be able to obtain, complete and return the forms for sheep quota by 7 January following advice to do so by Reading regional service centre on 11 December; and what contingency plans she has to relax the deadline;

(2) why Reading regional service centre of her Department changed its advice to sheep farmers and stopped sending application forms for sheep quota automatically.

Mr. Jack: It is essential that producers applying to the reserve receive their payments under the sheep annual premium scheme as quickly as possible. For this reason, we decided that applications should be invited first from producers eligible to apply to categories 1 and 2 of the 1993 sheep reserve. For the same reason, and to keep the burden of paper to the minimum, the application form was not sent out automatically to all sheep producers. Not all producers were eligible to apply to these categories. All sheep producers received a letter explaining the situation clearly, and in detail. The deadline of 7 January was also set so that payments could commence quickly. It allowed adequate time for the completion of the application form which was kept as simple as possible. The reserve categories have been the subject of widespread consultation and discussion, so that most producers will have given detailed consideration to their eligibility well in advance of receiving the application form.

Livestock Imports

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to review the system governing livestock imports from eastern Europe; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: My right hon. Friend does not have any proposals to review the system governing imports of livestock from eastern Europe, which is set out in the Europe agreements that the EU has concluded with the six countries principally involved, and in other EU legislation. My right hon. Friend has, however, recently announced newly strengthened measures designed to help prevent the introduction of disease into Great Britain through imported animals generally. These measures include an increase in the number of routine checks carried out on all imported livestock at points of destination and, because of particular concerns arising from the import of foot and mouth disease sero-positive cattle from Eastern Europe in 1992, the blood testing of all cattle imported from Eastern Europe.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out the considerations underlying the recent cuts in funding for less-favoured areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Despite the reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowances over the last three years, overall levels of direct subsidies from all sources to hill farmers have increased, and total payments of direct subsidies in 1994 are expected to be at least £550 million. The decision to reduced the rates payable under the 1994 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme was taken as part of the autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. This showed that net farm incomes of hill farmers have risen by 33 per cent. in real terms during 1992-93 and are forecast to rise by a further 28 per cent. in the next year. A copy of the statistical tables which formed the basis of the review is in the Library of the House. The rates of grant available under the farm and conservation grant scheme 1989 have been reduced in the light of progress in reducing pollution incidents resulting from farm wastes and the development of other schemes addressing particular environmental concerns.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the average (a) single man's, (b) single woman's, (c) married man's and (d) married woman's personal income as chargeable for income tax from self-employment in the capacity as a hill farmer in the less-favoured areas of the United Kingdom for each year since 1979 in both nominal and real terms;

(2) what proportion of self employed male hill farmers in the less-favoured areas in the United Kingdom claimed the married man's tax allowance in the tax year prior to the change over to the independent method of assessing taxation and in the tax year for which the most recent figures are available;

(3) what is the average income from self-employment as assessed for tax for farmers in the less-favoured areas of the United Kingdom for each year since the 1981-82 tax year;

(4) what was the average personal income of a (a) single man, (b) single woman, (c) married man and (d) married woman hill farmer in the less-favoured areas of the United Kingdom as chargeable to income tax from all sources other than self-employment in farming for each year since 1979 in both nominal and real terms.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The Inland Revenue's survey of personal incomes provides information on the income as assessed for tax from a sample of persons with an income from agriculture. It is not, however, possible to analyse this data for farms of particular types or for farmers in the less-favoured areas. I regret, therefore, that the information requested is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what according to (a) the most up-to-date and comprehensive data she has available and (b) the farm business survey, was the average number of (1) beef cows and (2) ewes, carried on less-favoured areas livestock farms, by county and in England.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The following table provides information on the average number of beef cows and ewes on cattle and sheep farms, wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas in England from the agricultural census as at June 1992. As the farm business survey covers only farms which are considered to be full time commercial businesses, very small farms are excluded from the survey. The farm business survey records the average number of livestock on the holding throughout the year. The average numbers of beef cows and ewes on cattle and sheep—LFA—farms in England estimated from the farm business survey in 1992-93 were 30 and 456 respectively. This compares with averages as at June 1992 of 30 and 420 respectively for similar farms in the agricultural census. Results from the farm business survey are not available by county.

Administration

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure by her Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by her Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is her estimate for expenditure on administration by her Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: (i) The final outturn for the recurrent costs of running the Department in 1992-93 is £358 million.

(ii) The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £418 million. This reflects the reduction on the Department's gross running cost limit announced by the Minister on 1 November 1993.

(iii) The Department's planned running costs expenditure for 1994-95 is £407 million.

The GDP deflators required to calculate real terms figures are shown on page 121 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" (HC 31), copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to ensure the reorganisation scheme for milk marketing in England and Wales is successful, both in relation to the Agriculture Act 1993 and to relevant European Union legislation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Under the Agriculture Act 1993 it is for the Milk Marketing Board to decide what to propose in its reorganisation scheme. My right hon. Friends the Minister and the Secretary of State for Wales have responsibility for deciding whether to approve the reorganisation scheme in accordance with the terms of the Act. This requires them to have regard to all the circumstances. These include the compatibility of the board's proposals with European Community law.

Hill Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the subsidy and price support available to hill farming enterprises over the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how they have varied in value at constant prices in relation to (a) farm input costs and (b) retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 December 1993]: I estimate that the total direct subsidies paid on cattle and sheep in the less-favoured areas in 1994 will be about £550 million. The support available to individual hill farming enterprises will depend on the number of livestock on which subsidy is claimed as well as the rates of subsidy available. The figures in the following tables show the information requested for the direct livestock subsidies available to farmers. The subsidy rate are those available in the scheme years shown; different rules of eligibility apply and these may vary from year to year. Not all livestock will qualify for all schemes. Support is also available through intervention and other forms of market support, but it is not possible to apportion the effects of this to hill farmers.

Detailed information on 1991-92 net farm incomes for LFA livestock farms can be found in table 1.16 of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-92", a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House.

Forests, Honiton

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the Forestry Commission woods in the Honiton constituency.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 December 1993]: The Forestry Commission has no forest land on the market at present in my right hon. Friend's constituency.

Hill Farmers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hill farmers there are in England; what is the total amount of subsidy that has been paid to them in each of the last five years; and what are her forecasts for the amount she expects they will be paid in the next year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The system of farm classification distinguishes farms in the less-favoured areas, it does not distinguish hill farms. Analysis of the returns for the June 1992 census for England shows that there were 11,840 cattle and sheep farms wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas. Statistics are not collected on the total amount of subsidy paid to each type of farm. It is, however, estimated that the total amount paid on cattle and sheep in the less-favoured areas in the United Kingdom under the various livestock subsidy schemes will be about £550 million in 1994.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 369, if she will set out each reason why she cannot estimate the precise cost to United Kingdom consumers of the CAP; and what is the best approximate figure available to her for the cost (a) to the Exchequer and (b) to an average family in terms of food prices.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the cost of the CAP to United Kingdom consumers, and of the savings that could be secured if current policies were ended, are possible only be making many assumptions. Important judgments are necessary about the current levels of world prices—no simple matter given the wide variations in quotations and substantial fluctuations from year to year—and the changes in these prices if present policies were abandoned. The latter depend on how producers and consumers throughout the world might respond to the new circumstances and on the impact on such factors as exchange rates.

Estimates made by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development—OECD—using a particular set of assumptions, imply that the transfers from European Community consumers in 1992 resulting from agricultural policies in European Community as a whole were equivalent to £11 per week for a family of four. This is one estimate of the extent to which the CAP raises the cost of food and agricultural products compared to existing world prices. The estimate takes no account of the effect that removal of farm support would have on world prices, and other variables, and thus gives no indication of the extent to which European consumers might be better off if current policies were removed. OECD does not publish a separate estimate for the United Kingdom.

The Exchequer cost of CAP expenditure in the United Kingdom in the current financial year is estimated at £2,727 million. In addition, the United Kingdom also contributes to the cost of the CAP in other member states. However, the United Kingdom contributes to the EC budget as a whole, and this is reduced by the Fontainebleau abatement which cannot be attributed to particular sectors of the EC budget.

Research and Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the spending on research and development in each of the last five years given in 1992-93 prices in her Department.

Mr. Jack: MAFF's expenditure on agriculture, horticulture, fisheries and food R and D, in cash and real terms, is:

Year	Cash £ million	Real terms[1] £ million
1988-89	115·0	146·8
1989-90	112·2	133·9
1990-91	119·1	131·5
1991-92	121·5	126·2
1992-93	134·4	134·4

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Costs Awards

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, column 637, what is the average interval between the award of (a) costs and (b) expedited costs, including tax costs, and their payment in (i) the inner London criminal court, (ii) outer London courts and (iii) other courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No information is available about the average interval between the award and payment of costs in civil or criminal proceedings. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, the following information on the taxing and payment of costs in criminal proceedings may be helpful:

The Crown Court is responsible for the payment of defence costs from the legal aid fund in respect of proceedings in that court if the defendant has been granted a legal aid certificate, or from central funds if a privately represented defendant is acquitted on any count in the indictment and the judge orders the award of a defendant's costs order. The Legal Aid Board is responsible for legal aid costs incurred in respect of magistrates courts proceedings.

Where costs are to be paid from the legal aid fund or central funds by the Crown Court, legal representatives are required to submit their claims to the court within three months of the conclusion of proceedings, although that period may be extended upon reasonable request. An officer of the Crown Court is then required to consider the claim and allow such sums as will provide reasonable remuneration in respect of work reasonably done.

Targets have been set to ensure payments are made within a reasonable time. Where a practitioner has claimed a standard fee, the target is for payment within five working days where the claim is lodged on the day that the case is concluded, and within 10 working days where it is not. For non-standard fees, where counsel's brief fee or the solicitor's total costs are less than £4,000, there is a target of no more than 30 per cent. of claims to be outstanding after four weeks from date of receipt. If counsel's brief fee or the solicitor's total costs are in excess of £4,000, these claims are considered by the central taxing teams which were established in March 1991 to give a consistent approach to the determination of large claims from the legal aid fund or central funds. The targets set for these claims are that 75 per cent. of claims should be determined within three months of becoming ready to tax—that is to say, when all related claims have been lodged—and that all claims should be determined within six months of becoming ready to tax.

The tables provide the most recent figures for the performance against these targets:

Mr. Meale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A complete answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the schedule includes details readily to hand of members of the House of Lords who have been appointed by the Lord Chancellor since 1979 to non-departmental public bodies for which he has ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A complete answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Readily available records on the appointments made by the Lord Chancellor since 1979 to non-departmental public bodies for which he has ministerial responsibility do not indicate that any were former British representative members in the European Parliament.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A complete answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, details readily to hand of hon. Members who have been appointed by the Lord Chancellor since 1979 to non-departmental public bodies for which he has ministerial responsibility, are as follows:

the Right Hon. the Lord Archer of Sandwell, QC who was a Member of the House of Commons, as Peter Archer, 1974-1992. He was appointed as chairman of the Council on Tribunals at a retainer of £28,248. The appointment runs from 1 November 1992 to 31 October 1995.

In addition, the following existing hon. Members are members of the Advisory Council on Public Records:

Alexander Charles Carlile QC—13 March 1989 to 31 December 1994;

David Sumberg—23 November 1992 to 31 December 1995.

Appointments to the Advisory Council on Public Records do not attract a fee.

This list is not complete as in many cases only current or recently finished appointments have been included and no information on rule committees, tribunals, advisory committees on justices of the peace in England—excluding the Duchy of Lancaster—and Wales, and on advisory committees on general commissioners of income tax in England and Wales has been included. A full answer could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC Radio

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has concerning the cost per listener hour of the output of each of the British Broadcasting Corporation's national radio stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the BBC that the cost per listener hour for each BBC network radio station, in 1992-93, was as follows:

	pence
Radio 1	0·37
Radio 2	0·81
Radio 3	7·26
Radio 4	1·51
Radio 5	4·81

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has concerning the total number of listeners attracted per week by each of the national radio stations operated by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the BBC that, for the period 21 June to 19 September 1993, the estimated weekly audience reach for each BBC network radio station was as follows:

	million
Radio 1	16
Radio 2	9
Radio 3	3
Radio 4	8
Radio 5	4

Note: The audience reach figures for each station are based on the total number of listeners tuning in for at least 15 minutes per week.

Film Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will commission a report on (a) the levy, (b) the investment incentive, and (c) other measures which have been adopted by each member country of the European Community in seeking to encourage investment in its film production industry with a view to making a statement to the House indicating which of those measures might be appropriate for adoption in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: Film support measures in other member states are a matter for the authorities of those states to determine according to their own policies and circumstances. I have no plans to adopt measures designed to meet objectives which we do not share. Last year, I held a series of 10 consultative meetings with all sectors of the United Kingdom film industry to review the state of the industry and hear their ideas about possible further action to raise the level of investment in film production. I am carefully considering all the views put to me during the round of meetings and subsequently, and I shall announce the Government's conclusions as soon as practicable.

London Orchestras

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has about the cost of the Hoffman inquiry into the funding of London's orchestras.

Mr. Brooke: The Hoffman inquiry was commissioned by the Arts Council as part of its review of its support for the London orchestras. I understand that the Council's direct costs in connection with the inquiry were in the region of £5,000, arising mainly from the travel and subsistence costs of the members of the Hoffman committee. I have no details of costs incurred by other parties involved in the review.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Brooke: Care is taken to ensure that my special adviser does not have access to the kind of information likely to create suspicion of impropriety. He is not involved in evaluating tenders or letting contracts.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the name and job description of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each advisor is responsible.

Mr. Brooke: My special advisor is Dominic Loehnis. His job is to provide me with advice of a political nature which assists me in my role as a Minister in Her Majesty's Government, advice which it would not be proper to expect from those civil servants who work in my Department.

Civil Servants

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many civil servants are employed at the Department of National Heritage to deal with sport issues; and what is the total annual cost of their salaries.

Mr. Brooke: There are 23 posts in the Department's sport and recreation division, including secretarial and typing support—two posts. The paybill budget for 1993-94 amounts to £641,350.

Administration Expenditure

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure by his Department on administration in 1992-93; what is the estimated outturn for expenditure by his Department on administration for 1993-94 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms in 1992-93 prices; and what is his estimate for expenditure on administration by his Department for 1994-95 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1992-93 prices.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The information is as follows:

(i) The final outturn for the current costs of running my Department, including the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Royal Parks Agency, in 1992-93 is £34·871 million.

(ii) The estimated outturn for 1993-94 is £45·404 million—£43·975 million in 1992-93 prices.

(iii) My Department's planned running costs expenditure figure for 1994-95 is not yet available. The figure will be published in the unified Budget supplement to the Autumn Statement and my Department's annual report due in February/March.

EDUCATION

Student Grants

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will review the operations of the discretionary grant system as it affects students of the performing arts.

Mr. Boswell: The responsibility for making discretionary awards rests with local education authorities. The early results of a national survey led by the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation and the Sir John Cass' Foundation show total numbers of discretionary awards bestowed and total local education authority spending on discretionary awards above the levels of three years ago. My right hon. Friend awaits with interest the full results of the survey, which are expected in March.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the percentage of all dependent students receiving a full maintenance grant, and the percentage of those receiving no maintenance grant, assuming residual parental income is calculated without the benefit of a covenant agreement, for each of the academic years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; if he will calculate the percentage change across this period; and if he will make a statement on the causes of the changes over that period.

Mr. Boswell: In determining the residual parental income under the regulations, any deductions made for income tax purposes in respect of payments made under covenant are disregarded.

Information on the percentage of dependent students receiving a full maintenance grant under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations and those receiving nil maintenance are given.

Percentage of dependent students receiving full and nil maintenance in England and Wales

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91[1]	Percentage point change 1988-89 to 1990-91
Full maintenance	29·1	27·4	27·1	−2·0
Nil maintenance	28·2	29·1	29·0	0·8

[1] Calculated from subset of LEAs able to provide data.

The changing distribution reflects the effects of a range of, sometimes conflicting, factors including the economic climate over the period and the changing socio-economic composition of the parents of mandatory award holders.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

Mr. Boswell: Information is given relating to members of the House of Lords and former hon. Members appointed to our public bodies since 1988.

No current United Kingdom Member of the European Parliament has been appointed to any of our public bodies.

Information concerning membership of our public bodies dating back to 1979 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools have been approved so far in the secondary sector.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, 559 secondary schools have been approved for self-governing—grant-maintained—status.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils are now being taught in grant-maintained schools; and what is the expected number by August 1994.

Mr. Robin Squire: More than half a million pupils are currently being educated in over 800 self-governing—grant-maintained—schools.

Over 160 more schools have already been approved to become self-governing later this year or have applications in the pipeline, and there is continuing demand for parental ballots on the question of self-governing status. The number of pupils in self-governing schools will therefore continue to grow. The rate of growth will depend on the views of parents in ballots, and on the merits of the applications submitted to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) the political control and (b) the number of grant-maintained schools in each local education authority.

LD = Liberal Democrat
NOC = No overall control

Notes:

1. No Overall Control. Such councils are not controlled by any party or group of parties.
2. Where several parties are shown—Lab/LD/Ind—the authority is being run by a joint administration of some sort. This does not mean that there will necessarily have been a formal pact. In several cases the joint administration will be as a result of an informal understanding of some kind.

Language Teaching (Primary Schools)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he has given to making funding available to primary schools for extra language teaching, in the light of the reductions in section 11 funding for these schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local education authorities—LEAs—at present receive an additional allowance in their standard spending assessment—SSA—to meet the educational needs of children with origins outside predominantly English-speaking countries. SSAs are not prescriptive and LEAs are responsible for funding primary schools according to their own priorities between and within services. When undertaking the recent review of education SSAs for the 1994-95 financial year, we took account of the reduction in the section 11 grant rate.

University Applicants

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the reasons for the change in the percentage of applicants to the Universities Central Council on Admissions from social class V between 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Boswell: UCCA has collected these details from the academic year 1989-90 onwards. The percentage of applicants to UCCA from social class V has increased slightly since then from 1·2 per cent. in 1989 to 1·7 per cent. in 1992. A number of factors will have contributed to this change. Data collected by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys suggest the proportion of the total young population in social classes IV and V declined over this period.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish figures for the social class of 1992 university applicants on the same basis as has been published in UCCA's statistics in previous years.

Mr. Boswell: Comparable data on the social class of applicants have been published by UCCA in its annual statistical supplement for more than the last 10 years, the latest for 1992. Students applying to the former polytechnics and colleges which are members of PCAS —Polytechnics central admissions systems—have also been asked, since 1991, to provide information on their social background on the same basis as UCCA applicants. The new joint admissions agency, UCAS—Universities and Colleges Admissions Service—will continue to collect and publish information on the social background of higher education applicants.

Student Incomes

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the percentage income of a university degree/course student, whose parental contribution is assessed as nil, derived from grants and loans for each year from 1988; and what is his forecast for the next three years.

Mr. Boswell: Information is not available in the form requested. No data are collected centrally that identify the percentage of total income which a student whose parental income is assessed as nil derives from grant and student loan. The hon. Member may find it helpful to refer to the student income and expenditure survey published on 16 December 1993, a copy of which is in the Library. The table gives the maximum income available to a student from the main rates of grant and loan.

Academic year	Total £
1988-89	2,050
1989-90	2,155
1990-91	2,685
1991-92	2,845
1992-93	2,980
1993-94	3,065
1994-95	3,190

No forecast is available for 1995-96 or 1996-97.

Note to table

The table assumes that the student is studying outside London and living away from his parents. From the academic year 1990-91 when student loans were introduced, the income from grant and student loan will depend on whether the student applies for a loan and, if eligible, on how much of the loan he takes up. The grant and loan rates for 1994-95 are subject to Parliamentary approval of the relevant regulations.

Further Education Colleges

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on changes in (a) the number of senior non-teaching posts in further education colleges and (b) salaries of principals and senior staff, so designated by the instruments and articles of government in further education colleges in each of the last five years; and whether such information will be collected in future as a prerequisite for securing funding from the Further Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not collect information on numbers of staff in non-teaching posts, except where those posts are filled by staff employed on academic-research pay scales. Average salaries of principals of further education colleges in England in each of the four years up to 1991, the latest year for which figures are available, are shown in the table. Comparable figures for vice-principals and other heads of departments for years up to 1990 are also given; similar information for these groups is not available for 1991 because these posts were transferred to a new "Management spine" from April 1990.

	1988	1989	1990	1991

Vice-Principals	24,750	26,400	28,810	—
Other Heads of Department	21,800	23,030	24,980	—

Under the financial memorandum between the Further Education Funding Council and institutions in the new further education sector, which sets out terms and conditions for the payment of grant, institutions will be required to disclose in the notes to their accounts the salaries of all of their senior posts holders.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on the number of students in further education colleges undertaking courses in construction, motor vehicle maintenance and engineering in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is shown in the table.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the capital allocation made to local education authorities for 1994-95 together with the bid made in each case; and if he will give each allocation as a percentage of the relevant bid.

Mr. Forth: The table gives details of allocations to local education authorities of annual capital guidelines for schools.

Public Bodies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in respect of how many boards, authorities, committees, and other public bodies he is responsible, in whole or in part, for appointments; what is the total number of such appointments; and what is the total public spending by such boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies.

Mr. Boswell: The information required may be found in "Public Bodies 1993" published last month by the Cabinet Office. The information given applies to those bodies not included in that report.

Low Achievers

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure that the Further Education Funding Council encourages schools and colleges to do more for low achievers on training courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The new funding methodology being developed by the Further Education Funding Council will help low achievers by requiring colleges to reach agreement with individual students on their lerning needs, their learning programmes and their goals. This will provide an incentive to colleges to ensure that they match students to programmes as effectively as possible. In addition, the funding methodology recognises that the cost of providing suitable courses for low achievers in colleges requires additional support. The Further Education Funding Council's funding responsibilities do not cover schools.

Training Targets

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to ensure that his Department is fully committed to the national education and training targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: As my right hon. Friend made clear in the House on 26 November 1993, Official Report, columns 692-759, the national education and training targets have the full commitment of the Department. The Department's action plan on the targets published in March 1993 sets out a four-fold strategy towards the achievement of the targets, which is being actively pursued: publicising and promoting the targets among education institutions at all levels; co-operating with others in developing necessary data sources for monitoring purposes; monitoring policies and, as appropriate, developing new ones to facilitate progress towards the targets; and developing human resources, in particular aiming to gain maximum benefit from the Investors in People standard. In addition, it is a requirement in the Department that every new policy proposal must demonstrate its contribution to the achievement of the targets.

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure that the Further Education Funding Council favours those colleges which plan vocational and part-time courses in relation to national education and training targets.

Mr. Boswell: The new funding methodology being developed by the Further Education Funding Council will provide incentives to colleges to assist more students, including students taking vocational and part-time courses, to achieve qualifications contributing to the national education and training targets.

Teaching Hours

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the 12 schools with (a) the longest and (b) the shortest teaching hours per week and the hours at which teaching takes place in each school.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend is not satisfied with the reliability of the figures provided by the small number of schools which have reported hours of lesson time per week at the extremes of the range. I have taken steps to improve the accuracy of the return in future.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Offices (Heating Bills)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list by location the annual fuel heating bills for each of his Department's offices for the last four years, and for this year to date.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The main source of heating for 10 Downing street is the Whitehall district heating scheme—WDHS. The WDHS charges for 10 Downing street are based on a percentage of the overall cost and, including both space and water heating, for each of the last four years were as follows:

1990-91	3,983
1991-92	3,782
1992-93	3,700

For the current year heat meters have been installed and charges have yet to be levied.

Civil Servants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants in the Cabinet Office, and of what grade, are currently working on constitutional matters.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

None works exclusively on constitutional issues although much of the work of the Cabinet Office requires an understanding of constitutional matters.

Michael John Smith

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will refer the case of Michael John Smith to the Security Commission.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

In accordance with the established procedures in such matters, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has consulted the chairman of the Security Commission and the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) on this case and has decided to refer it to the Security Commission with the following terms of reference:

"To investigate the circumstances in which breaches of security have or may have occurred arising out of the case of Micheal John Smith, who was convicted on 18 November 1993 of offences under section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1911; and to advise in the light of that investigation whether any change in security arrangements is necessary or desirable."

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 11 January.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is travelling back from the NATO summit in Brussels.

Genetic Testing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements Her Majesty's Government are making to respond to the report under the chairmanship of Professor Dame June Lloyd of the Nuffield council of bioethics relating to genetic testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government welcome this authoritative and timely report.

We will consider the conclusions and recommendations of the report and study the reaction of public and professional interests before deciding whether action by the Government is needed.

Ministers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about ministerial responsibility and the accountability of Ministers for decisions taken by the Department.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Guidance on ministerial responsibility and accountability is provided at paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each Minister who has left his Administration, with the reason for their departure in each case.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The names of resigning Ministers, and the reasons for their resigning, have been announced on each occasion.

Documents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to advise all Ministers that marginal notes on documents circulated between themselves or departmental officials always are made directly on to the documents and not on detachable notes.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has no plans to issue such advice.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received in the form of coupons from the advertisement placed by the citizens of Hiroshima, Japan, in The Times of 20 December, setting out opposition to the THORP reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has received numerous representations.

EC Directives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) of 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 959, how the list of 17 EC directives which the European Council agreed should be repealed or withdrawn has been made available to the general public.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission's report on subsidiarity, which includes the annex to which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister referred in his answer of 17 December to my hon. Friend, the Member for Southend, East, has been published by the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. As is the practice for all official Community plublications, it is available to the general public through HMSO.

Police and Magistrates

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what amount of new money is proposed to support the reformed (a) magistrates courts system and (b) the police authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The costs of establishing the new administrative structure for the magistrates courts service will depend on local management decisions, but during the one to two year implementation period costs in the region of £5 million a year may be incurred. The Government have reflected the additional costs of the reforms in determining future grant provision for the service.

As regards the police, the overall effect of the changes in the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill on ongoing expenditure from the Consolidated Fund and by local government will be broadly neutral. It is expected that additional expenditure by police forces on financial and personnel management will be offset by increases in efficiency.

Some start-up costs are expected. These will arise from a period of parallel operation by the current police authorities and their successors to be established by the Bill. The new authorities will incur some costs for their own purposes and some for the purposes of the police force for whose maintenance they will become responsible from April 1995. The force may need to recruit and train new staff in areas such as personnel or finance or to purchase computer hardware. Taken together, the start-up costs of the reforms for police authorities and police forces are not expected to exceed £21 million. They will be met by central Government grant.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many press officers his Office has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 17 December 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

Detailed figures were not recorded separately prior to 1987-88. From then onwards the complement remained at six, until 1 April 1992, when it was increased to seven to enable the press office to continue to respond effectively to the growing number of press inquiries.

SCOTLAND

Enterprise Directors

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many directors of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are (i) male and (ii) female; how many are from ethnic minority backgrounds; how many directors are from the private sector and which industrial sectors they come from; how many non-private sector directors are from (a) local authorities, (b) local education authorities, (c) other educational organisations, (d) trade unions, (e) voluntary organisations, (f) ethnic minority organisations, (g) employers associations and (h) others.

Mr. Stewart: Directors of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are senior executives, directly responsible to the chief executives of the enterprise bodies.

At board level there are in total 23 members of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, of whom 19 are male and four are female. No information is collected on their ethnic origin.

The information requested on numbers of board members from the private and public sectors, set out in the table, relates to the principal activity of the member concerned. Many of Scottish Enterprise's and Highlands and Islands Enterprise's board members are currently active in more than one of these areas.

Health Board Staff

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider giving advice to health boards concerning the re-employment on the same salary of staff who have been sacked by the health boards but who are threatening legal action.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has, at present, no plans to issue such advice.

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital wards were closed at weekends in (a) 1979, (b) 1984, (c) 1989 and (d) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to establish ratios of qualified nurses to patient numbers in all branches of in-patient hospital provision.

Mr. Stewart: No. All patients should be carefully assessed on admission to hospital and their combined needs for care and treatment will determine the number of qualified nursing staff required.

Lung Cancer

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women have died of lung cancer in each year since 1975; and how much he plans to spend on publicising these figures.

Mr. Stewart: The information is set out in the table:

Year	Numbers
1976	806
1977	890
1978	1,017
1979	1,010
1980	990
1981	1,117
1982	1,199
1983	1,187
1984	1,272
1985	1,336
1986	1,284
1987	1,377
1988	1,372
1989	1,426
1990	1,453
1992	1,547

The figures are published in the annual report of the Registrar General for Scotland. The policy statement "Scotland's Health: A Challenge to Us All" published in 1992 drew specific attention to the fact that Scottish women have the highest mortality rate from lung cancer in the developed world and this has influenced our policies on smoking and targets for reduction of cancer mortality.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much will be spent in Scotland in each year from 1993-94 to 1995-96 on (a) environmentally sensitive areas, identifying the amount allocated for the new access option, (b) new nitrate sensitive areas, (c) the moorland scheme, (d) the organic aid scheme and (e) the total amount of money being spent on the agri-environment scheme in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The forecast outturn expenditure on environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland for 1993-94 is £1·5 million. Subject to approval by Parliament and the EC Commission, the Government propose to introduce a heather moorland scheme, an organic aid scheme, a habitat scheme and a set-aside access scheme, which, together with the environmentally sensitive area scheme, will comprise the agri-environment programme for Scotland. There are no nitrate sensitive areas currently designated or proposed in Scotland. Planned expenditure on the Scottish agri-environment programme as a whole is expected to be in the region of £7 million for 1994-95 and £11 million for 1995-96.

Land Use

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many holdings there are in each region of Scotland in 1992 and 1993 growing (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds;

(2) how many hectares were taken up in each region of Scotland in 1992 and 1993 by (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) linseed, (d) sugar beet, (e) horticultural produce and (f) oilseeds.

Sir Hector Monro: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many holdings in each region of Scotland have taken up the arable area payments scheme.

Sir Hector Monro: The number of applications in Scotland under the arable area payments scheme in 1993 was as follows:

	Number
Less-favoured area (LFA)	3,957

Combined claimes	603

Combined claims are those which include both LFA and non-LFA land.

NHS Common Services Agency

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been made redundant in the past year in the building division of the national health service Common Services Agency, and for what reason; and if the work formerly done by it will now be carried out by (a) direct labour or (b) private contractors.

Mr. Stewart: Thirty staff have been made redundant in the past year. It was necessary to restructure the organisation to reflect increased efficiency and change in the workload.

Building Division is fee earning and has to compete with private firms for its share of the advisory, design and consultancy work available at this time in relation to NHS building projects. Private firms have also had to make redundancies where they have not won contracts.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest in Scotland have been damaged or destroyed in each year since 1982; whether each of these sites (a) was lost completely, (b) was partially lost, (c) suffered long term damage or (d) suffered short term damage; whether the damage or destruction in each case was due to (i) agriculture, (ii) forestry, (iii) poor management, (iv) pollution, (v) third party activities, (vi) developments controlled through the planning system, (vii) road building or (viii) other activities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of damage to sites of special scientific interest in Scotland are published in the annual reports of the former Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on management agreements in Scotland under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for sites of special scientific interest in each year since the Act came into force; if for each year he will give the number of agreements, the hectarages involved, and what the threats of damage were; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of the annual expenditure on management agreements in Scotland and the area involved are published in the annual reports of the former Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest in Scotland have been denotified in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The number of sites of special scientific interest which have been denotified in Scotland is published in the annual reports of the former Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions when his powers of compulsory purchase of land under section 17 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 have been used in Scotland in each year since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Such powers of compulsory purchase are not available to my right hon. Friend; they are exercisable by Scottish Natural Heritage, previously the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council, but only with my right hon. Friend's authorisation. No use of these powers has been made.

Management Agreements

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of management agreements that have been entered into under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Scotland where payments have been in each band of £10,000 up to £60,000 or £60,000 and over; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Agreements may involve either annual or capital payments. An analysis of the information by both categories is set out in the following table.

Range of costs	Type of cost

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the investigation into the dismissal of Mr. Laurence Peterken as general manager of Greater Glasgow health board when it is published; and if he will list within the report those consulted in the course of the investigation.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend announced in the House on 8 December that the report would be published in due course.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of Mr. W. S. Fyfe's chairmanship of Greater Glasgow health board before the dismissal of Mr. Laurence Peterken; and what action he took.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Fyfe brought to the chairmanship of Greater Glasgow health board in April 1993 the qualities of leadership he had displayed earlier over 12 years as chairman of Ayrshire and Arran health board. His actions in dismissing Mr. Peterken, however, led the non-executive members of the board to lose confidence in him.

Common Services Agency

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date it was decided that the operation of the Common Services Agency needed review; and whether a list of external management consultants was drawn up at any stage in the process with a view to inviting them to tender for this work.

Mr. Stewart: The chief executive decided that a review of the Common Services Agency was necessary soon after his appointment on 1 September. No list of external management consultants was drawn up with a view to inviting them to tender for this work.

EC THERMIE Programme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish applicants there have been for the EC THERMIE programme; how many of these applications were successful; what level of funds were awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 December 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The THERMIE programme is administered by the Directorate General of Energy of the European Commission who keeps records of the number of applications from the United Kingdom, but only as a whole. Up to and including the 1993 round, there have been a total of 281 applications from the United Kingdom, of which 88 were successful. Although information on the number of Scottish applicants is not available, the Commission has advised my Department that 19 THERMIE projects located in Scotland have been approved and awarded a total of £11·46 million.

WALES

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many landowners in Wales are receiving annual payments under the arable area payments scheme (a) in each band of £25,000 up to £500,000 and (b) over £500,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is not possible to differentiate between landowners and tenants who claim aid. The number of claimants receiving payment is:

1. £25,000-£49,000: 10
2. £50,000 and above: none

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(3) if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Overgrazing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales before making hill livestock compensatory allowance payments, what steps are taken by the Welsh Agriculture Department to ascertain whether overgrazing is causing adverse effects on the growth, quality or species composition of vegetation.

Mr. Redwood: Between a quarter and one third of livestock subsidy claimants are visited each year by Welsh Office field staff who are trained to look out for evidence of overgrazing either from the sward or the general condition of the animals. Any complaints from individuals or bodies about possible overgrazing will be investigated by these field staff. The rules of the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme contain stocking and financial limits per hectare which also militate against overgrazing.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in persuading the European Union to incorporate within the sheep annual premium scheme a requirement that payments should be withheld where overgrazing is causing adverse effects on the growth, quality or species composition of vegetation.

Mr. Redwood: The Council of Ministers agreed in December a regulation which provides that member states may apply to the annual ewe premium environmental protection measures appropriate to their particular situation.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since the introduction of a definition of overgrazing in the Hill Livestock (Compensatory Allowances) Regulations 1992, hill livestock compensatory allowances payments have been withheld because of adverse effects on the growth, quality or species composition of vegetation.

Mr. Redwood: Claimants for the hill livestock compensatory allowances are warned that if the land on which the stock is kept is found to be overgrazed the payment will be reduced. There have been no claims so far where this has been necessary. There are in the scheme regulations additional stocking rate safeguards which discourage overgrazing and these are applied quite frequently.

National House Building Council

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action his office has taken with regard to complaints about the performance of the National House Building Council following correspondence with Mr. C. Gavin of 15 Palace close, Flint, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will institute a review into the operation of the complaints procedure with regard to the National House Building Council in Wales;

(3) if he will carry out an independent assessment of whether properties in Palace close, Flint, comply with Schedule 1 Part B of the Fire Building Regulations 1985; and if he will reconsider the approval given by the Inspector authorised by the National House Building Council to that effect.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has no powers to intervene in individual cases involving approved inspectors. However, since Mr. Gavin first wrote in February 1992 my officials have made inquiries of the National House Building Council on a number of occasions.

Private Beds

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private pay beds there are in each health authority in Wales; and how many there were in each year since 1986.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

Private pay beds in Welsh health authorities

[2] Figure does not include pay beds in NHS Trusts.
[3] To be used solely for emergency admissions and only when the basic number of beds is already occupied.

Unemployment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the unemployment levels in each travel-to-work area in Wales; and what are the top 10 areas for people continuously unemployed for periods of (a) six months and (b) 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: The unemployment data requested are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on line by the staff of the Library of the House.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the advertisement in the "Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities" in relation to the property management services contract on offer for the marketing and negotiation of disposals of approximately £75 million of industrial property assets of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. Public bodies such as the agency are required to advertise in the Official Journal of the European Communities for contracts over a certain threshold—currently £149,728. The sale of industrial property forms part of the agency's established and continuing strategy of disposals to the private sector thereby providing a welcome injection of private finance for reinvestment to the Welsh economy and reducing the burden to the taxpayer.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the Welsh Development Agency is required to notify his Department over the engagement of lawyers.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he was informed of the plan by the Welsh Development Agency to offer for sale a large number of factories; and what formal arrangements exist for the notification by executive agencies in Wales wanting to sell off their assets.

Mr. Redwood: The sale of industrial property forms part of the agency's established and continuing strategy of disposals to the private sector; it provides a welcome cash injection for reinvestment in the Welsh economy. I have told Parliament of the need for a mixture of grant and asset sales to pay for new asset creation.

SSSIs

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest in Wales have been damaged or destroyed in each year since 1982; whether each of these sites (a) was lost completely, (b) was partially lost, (c) suffered long-term damage or (d) suffered short term damage; whether the damage or destruction in each case was due to (i) agriculture, (ii) forestry, (iii) poor management, (iv) pollution, (v) third party activities, (vi) developments controlled through the planning system, (vii) road building or (viii) other activities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Prior to the establishment of the Countryside Council for Wales in April 1991 the Nature Conservancy Council gave details in its annual report of all loss and damage to SSSI in Great Britain although not in the detail requested. Separate details for Wales are not available for this period. Since 1991 similar information has been included in the Countryside Council's annual reports. Copies of the reports are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest in Wales have been denotified in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Between 1982 and April 1991 the Nature Conservancy Council approved 34 SSSI for denotification, although the procedure for two of them concluded after the Countryside Council for Wales was established. The Countryside Council has not approved any for denotification. The details are as follows:

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of management agreements that have been entered into under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales where payments have been in each band of £10,000 up to £60,000 or £60,000 and over; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much has been spent on management agreements in Wales under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for sites of special scientific interest in each year since the Act came into force; if for each year he will give the number of agreements, the hectarages involved, and what the threats of damage were; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Management agreements are negotiated with owners and occupiers of SSSI under the terms of the Countryside Act 1968. Information in the format requested is not available centrally.

However, prior to the establishment of the Countryside Council for Wales in April 1991 the Nature Conservancy Council gave details in its annual reports of all management agreements in Wales. Since then the Countryside Council has continued to report such information in its annual reports. Copies of the reports are in the Library of the House.

Superannuation Funds

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which authority will administer the superannuation funds currently managed by the county councils in the event of the reorganisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I will announce my decision as to which authorities will administer superannuation funds in due course.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement on the reorganisation scheme submitted by the milk marketing board in Wales under the provisions of the Agriculture Act 1993.

Mr. Redwood: When Ministers have finished studying it.

Superannuation Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 853, if he will estimate the cost of superannuations transferred to his Department's running cost budget in the present financial year; from which vote they were transferred; and what was the estimated cost under that vote in 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: The Department's running cost budget for superannuation is £5·4 million in 1993-94. These costs were previously met from class XVIII, vote 4 HM Treasury: civil superannuation. The estimated cost under that vote in 1992-93 was £6·1 million.

Public Appointments

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that all appointments to non-departmental public bodies in Wales will be made from individuals resident in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: No, I wish to appoint the best people for the job, irrespective of where they live.

Health Authority Spending

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the forecast spending for each health authority in Wales for each of the last five years; and what was the actual expenditure.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The following table—table 1—gives the total final cash allocations, as at 31 March of each financial year.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions when his powers of compulsory purchase of land under section 17 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 have been used in Wales in each year since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Hedgerows

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many agreements have been made, how much has been spent and how many kilometres of hedgerow were restored under the hedgerow renovation scheme by his Department in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 in each county in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information which is available only on a regional basis is as follows:

		December 1992 to March 1993	April 1993 to December 1993
North Wales (Clwyd/Gwynedd)	Agreements	4	42
	Total spent	£2,926	£119,410
	Length of hedgerow renovated	0·5 km	18·0 km
Mid Wales (Dyfed/Powys excluding Brecon Beacons NP)	Agreements	6	82
	Total spent	£11,306	£192,972
	Length of hedgerpw renovated	2·0 km	44·0 km
South Wales (Gwent/Mid, South and West Glamorgan, Brecon Beacons NP)	Agreements	—	32
	Total spent	—	£77,131
	Length of hedgerow renovated	—	17·0 km
Total	Agreements	10	156
	Total spent	£14,231	£389,513
	Length of hedgerow renovated	2·5 km	79·0 km

Agreements are made with landowners covering a 10-year period, and additional funds are availble under the scheme from the Welsh Office Agriculture Department, although these are not included in the figures. A significant feature of the scheme is that the agreements bring under management all hedgerows on a landholding, not just those which are to be renovated.

NHS Public Relations

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department has issued to health authorities and trusts on staff relations with the media, public and hon. Members.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance for staff on relations with the public and the media was issued to health authorities and NHS trusts in June 1993. General managers and chief executives were asked to ensure that all staff were made aware of the guidance and that all staff have access to a copy. A copy of the guidance is available in the Library of the House.

Wells Kelo

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make a final decision on whether to (a) relocate or (b) extinguish Wells Kelo of Holyhead, Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The decision on whether to relocate or extinguish the business at Holyhead is a commercial one for the directors of Guiness Brothers Group plc, the successors of Wells Kelo Ltd., to make.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with (a) the Welsh Development Agency and (b) the district valuer concerning the relocation of Wells Kelo of Holyhead, Gwynedd.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1993]: None, although I have been kept informed of developments.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the advice given by the district valuer that Wells Kelo of Holyhead, Gwynedd, be extinguished rather than relocated.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1993]: No such advice has been given.

I have received 14 representations in respect of the land compensation negotiations between Wells Kelo Ltd., its successor company at Holyhead Guiness Brothers Group plc and the district valuer.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total sums expended to date by (a) the Welsh Office and (b) the Welsh Development Agency, on the project to relocate Wells Kelo of Holyhead, Gwynedd.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1993]: To date, the Welsh Office has made discretionary advance payments of compensation totalling £1·161 million. In addition, the Welsh Development Agency has spent £1·424 million on the provision of a new factory.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the report by the enterprise and business support working group on one-stop shops for business support to be completed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 16 December 1993 at columns 854-55. In reaching my decision I took into account the work of the Enterprise and Business Support working group which gave advice to me last year.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of new pieces of legislation, including regulations, which have been implemented, and which the Health and Safety Executive is required to enforce, since 1 April 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1 April 1980, 194 regulations have been introduced which the Health and Safety Executive is required to enforce. Of these 69 have subsequently been revoked as part of the Health and Safety Commission's on-going programme of rationalisation and modernisation of health and safety legislation and the need to implement European legislation.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Kent have not been offered training, education or work under the Government's guarantee in the latest year for which information is available; and what was the figure in the previous year.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the number of young people who have not had an offer of training, education or work is not collected. However, in November there were 53 young people in Kent who were covered by the youth training guarantee and waiting for eight or more weeks and almost 5,700 in training. This is a significant improvement over March last year when there were 338 young people waiting for eight or more weeks. There is no reliable information available for November 1992 on eight-week queues.

Unemployment

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the levels of unemployment in (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment figures are available nationally from January 1971 and regionally from April 1974. For travel-to-work areas, only unadjusted unemployment figures are available and these go back to June 1983.

All this data can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Public Bodies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in respect of how many boards, authorities, committees, and other public bodies he is responsible, in whole or on part, for appointments; what is the total number of such appointments; and what is the total public spending by such boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies.

Miss Widdecombe: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Employment Department are listed in the recently published book "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library. In addition, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has recently appointed the Commissioner for Protection against Unlawful Industrial Action and the chief executive of Investors In People UK. My right hon. Friend is responsible for over 3,300 appointments.

The total gross expenditure for 1992-93 of the non-departmental public bodies is also listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council of 22 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There was no meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 22 December.

Training and Education (Tenders)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy in respect of independent companies other than existing training and enterprise councils tendering for public contracts to manage training, education and enterprise programmes.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are strategic organisations which reflect the composition of local business and the wider community. I have a close relationship with TEC boards and I am satisfied with their performance to date. I have no plans to change this policy.

Training for Work

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of how positive outcomes from the training for work programme compare with those achieved under employment training programmes.

Miss Widdecombe: Training for work replaced employment training—ET—in April 1993 and it is still too early to say how many leavers have gained a positive outcome. The latest period for which figures are available is April 1992 to February 1993. In that period 41 per cent. of all ET leavers in Great Britain gained a positive outcome.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost per job placement under the training for work programme.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no current information on the cost of job placements in training for work—TfW—which started in April 1993. The plans for the first three years of TfW do however include costs per positive outcome. A positive outcome is a job, further education or training. The planned costs which include the allowances paid to participants are as follows:

Year	Cost per positive outcome £
1993-94	9,718
1994-95	8,451
1995-96	7,548

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the latest figures from the 1993 labour force survey for each standard United Kingdom region of the number and percentage of (a) all males, (b) all females and (c) total of those recorded as economically inactive and of working age;

(2) what is the formal definition of "economically inactive".

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the labour force survey showing the number and percentage of economically inactive individuals of working age are given in the table. Estimates for regions in Great Britain are for summer 1993, while the latest available Northern Ireland results are for spring 1993.

According to the guidelines recommended by the International Labour Office—ILO—economically inactive people are defined as:

"all those who are neither in employment (including those on Government employment and training programmes and unpaid family workers), nor unemployed on the ILO definition."

Economically inactive people of working age[1]. Not seasonally adjusted

Private Pits

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what authority TECs in coalfield areas are allocating money to private mineowners to reopen pits; what sums of money are involved; and whether the sums of money are paid for each miner employed.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department contracts with coalfield training and enterprise councils to implement business plans to help communities affected by pit closures. The plans cover labour market measures in line with TEC remits and provide job search, training and business start up programmes for those affected by the closures.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the total cost to the Health and Safety Executive of publishing guidance and otherwise promoting awareness and understanding of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations throughout Great Britain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive—HSE—spent approximately £700,000 publishing control of substances hazardous to health—COSHH—guidance since the regulations were implemented in 1989. This includes the production and print costs of the COSHH approved code of practice and free leaflets for industry and employees.

An advertising campaign aimed at promoting awareness and understanding of COSHH was mounted by HSE in 1989-90 at an additional cost of £270,000, plus £80,000 spent on fulfilment—distribution, handling, postage, etc.

Sales revenue from COSHH guidance published by HSE amounted to £650,000 to 30 September 1993.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive will amend its publication "Safety Representatives and Safety Committees" (ISBN 0118839594) to include references to the new regulation 4A(1), which was enacted by regulation 17 of the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations on 31 December 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive proposes to take forward work on this publication in 1994-95 following publication of an open learning package for safety representatives and taking account of recent research.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for altering charges to industry for the services provided by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission has under review the scope for introducing new charges for the performance by the Health and Safety Executive of statutory functions and the provision of facilities and services. Existing charges are reviewed annually.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Commission will publish the findings of its review of regulations prior to publishing proposals for the reform of the regulatory system for health and safety at work based upon the review.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission will be submitting to Ministers the findings of its review of regulation in April 1994. If the Government decide, in the light of these findings, to put forward proposals for changes in health and safety legislation, these will of course be subject to consultation.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Health and Safety Executive has taken in response to the view recently expressed in paragraph 46 of the efficiency scrutiny report commissioned by the President of the Board of Trade "Review of the Implementation and Enforcement of EC law in the UK: Health and Safety" on guidance for all sizes of business on what is required to undertake risk assessment; and what action has been taken to comply with the recommendation that the HSE considers issuing a basic pro forma which businesses could use or adapt.

Mr. Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive is to publish, next month, a leaflet which will meet the efficiency scrutiny recommendations. The leaflet will provide guidance on how to assess risks in the workplace and what should be recorded. It will incorporate a pro forma with blank spaces, which employers can use to record their assessments.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many letters complaining about the burden of health and safety legislation he received in the 12 months prior to requesting the Health and Safety Commission to commence its review of health and safety regulations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the 12 months preceding my request to the Health and Safety Commission to undertake a review of existing regulation, the Department received over 750 letters about health and safety.

Many of these raised issue about the interpretation, contents enforcement of health and safety regulations, and identified what the writer considered a burden on his or her business. However, it is not possible without disproportionate cost to separately identify the letters which raised these issues specifically.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Health and Safety Executive has to publish a second edition of its publication "100 Practical Applications of Noise Reduction Methods".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive is currently preparing a new edition of this publication which it hopes to publish in the summer of 1994.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Health and Safety Executive staff-years have been expended on the review of regulations; and what has been the effect of the other activities of the HSE of servicing the review.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that 3·5 staff years will be expended by the Health and Safety Executive's review team on the review of regulation. Additional resources for the review were built into the Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1993-94 and beyond as part of its medium term aim to propose reform of existing legislation under the 1974 Act.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what activities currently carried out by the Health and Safety Commission and Executive will be curtailed as a result of the reduction in its grant-in-aid provision in 1995-96 and 1996-97.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about financial provision for the Health and Safety Executive will be published in the departmental report. The Health and Safety Commission's planned future activities will be set out in its plan of work for 1994-95 and beyond which is scheduled for publication in June.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive guidance on the electricity at work regulations for hotels will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the end of January 1994.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the members of the sector task groups appointed by the Health and Safety Commission to assist in its review of regulations will be fully consulted over the contents of the commission's final report prior to it being submitted to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission. It appointed the task group members to assist it under section 13 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. I am informed that the groups are making an invaluable contribution to the Commission's review and I would expect that to be reflected in both the preparation and content of the Commission's final report.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has made to the view expressed by the Health and Safety Executive director-general in the foreword to the HSE annual report that Government policy has created imperatives, like the review of regulations, which have impinged upon the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Reform of health and safety law has been central to the achievement of a better health and safety system since the passing of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 some 20 years ago. The Health and Safety Commission's review of regulation has given fresh impetus to this work, but is fully consistent with the roles and duties of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive already laid down in the 1974 Act.

Health and Safety Commission (Chairman)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the duties or activities carried out by his full-time predecessor the part-time chairman of the Health and Safety Commission will not fulfil.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for the Health and Safety Commission chairman to decide how best to carry out his functions and duties within the time available.

The decision to make the chairman's appointment part-time reflected the loading of the post in current circumstances, including the appointment last year of a second full-time deputy director general of the Health and Safety Executive. This additional post will strengthen the senior management support available to the chairman, allowing the full responsibilities of leading the Commission to be managed without a full-time commitment.

Deregulation (Briefings)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who was responsible for briefing all seven of the Health and Safety Commission's sector task groups on the findings of the Department of Trade and Industry deregulation task forces, as referred to in paragraph 5 of the interim report of the HSC review of regulations sent to the Minister on 22 November 1993; and on what dates these briefings were carried out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am informed that Department of Trade and Industry officials, appointed to support the Government's deregulation sector task forces, were responsible for briefing the Health and Safety Commission's—HSC—sector task groups on their emerging findings, and that this was done through a series of meetings with HSC task group chairmen in August and September and in subsequent correspondence.

Works Councils

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on works councils in British companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government wholeheartedly supports voluntary employee involvement. If a company in the United Kingdom wishes to introduce a works council or any other form of employee involvement, it is free to do so in whatever way best suits its circumstances. The Government are resolutely opposed to any measure which would force United Kingdom companies to adopt prescribed structures or forms of employee involvement.

HEALTH

GPs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on the relative level of income and expense reimbursement of general practitioners for areas of low mortality and morbidity and inner city areas.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information placed in the Library shows, by family health services authority the gross payments in 1992-93 to general medical practitioners for provision of general medical services and the standardised mortality ratios for the local authority areas which most closely match each FHSA. Information on morbidity by inner city areas is not available.

There are many factors affecting the level of payments to general medical practitioners, such as list size and cost of premises, which make it difficult to draw conclusions about levels of payments in relation to mortality data.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the progress of general practitioner fundholding in the Worcester area.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities are responsible for managing the general practitioner fundholding scheme in their areas. Nationally 25 per cent. of the population is covered by fundholding, in the West Midlands region the figure is just over 26 per cent. From April about a third of the population will be covered.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer on 13 December, Official Report, column 470, if she will break down the amounts retained by general practitioner fundholders by region.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 December 1993 at col 1010.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give figures for the management consultants' fees for assessing applications by general practitioners for fund-holder status by (a) wave and (b) region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. Regional health authorities are responsible for assessing applications to join the fund-holding scheme.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fund-holding general practitioners are now in place.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are now over 6,000 general practitioner fundholders in over 1,200 practices.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by her Department to employing bodies within the national health service to establish an occupational health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Current guidance on establishing occupational health services in the national health service is contained in HN(82)33, copies of which are in the Library.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the number of extra-contractual referrals agreed by region in the last year.

Mr. Sackville: The information on which to base an estimate is not available centrally.

University College London Hospitals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much transitional funding is being made available to University College London hospitals; and what is the source of this funding.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1993-94 to date, £8·247 million transitional funding support has been agreed in respect of University College London hospitals. Transitional funding for London in 1993-94 is being sourced from central top-sliced funds from within the overall national health service allocation.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the agreed programme for consolidating the University College London hospitals into fewer buildings; and if this includes the construction of new buildings.

Dr. Mawhinney: The University College London hospitals—UCLH—have already made progress on consolidating services on the Middlesex site as part of their programme of rationalisation. We await further detailed proposals from UCLH.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contributions have been agreed by the private sector to the development of a new facility at St. Bartholomew's for minor injuries; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There has been no agreement about what, if any, contribution the private sector might make, to the new minor injuries facility at St. Bartholomew's.

We welcome the interest the City has shown in this proposal and we will be exploring what positive and practical contribution it can make to its development.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 15 December, Official Report, col. 722-23, concerning changes in certain hospital provision in London, if she will list the number of accident and emergency cases dealt with by that department of St. Bartholomew's hospital in the first six months of 1993, indicating the numbers within any convenient category of treatment or severity; and how many within each such category she would expect to be dealt with in each adjacent and named accident and emergency unit which she plans to retain.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally for the first six months of 1993. However, there were 31,278 new attendances at the St. Bartholomew's hospital accident and emergency departments in the 12 months from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993.

A sample of these attenders showed that 12 per cent. were suitable for general practitioner care; 36·5 per cent. for care in a minor injuries unit, and 51·5 per cent. for care in a hospital accident and emergency department.

The expected patient flows to other hospitals have been modelled, assuming the alternative facilities announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 15 December 1993 are in place. This analysis shows the expected attendances:

Hospital	GP care	MIU care	Accident and Emergency care	Total
Royal London	300	650	4,850	5,800
Homerton	250	450	2,100	2,800
Whittington	100	100	800	1,000
UCH	450	950	5,700	7,100
Guy's / St. Thomas'	50	200	2,300	2,550
Smithfield Minor Injuries Unit	—	9,450	—	9,450
Totals	1,150	11,800	15,750	28,700

Note: 2,450 cases are estimated to go to alternative primary care centres. In addition, a small number of cases are "lost", when an A and E department closes. In this case, an estimate of 375 "lost" cases has been made.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representatives she has received on piggyback licensing on the back of generic drugs; what is her charging policy in such instances; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Applications made under article 4.8.a.i, of directive 65/65/EEC—sometimes known as piggyback applications—are permitted for generic drugs. The application fee, payable on receipt of the application, is presently £2,090. We are not aware of any recent representations about these applications.

Queen Mary's Hospital, Roehampton

Mr. Mellor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has considered Wandsworth borough council's report on the findings of the South West London hospitals review group and the specialty review team's report on plastic and burns as they affect Queen Mary's university hospital, Roehampton; and if she will make copies available in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: South West Thames regional health authority considered the views of Wandsworth borough council, the specialty review report on plastics and burns, and the views of other bodies who responded to the South West London hospitals review, before submitting its recommendations to the Department. The report of the South West London hospitals review and the region's recommendations on it are currently being considered by the London implementation group. A copy of Wandsworth borough council's report will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters she has received opposing the findings of (a) the specialty review team's report on plastics and burns and (b) the South West London hospitals review group as they affect Queen Mary's university hospital, Roehampton; and if she will give due consideration to the views of local people when considering the future of the vital services the hospital provides.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers received 401 letters concerning Queen Mary's university hospital, Roehampton between 1 August 1993 and 31 December 1993. No decisions will be taken on the future pattern of services at Queen Mary's without careful consideration of all the arguments and proposals put forward. Any proposals to materially change the pattern of services would of course be subject to public consultation.

Homerton Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of redevelopment of Homerton hospital; and from what sources it will be met.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated capital cost of further redevelopment at Homerton hospital is £25 million. This is a preliminary figure subject to formal appraisal and business case approval. Funding for the development will be made available from the national health service capital programme.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what planned improvements in local primary care facilities will relieve pressure on local accident and emergency services at Homerton hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: Improvements to primary care services around the Homerton hospital are being made as part of the investment programme within the London initiative zone. Specific projects include the development of facilities at Barton house, John Scott and Sorsby road health centres; these schemes will improve primary care services to the residents of north Hackney, who look to Homerton hospital for accident and emergency treatment and, in some cases, for primary care services as well.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will tabulate for the months of July to November the response performance by percentage of emergency call of the London ambulance service for each month under the headings (a) activation time, (b) response time within eight minutes, (c) response time within 14 minutes and (d) response time within 26 minutes; and what was the average number of calls per day in each month where the response time exceeded 26 minutes, together with an indication under each heading of the ORCON and patients charter standard.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table. Data for November are not yet available.

Month	Activation time: Within 3 minutes Per cent.	Response time: Within 8 minutes Per cent.	Response time: Within 14 minutes Per cent.	Average daily number of "999" calls received Number	Average daily number of calls where response 26 minutes or over Number
July	38	13	62	1,083	76
August	40	14	65	1,034	67
September	38	13	64	1,051	63
October	31	10	58	1,115	91

Performance benchmarks:
95 per cent. of calls activated within three minutes.
50 per cent. of calls responded to within eight minutes.
95 per cent. of calls responded to within 14 minutes.

Patient's Charter Standard:
95 per cent. of calls responded to within 14 minutes.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer on 15 December, Official Report, col. 721, concerning an increase of £14 million for the London ambulance service in the financial year 1994-95, what portion of this sum is likely to be used in defraying and deficit in the year 1993-94; what net increase in the number of emergency ambulances and qualified ambulance personnel she expects to be in service by December 1994 or any later month; and what percentage increase this represents over those currently available in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracy) on 15 December at col. 721 stated that, the London ambulance service—LAS—will receive an extra £14·8 million in 1994-95 over its baseline budget for 1993-94. None of this is expected to be used to cover any deficit in the 1993-94 financial year. £4 million is capital money to assist the LAS in the purchase of 120 new accident and emergency vehicles. The balance is revenue moneys, of which £3·5 million is to fund on-going developments already started by the LAS including: extra telephonists in central ambulance control, improved fleet maintenance, motorcycle and rapid response units and paramedic training. The remaining £7·3 million is to fund an increase in accident and emergency staffing, additional paramedic training and to strengthen management skills, especially in information technology. The LAS will now be able to renew over a third of its accident and emergency fleet and, by December 1994, to increase the number of qualified ambulance persons by 240—16 per cent.—sufficient to staff an additional 20 ambulances—15 per cent.—around the clock every day.

Public Bodies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in respect of how many boards, authorities, committees, and other public bodies she is responsible, in whole or in part, for appointments; what is the total number of such appointments; and what is the total public spending by such boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies.

Mr. Sackville: The boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible are listed in the publication "Public Bodies", copies of which are available in the Library. Government spending on the national health service is forecast to be £29,215 million in 1993-94 and planned to rise to £30,669 million in 1994-95. Government spending on Department of Health non-departmental public bodies outside the NHS is shown in "Public Bodies".

Prescriptions (Selected List)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the new selected items that have been made available to the NHS;

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the procedure for (a) pharmaceutical companies and (b) prescribers to (i) ask for a particular drug to be included in the selected list and (ii) overturn a decision to remove a drug from the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: Prescribers or manufacturers can at any time ask the committee to review any product which is on the list of non-prescribable drugs, or to ask for one to be added to it.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with (a) representatives of the pharmaceutical industry and (b) the advisory committee on NHS drugs about research and development into new products and medicines that may be affected by the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Drugs Advisory Committee

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place to ensure the effectiveness of the advisory committee on NHS drugs since February 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: The independent advisory committee has been asked to provide expert advice to Ministers. We are satisfied that it does so effectively.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the representations she has received since February 1993 from pharmaceutical manufacturers regarding the posts on the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received no such representations. A member with experience of the pharmaceutical industry was appointed to the committee in February 1993.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the composition of the advisory committee on NHS drugs; for how long appointees have served on the committee; and what was the level of remuneration where appropriate.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of the members and the dates they were appointed are shown in the table.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria appointees to the advisory committee on NHS drugs have to meet.

Dr. Mawhinney: Appointments to the advisory committee are made by Ministers from names which have been put forward by the relevant professional organisations.

Salford District Health Authority

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of the honouring of the contract of the immediate past district manager of Salford health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a local matter for Salford health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Dr. F. B. Beswick, for details.

Sellafield (Radiation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she made of the National Radiological Protection Board report NRPB–M453, published in October, on the estimate of collective radiation doses from Sellafield.

Mr. Sackville: The report was prepared by the National Radiological Protection Board—NRPB—in line with a recommendation by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment. The results of the NRPB work confirm that the discharges from THORP will result in radiation doses much lower than natural background radiation levels. The NRPB has described the annual attributable risk to individuals in the world population as "vanishingly small".

Drug Costs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on drug costs in each member state of the European Community.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total levels of public expenditure on drugs supplied to patients in each member state of the European Union is shown in the table. Data on public expenditure cannot be taken to correlate to total expenditure—public and private—as the share of the public sector if total spending differs between countries.

Country	Public expenditure (£ million)	Public expenditure (£) per capita
United Kingdom	3,349·3	58
Germany	7,983·6	126
France	5,317·9	94

Non-prescription Drugs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the availability of over-the-counter medicines.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are continuing to extend the range of medicines which may be supplied without prescription where this can be done safely. In January 1993, we introduced a new timetable to provide for reclassification within 12 months and an order—SI 1993 No. 3256—which will allow a number of medicines previously restricted to prescription control to be supplied as pharmacy medicines, was laid on 31 December 1993 and is due to come into effect on 21 January. From July 1994, we shall be increasing the opportunities for reclassifying medicines by making two orders a year.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional financial provision is made for hospitals adjacent to motorways to take into account the cost of treating victims of traffic accidents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is for district health authorities to purchase accident and emergency services and emergency ambulance services which take account of local factors and meet the needs of all comers, regardless of their district of residence. The cost of any in-patient treatment, following attention in the A and E department, is charged to the patient's district of residence.

External Bodies (Funding)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations received how much money in grants from her Department in each of the last three years.

Mr. Bowis: The Department makes a large number of grants to voluntary organisations. The main channel is the section 64 general scheme and for details of those grants for the last three financial years I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) by my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) on 21 May 1991 at cols. 435-39; the reply given to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) on 18 January 1993 at col. 96; and the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 21 June 1993 at cols 34-39.

Health Authority Projects

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 70-71, what are the capital assets of the regional health authority earmarked for current projects where contracts have already been signed.

(2) pursuant to her answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 70-71, what is the value of the assets of regional health authorities earmarked for projects over each of the next five years (a) where contracts have already been signed and (b) where contracts have not been signed.

Dr. Mawhinney: Proceeds from the sale of capital assets are not normally earmarked to offset the cost of individual capital developments, but enable the total capital spending for a region to increase.

Community Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates have been made by her Department regarding the future need for community nurses in each health district.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not keep estimates of the need for community nurses by health district. It is the responsibility of regions to plan the demand for health visitors and district nurses.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on community care per thousand of population in each local authority area for the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not held centrally in this form, because expenditure by the national health service on community health and expenditure by the Department of Social Security on some social security benefits are not available at local authority level.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on community care for people aged 75 years and over per thousand of population in each local authority area in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the integration of health commissioning functions with community care under local authority control.

Mr. Bowis: Various proposals for change are received from time to time but at present there is no intention to alter the current responsibilities for the provision of health care.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Sackville: Available information shows that no former British representative members in the European Parliament have been appointed to Department of Health non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(2) if she will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 20 July 1993 at columns 112-14.

NHS Estates Information Group

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the income of the national health service estates information group in 1992-93 and what is the projected income for 1993-94;

(2) what was the net cost of the national health service estates information group to the National Health Service Estates Executive Agency in 1992-93; and what is the projected cost for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The income for the information systems group of the national health service estates agency for 1992-93 was £1·3 million. The projected income for 1993-94 is £1·25 million.

The group made a surplus of income over expenditure for 1992-93 of £40,000. The projected cost of the group for 1993-94 is £1·25 million.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of a magnetic resonance imaging scanner.

Mr. Sackville: The price of a magnetic resonance imaging scanner will depend on the technical specification required by the site purchasing the machine and negotiation with manufacturers before a contract is awarded.

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many magnetic resonance imaging scanners are at present the property of the NHS; and in which hospitals they are located.

Mr. Sackville: According to information held by the Department, the number of magnetic resonance imaging scanners installed in national health service premises—up until June 1993—in England is 59.

These are located in the following hospitals:

The Maudsley hospital, Newcastle general hospital, South Cleveland hospital, Hull royal infirmary, St. James's University hospital, Leeds, Leicester royal infirmary, Nottingham university hospital, Royal Hallamshire hospital, Derby royal infirmary, Addenbrooke's hospital, Hammersmith hospital, Northwick Park hospital, Mount Vernon hospital, Royal Brompton and National Heart hospital, St. Mary's hospital, Paddington, Royal Marsden hospital, Royal National Orthopaedic hospital, Middlesex hospital, St. Bartholomew's hospital, Royal Free hospital, The National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery, The Hospital for Sick Children, London, the London hospital (Whitechapel), Royal Surrey County hospital, Atkinson Morley's hospital, St. George's hospital, Poole general hospital, Southampton general hospital, Stoke Mandeville hospital, John Radcliffe hospital, Nuffield orthopaedic centre, Royal Berkshire hospital, Bristol royal infirmary, Cheltenham general hospital, Royal Cornwall hospital, Frenchay hospital, Walsgrave general hospital, Royal Orthopaedic hospital, Birmingham, Liverpool MR research centre, Walton hospital, Liverpool, Clatterbridge Centre, Wirral, Manchester royal infirmary, Royal Preston hospital.

Some locations have more than one scanner.

Information about the ownership of these scanners is not available centrally.

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the national health service pays at present to privately-run hospitals for the use by national health service patients of their scanners.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

"Health of the Nation"

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made to the proportion of the target for the reduction in road accidents in her "Health of the Nation" White Paper which could be achieved by a move to central European time.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The "Health of the Nation" White Paper sets the following targets for reduction by the year 2005 in the death rate from accidents of all types, measured against a baseline of the average rate for the three years 1989-91:

	Percentage reduction
Children under 15	33
Young people aged 15 to 24	25
People aged 65 and over	33

It is estimated that the introduction of single-double summer time would reduce accidental deaths among children by some 4 per cent. below their level in 1989-91 and by 1 per cent. among the rest of the population.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Widening)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the scheme to widen the M1 between junctions 28 and 32 will commence; what is the estimated cost; and what is the projected length of time from beginning to end for work on the scheme.

Mr. Key: We are holding local public exhibitions in February of proposals for widening to dual four lanes within the existing land take between junctions 31 and 32. The work is estimated to cost £5 million.

The remaining proposals for the section of M1 between junctions 28 and 32 are at an earlier stage of development. Further progress will depend on the priority accorded to them following the current review of schemes, the completion of any statutory procedures and the availability of funds. The next stage would be public consultation about the options for widening. The estimated works cost for the whole section at the time of the 1990 report, "Trunk Roads, England into the 1990s", was approximately £200 million.

Flags of Convenience

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the country or origin of flag of convenience fishing boats on the British register.

Mr. Norris: There are 99 EC qualified fishing vessels on the British register, of which 73 are Spanish, 24 are Dutch and two are 50 per cent. Danish owned.

A27

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will update the table on the page headed "Alternatives Considered", of his Department's document entitled "A27 Worthing/Lancing Improvement Statement", explaining the proposals and new technical summary of the environmental statement to give up-to-date figures for the three alternatives and if he will also give figures for the Government's published scheme if the tunnel is bored rather than constructed on the basis assumed in this document;

(2) what are his latest estimates of the cost of converting the A24 to dual carriageway in current and 1989 prices; and if he will express these figures so that they are comparable with updated figures in a table corresponding to that in his Department's leaflet summarising the A27 Worthing/Lancing improvement proposals.

Mr. Key: The public inquiry into the A27 Worthing-Lancing improvement scheme is now under way. Current estimates of the cost for the scheme and related proposals will be available from the Department's representative at the inquiry. I will ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Light Dues

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the amount paid in light dues by merchant ships entering the Tees and Hartlepool ports last year.

Mr. Norris: The total amount of light dues collected by Customs and Excise in the financial year to 31 March 1993 was £4,133,427 in the area of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority.

Bus Fares

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what study his Department has made of the effect on bus fares of the rise in duty on diesel fuel.

Mr. Freeman: The effect should be very small. The rise in duty on diesel fuel represents an increase of under 1 per cent. on total operating costs.

Coastal Shipping

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has undertaken to assess the reduction in heavy goods vehicle traffic movements resulting from an increase in the use of transshipment or feeder journeys using coastal shipping.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 22 October at column 342.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set targets for the greater use of coastal shipping as an alternative to road transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No. The choice of transport mode for freight is primarily a commercial matter.

We encourage shippers and others in the freight industry to consider the merits of coastal and short sea shipping where this is a practical option.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in which (a) inland ports and (b) small ports he proposes to increase coastal shipping traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is for individual ports to decide what facilities they will provide for coastal shipping. It is for shippers and ship operators to decide how they will use such facilities. The Government are assisting this process by removing constraints on the ability of ports to operate efficiently, and by continuing to provide grants for inland waterways freight facilities, under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981, where these can be justified on environmental benefit grounds.

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has anything to add to his answer of 25 November concerning Coopers and Lybrand, Official Report, column 102, following the 63rd report of the Committee of Public Accounts, Session 1992-93, HC658.

Mr. Freeman: Further to my reply of 25 November, there is no comparison between the circumstances of the appointment of consultants to the Wessex Regional health authority and Sir Christopher Foster's role as adviser to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. As my earlier answer made clear, the need to avoid potential conflicts of interest was covered in Sir Christopher's terms of appointment.

Common Transport Policy

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the European Council of Ministers in respect of the common transport policy for European ports in respect of United Kingdom ports where he intends to develop inter modal transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Officials from my Department are taking part in the Community initiative for pilot action for combined transport. As one of the projects under that initiative the United Kingdom and Ireland plan shortly to commission a study of combined transport links between Ireland, the United Kingdom and mainland Europe.

Crossrail

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the terms of reference of the current review of crossrail include an assessment of the possibilities of linking the channel tunnel rail link with Crossrail.

Mr. Norris: Although not specifically included in the terms of reference, the consultants have been asked to consider links to Union Railways at Stratford.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the estimated cost, at current values, of the crossrail project before the start of the Bovis/Gibb study; what was the date of that estimate; and what proportion of that cost related to compensation payable under the statutory compensation code.

Mr. Norris: The base cost of the crossrail project was estimated in April 1993 to be £1,703 million at March 1990 prices, which is equivalent to £2,049 million at current values. The latter figure includes a sum of £259 million for property purchases and compensation for loss and disturbance to property owners in accordance with existing legislation.

Register of Shipping

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will reject proposals for a British open register of shipping;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of his reply to the chief executive and secretary of the Baltic Exchange's letter of 3 December concerning proposals for a British open register of shipping.

Mr. Norris: These proposals will need to be studied carefully before any conclusion is reached.

The Department's letter of 15 December, acknowledging the one from the chief executive of the Baltic Exchange, briefly explained this.

Container Ports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give in respect of (a) imports into and (b) exports from the United Kingdom for each United Kingdom container terminal port the number of containers currently discharged subsequently transhipped to (i) other ports in the United Kingdom and (ii) other European ports.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available to my Department.

Transport Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the transport supplementary grant/transport policy and plans allocations for 1994-95, giving the relevant bid in each case and expressing the allocation made as a percentage of the bid.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures are as follows:

Bids, and accepted expenditure, for transport supplementary grant (TSG) and credit approvals for 1994-95

	Total bid 1994-95 £'000s	Gross accepted for TSG and credit approvals 1994-95 £'000s	Per cent.

Marchioness Disaster

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who was the inspector conducting the inquiry into the collision of the Bowbelle and Marchioness on the night of 20 August 1989; what was his period of service and what responsibilities he held in his Department; for what other inquiries before or since he has had prime or associated responsibility; what were his qualifications and professional experience, particularly in respect of navigation of the Thames above Greenwich; and if he will name any person having such knowledge, and their experience and qualification, who assisted the inspector.

Mr. Norris: The inspector who led the inquiry was the deputy chief inspector of marine accidents. Prior to his appointment as deputy chief inspector he had some 37½ years service in shipping and is a fully qualified and experienced master mariner. His service included eight years as principal nautical surveyor with particular responsibility for casualty investigation in the Department of Transport marine directorate; in that capacity he was concerned with numerous inquiries including those into the losses of the Herald of Free Enterprise and Marques. He was assisted by several inspectors with expertise appropriate to different aspects of the accident, including two officers closely concerned with navigation on the River Thames.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who was the inspector referred to in the letter he received from the chief inspector of marine accidents dated 5 June 1990; who conducted the inquiry into the Bowbelle-Marchioness collision; where and on what dates the inquiry took place; where the public or hon. Members can obtain a list of witnesses appearing at the inquiry; if he intends to publish their written and oral evidence; by whom witnesses were subject to questioning in the course of the inquiry; and what interest was represented by each of those persons carrying out the questioning.

Mr. Norris: The inspector referred to is the deputy chief inspector of marine accidents who led the inquiry. Investigation began on the morning of the accident, 20 August 1989, and the inquiry was completed when the deputy chief inspector submitted his report to the chief inspector on 26 January 1990.

The inquiry obtained evidence on many dates and at various places, including the office of the marine accident investigation branch, the Department of Transport district marine office, offices of the Port of London Authority and Tidal Cruises Ltd., on board mv Bowbelle, at the yard where the Marchioness was slipped and afloat on the River Thames. Witnesses were questioned by one or more of the appointed inspectors whose interest, as laid down, was to determine the circumstances and causes of the accident with the aim of improving safety and avoiding recurrence. It is not the practice to give a list of witnesses nor to publish their evidence.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each matter taken into consideration by the inspector conducting the inquiry into the Bowbelle collision, which was not referred to by the report received in his Department from the chief inspector of marine accidents.

Mr. Norris: As in any thorough investigation, the inspectors considered many aspects which subsequently proved not to be germane to the accident. It is therefore not practicable to list such matters.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence has been given in private or in public by the captain of the launch Hurlingham in respect of the collision between the Bowbelle and Marchioness; and if he will place copies of that evidence in the Library.

Mr. Norris: Apart from any evidence which he may have given either in the coroner's or the magistrates courts, the captain of the launch Hurlingham gave evidence to the marine accident investigation branch inspectors in the form of a declaration under section 27 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979; such declarations are given in confidence and may not therefore be released.

A66-A1 Intersection

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to providing a full four-way motorway intersection between the A66 (M) and the A1 (M); and when he will publish his conclusions.

Mr. Key: An assessment of this interchange has been undertaken as part of a study to provide information about the longer term requirements of the A1 (M) motorway in the Northern region. From the work undertaken the need has not been established for increased capacity at this junction.

Roads Programme

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the results of the review of the roads programme.

Mr. Key: The current review of the road programme is intended to increase efficiency and speed of delivery by establishing clear priorities. The results will be published in good time to provide instructions to the chief executive of the new Highways Agency, which is being launched at the beginning of the new financial year.

Marine Accident Investigation Branch

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions since its inception he, or other Ministers of the Crown have visited the premises of his marine accident investigation branch at Southampton; and if he will list the occasions when any Minister in his Department has had formal meetings with the chief inspector of marine accidents since April 1992.

Mr Norris: Various Ministers with responsibility for shipping have visited MAIB. The most recent visit was by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State for Aviation and Shipping on 1 May 1992. The chief inspector meets the Secretary of State and Ministers as required.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reference numbers and headings of each vote in the estimates relating to expenditure incurred directly, or otherwise ascertainable, defraying the expenses of the marine accident investigation branch.

Mr. Norris: The MAIB provision is contained within the 1993-94 supply estimates, class VI, vote 2, part II (section A), (section B) and section B1(6).

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the nature and extent of the accommodation occupied by his marine accident investigation branch at 57 Brunswick place, Southampton and any other premises occupied by them elsewhere; if he will list the number and description of each category of persons employed within the Department; and what principal variations have been executed or planned since its inception.

Mr. Norris: The sole accommodation occupied by MAIB is situated at 5-7 Brunswick place, Southampton, which consists of office space on two floors. The staff complement is 11 professional officers from the three main maritime disciplines and 10 administrative, executive and support grade staff. There has never been any change made in the accommodation. The original complement was 15—nine professional officers and six administrative staff. However, at the branch's inception the full complement was not in post and at that time its staff numbered 11—five professional and six administrative. In April 1990 the complement was increased to the current number.

MAIB

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the titles and relevant dates of the printed reports of the marine accident investigation branch, together with the titles and expected dates of publication of any reports in hand, the number of each report printed, the cost to the general public and the method of distribution adopted by his Department.

Mr. Norris: The information on published reports will be found in appendix B of the periodic MAIB publication entitled "Summary of Investigations", a copy of which is in the Library. It is anticipated that the chief inspector's report, "Engine failure and subsequent grounding of the Motor Tanker Braer at Garths Ness, Shetland" will be published in the new year. Distribution of all priced publications is carried out by HMSO, which makes a commercial decision on the number of copies printed.

Zeebrugge and Marchioness (Inquiries)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the main differences in terms of procedure, public access, conduct and report adopted between the inquiries into the Zeebrugge and Marchioness disasters.

Mr Norris: The capsize of the Herald of Free Enterprise off Zeebrugge was followed by a preliminary inquiry and a formal investigation both of which were held under section 55 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1970. The loss of the Marchioness was followed by an inspector's inquiry under section 33 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 and regulation 6 of the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989. A comparison between the three types of inquiry is set out in the table.

	Preliminary inquiry (PI)	Formal investigation (FI)	Inspector's inquiry
Procedure	Ordered under S.55 of MSA 1970 (now repealed).	In 1987, as PI (now amended to S.56 of MSA 1970).	Ordered under regulation 6 of MS (accident investigation) regulations, made under S.33 of MSA 1988.
Public access	No provision.	(Usually)[1] held in public.	Public invitation to make representations. No other provisions before report stage.
Conduct	Peripatetic. No rules of conduct laid down. Inspector's powers set out in S.27 of MSA 1979.	Quasi-court procedures, laid down in MS (formal investigation) rules 1985.	Peripatetic. Governed by MS (accident investigation) regulations. Inspector's powers as for PI.
Report	No provisions laid down. Practice was for report to be regarded as confidential to Department.	Report of court to Secretary of State, usually[1] published.	Report by chief inspector to Secretary of State, usually[1] published. Any parties who are criticised must see the report in draft and may make representations to the chief inspector.

[1] The usual procedure was followed with both the Zeebrugge and River Thames accidents.

Thames Collision Inquiry

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries, or reports concerning the seven collisions on the Thames involving the Bowbelle, were taken into account by the inspector conducting the inquiry into the collision of that vessel with the Marchioness following his answer of 21 January 1992, Official Report, column 157; by whom any such inquiry in respect of each collision was conducted; to whom any report was sent; and if it is publicly available.

Mr. Norris: As section 15 of the chief inspector's report shows, the inquiry considered past accidents generally, not exclusively those concerning Bowbelle. Particular regard was given to those having points of similarity with the collision with Marchioness, which included one incident involving Bowbelle when she was in collision with the Pride of Greenwich. That, and the other River Thames incidents described in the report, were investigated by a surveyor of the Department of Transport, whose report was sent to the marine directorate. Such reports were not published, but a summary report of the Bowbelle/Pride of Greenwich collision was released in 1991.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to the Minister for Roads and Traffic's reply to the Consolidated Fund debate on 14 December about the Marchioness disaster, whether the transcript of the "Dispatches" television programme on which he relied portrayed the computer graphics included in the broadcast.

Mr. Norris: No. I have, however, now seen the video of the complete broadcast and I can confirm that I do not believe it adds anything material to that which is already known and recorded.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration was given by the marine accident investigation branch inquiry into the Bowbelle-Marchioness collision as to the health and capability of the helmsman of the Bowbelle and official documentation related thereto.

Mr. Norris: The helmsman was interviewed by an inspector who was fully satisfied of his capability. He held a valid medical certificate.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the forward extent of deadwater viewed from the wheelhouse of the dredger Bowbelle by a person of average height when (a) loaded with a full cargo down to the marks at level trim, (b) unloaded with ballast tanks filled as per company practice for navigation above bridges on the Thames and (c) as ballasted to the extent it was at Southwark on the night of 20 August 1989; and what evidence was taken, and what tests were made, by the inspector conducting the inquiry into the collision.

Mr. Norris: A precise figure for the extent of deadwater cannot be given, irrespective of the state of loading, because it resulted not only from the vessel's trim but also from the presence of dredging gear, as is shown in the chief inspector's report: the effect of this is partly dependant on the observer's position. The significance of the poor visibility from the wheelhouse is given emphasis in the report; the inspector's opinion on this was based on close visual inspection including but not limited to a passage down river in conditions similar as far as possible to those on the night of the accident. As the report says, during this trial the launch taking the place of Marchioness could not be seen from the wheelhouse when she was in any position reasonably close ahead or on the starboard bow.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps were taken by his Marine Accident Investigation Branch to contact the survivors and witnesses of the Bowbelle collision with a view to its submission of written or oral evidence to the subsequent inquiry; and if lists of such persons were supplied to it by the Metropolitan police or other persons or bodies.

Mr. Norris: Lists of survivors from Marchioness were supplied by the Metropolitan police. Copies of their statements and those of other witnesses were also provided; all were examined. When it appeared that the witness was in a position to provide evidence as to the circumstances of the accident, an attempt was made to contact them and invite them to meet an inspector. In addition, press advertisements were placed inviting anyone who so wished to contribute to the inquiry.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public evidence has been given, orally or in writing, by the captain of the Bowbelle concerning his seeking or obtaining permission to navigate or anchor subsequent to the collision with the Marchioness on 20 August 1989.

Mr. Norris: Evidence was given by the master in the form of a declaration before the inspector as required under the Merchant Shipping Act 1979, and therefore not in public. He said that he was given permission to anchor in Long Reach but then told to go to Gravesend, which was later amended to Gallions reach. This is confirmed by the VHF transcript.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what test had been made, and what information had been requested by or made available to the inspector conducting the inquiry into the Bowbelle collision of 20 August 1989, concerning the nature of that vessel's bow light when navigating with foremast lowered at night above bridges; what was the strength of such a light used whilst so navigating; what requests had been made by the owners of the vessel in respect of these or related matters; what rule or regulation prevented installation of a stronger than normal bow light for such passages; and what evidence was given to the inspector conducting the inquiry on this matter;

(2) what was the strength of the port and starboard navigation sidelights of the sand dredger Bowbelle on the night of 20 August 1989; what tests were made concerning the effect of any equipment carried on its deck or the trim of the vessel on forward visibility of such lights, particularly when viewed from near water level; and if the inspector conducting the inquiry into the collision took evidence on this matter.

Mr. Norris: Bowbelle carried approved port and starboard navigation lights, which have a luminous intensity of 12 candelas giving a range in ordinarily good visibility of least three miles. As explained in the chief inspector's report, she did not carry the usual forward masthead light being exempt from doing so under PLA bye-laws because the mast had to be lowered to pass under the bridges, but she carried in lieu of it a light about 4½ feet above the deck forward, of similar characteristics: that is having a luminous intensity of at least 94 candelas giving a six-mile range.

A trial passage down river in conditions similar as far as possible to those on the night of the accident permitted a subjective assessment of the effectiveness of the lights from near water level by the inspector on board the launch. As section 7 of the report says, the lights did not show up well: this, particularly in the case of the forward light, was due mainly to the effect of the background of shore lights.

Representations were made by the owners of Bowbelle and other commercial craft regularly using the river above Tower bridge on the subject of distinguishing lights for their ships, both at meetings and in correspondence. The relevant papers were examined by the inspectors and are discussed in section 15 of the chief inspector's report. The various possibilities were rejected as the report says principally because the Department of Transport considered there would be conflict with the requirement of the International Collision Regulations.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence the inspector conducting the inquiry into the Bowbelle collision on the River Thames took concerning sets and turbulence in the water in the vicinity of Southwark bridge at the time of the collision there on 20 August 1989.

Mr. Norris: A research project was commissioned and evidence was taken from the Port of London Authority; the subject is covered in section 6 of the chief inspector's report.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name the vessel and person transmitting the radio messages, ascribed to an unknown vessel, contained in the radio-telephone transcript of the Port of London Authority Thames navigation service in the period immediately following the collision near Southwark bridge on 20 August 1989; if the name of that vessel and person were available to the inspector conducting the consequent inquiry; and what reference is made to it in the publicised report into that collision.

Mr. Norris: The vessel was the Hurlingham and the person making the broadcast was her skipper. Reference is at section 3.10 of the chief inspector's report.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date advice from his Department was given to the then Prime Minister concerning the merits of establishing a public inquiry into the Marchioness disaster of comparable scope to those conducted into disasters at King's Cross and Clapham.

Mr. Norris: The matter of a public inquiry was discussed on the day of the accident—20 August 1989. It was decided that the MAIB inquiry should proceed, with the option of a public inquiry—formal investigation—left open.

86. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what port or starboard effect the screw of the sand dredger Bowbelle unloaded with no, or little ballast had on its steering over the range of engine revolutions generally used and being used on the night of 20 August 1989; at what depths the boss and upper tip of its screw were below the surface when navigating King's reach that night; and what evidence was taken, or test made, in this regard by the inspector conducting the inquiry into the subsequent collision.

Mr. Norris: No significant effect was experienced at normal ahead revolutions or observed during the trial carried out in the inspector's presence. On going astern, the crew would be expected to cant the vessel but no astern movements took place on passage before the collision. The depths were about 5 ft and rather less than 2 ft respectively.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) where, and at what time, any representative or member of the management of South Coast Shipping boarded the Bowbelle in the early hours of 20 August 1989 and for what purpose; what such information was available to the inspector conducting the subsequent inquiry; if such a visit was referred to or discussed in evidence given to that inquiry by any member of the crew or management of the Bowbelle; and where it is referred to in the consequent report;

(2) if he will describe the movements of the sand dredger Bowbelle subsequent to its collision on 20 August 1989 with the Marchioness prior to its mooring at Orchard wharf, Leamouth; which persons representing which interests boarded or left the vessel over that period; and if this information was known and considered by the inspector conducting the subsequent inquiry.

Mr. Norris: The movements of Bowbelle immediately after the collision are described in sections 3.11 and 17.1 of the chief inspector's report. Subsequently, she proceeded down river and on instruction from the Port of London Authority anchored in Gallions reach at 0325 hours. She weighed anchor at about 0445 hours and berthed at Orchard Wharf at 0540 hours.

While at Gallions reach she was boarded by the operations manager of South Coast Shipping and by two officers of the Metropolitan police. This information was known to the inspector conducting the inquiry; it is not referred to in the report as it had no relevance to the accident.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what boats, lifebuoys, or other buoyant apparatus were thrown overboard, or otherwise used, after the Bowbelle-Marchioness collision on 20 August 1989 (a) from the Hurlingham and (b) from the Bowbelle; if such information was secured by the inspector conducting the inquiry; and whether it was referred to therein (a) in general or (b) in quantifiable terms.

Mr. Norris: Buoyant apparatus and life buoys were thrown into the water from Hurlingham, but none from Bowbelle. Evidence as to this was obtained by the inspectors; section 12 of the chief inspector's report refers to that.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what test or qualification was obtained by any officer of the sand dredger Bowbelle in respect of exemption from pilotage requirements for operation above bridges in the Port of London; for what period such exemption had been applied; from what date such exemption had been operative; and from what date it has not been necessary for a licensed Thames waterman to be in charge of sea-going vessels above Tower bridge.

Mr. Norris: As is explained in the chief inspector's report at section 9, there were at the time of the accident no requirements for pilotage in the Thames above London bridge; therefore equally there were no requirements for pilotage exemption in that area, although both officers on the bridge of Bowbelle at the time of the accident held valid exemptions for pilotage in the lower reaches. Following recommendation 16 in the report, pilotage or the possession of an exemption is now required. So far as is known, it has never been a requirement for a licensed waterman to have charge of a vessel above Tower bridge.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what record was made of the proceeding of the inquiry, by an inspector of his marine accident investigation branch, into the collision between the Bowbelle and the Marchioness in August 1989; where it is now held and by whom; how many copies have been made; to whom it has been sent; and if he will deposit a copy in the Library and make it publicly available.

Mr. Norris: The proceedings of the inquiry are recorded in the inspector's report the only copy of which was sent to, and continues to be held by, the chief inspector of the marine accident investigation branch. This procedure is in accordance with regulation 8(4) of the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989; there is no provision for an inspector's report to be released. However, regulation 9(1) provides for the publication of the chief inspector's report of the inspector's inquiry; the chief inspector's report on the collision between Marchioness and MV Bowbelle was published on 15 August 1991.

Air and Maritime Disasters

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will summarise the salient distinctions and similarities in the procedures in respect of investigation and report into (a) air and (b) maritime disasters, including arrangements for (i) giving and receiving evidence, (ii) publicity or privacy of inquiry proceedings and (iii) publication of reports together with references to the relevant Acts and statutory instruments.

Mr. Norris: The procedures for investigation of major accidents by the air and marine accident investigation branches are, in respect of the matters referred to, as follows:

Inspectors of both branches have power amoung other things to require the production of documents and the attendance of witnesses. Witnesses are required to answer the inspector's questions and sign a declaration of the truth of their answers. The full powers are set out in, respectively, the Civil Aviation (Investigation of Air Accidents) Regulations 1989, regulation 9 and the Merchant Shipping Act 1979, section 27.

Under the Air Accident Regulations an inspector's investigation shall be held in private. Under the Merchant Shipping Act, a witness giving evidence may nominate a person to accompany him but no other person may be present except any person allowed by the inspector.

The Air Accident Regulations (Reg 16) and the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989 (Reg 9) provide for the Secretary of State to publish a report, subject to specific requirements, unless in his opinion there is good reason not to do so. The report is that of, respectively, the inspector and the chief inspector.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to further Her Majesty's Governments objectives of open government by amending the terms of statutory instruments governing the conduct of current inquiries into marine accidents.

Mr. Norris: None. The existing regulations give sufficient discretion to appointed inspectors; adequately provides for those wishing to make representations; satisfactorily provides for consultation with criticised parties; and, subject to certain safeguards, makes provision for the publication of reports of serious or important accidents.

River Safety

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what meetings have taken place of the Thames district marine safety committee, established consequent to the recommendations of the Hayes report into river safety; what area that committee covers; who appoints, or recommends appointments to it; and which of its members represents the interests of (a) registered craft plying between Teddington and the Thames barrier and (b) their passengers.

Mr. Norris: Marine safety matters relating to the River Thames are considered by a sub-committee of the south east of England district marine safety committee, which has held four meetings since publication of the Hayes' report and which covers the Thames between Teddington lock and the Thames barrier. Appointments to the sub-committee are made on the recommendation of the chairman of the south east of England district committee. The interests of vessel owners are represented by the Thames Passenger Ship Federation and some individual owners. The interests of passengers are represented by the Department of Transport, the Port of London Authority, the Metropolitan police and the Port Health Authority.

M5

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from, or on behalf of, the residents of Whittington and Norton, adjacent to junction 7 of the M5, about noise levels following the widening of the motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Four representations have been received about noise levels on this stretch of motorway, including two via my hon. Friend. I am having the levels investigated and will write to him further.

M1/A1 Link

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the M1/A1 link will be open for traffic for its full length.

Mr. Key: The final section of the M1/A1 link between the M1 at Catthorpe and Rothwell is expected to open to traffic in June 1994.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost per mile of motorway lighting.

Mr. Key: The cost of installing lighting varies from one stretch of motorway to another, depending on such factors as the number of junctions and the costs of electrical cabling work at particular sites. A representative average figure at present is about £115,000 per mile.

Rail Privatisation

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department has given to OPRAF on rail closures under privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The franchising director's role in closure cases is set out in sections 37 to 50 of the Railways Act 1993. We have not issued any guidance on closures to the franchising director.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the total net cost to public funds of rail privatisation so far.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to her on 13 December 1993 at column 466. At this stage there are no savings or benefits to net off the total expenditure fugure.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much of the consultancy costs for railway privatisation were spent on lawyers' fees in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and how much of the expected expenditure is expected to go to lawyers in 1993-94;

(2) if he will give a detailed breakdown of his Department's expenditure on consultancy costs for rail privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The breakdown of the Department's expenditure and estimated expenditure on consultancy costs for rail privatisation for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 is as follows:

£ million

M62

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what origin, and destination surveys have been carried out of traffic using the M62 west of the M63/M602 junction, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No recent origin and destination surveys have been carried out on this particular stretch of motorway. However, other surveys have been carried out to provide a comprehensive assessment of traffic movements along the M62 through the Greater Manchester conurbation.

M6

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to light that section of the M6 between junctions 1 and 2.

Mr. Key: There are no plans at present to light the M6 between junctions 1 and 2, but we will continue to keep the matter under review.

M45

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the M45 will be illuminated.

Mr. Key: We do not have any plans to provide road lighting on the M45 motorway.

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the motorway widening works at the southern end of the M1 will be finished.

Mr. Key: We expect completion of the widening between junctions 9 and 10 in mid-January.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(2) if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment;

(3) if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Norris: Detailed information on past and present appointees to non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs—formerly known as quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations—is not held in the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, from such limited information as is available on present members of NDPBs, there is no evidence that any of them falls within any of the categories specified, apart from one member of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee who is a former Labour Member of Parliament, Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones. He was reappointed as a member of the committee in December 1992 for a three-year period to December 1995. Committee members are not paid a salary but the Department meets their travel and subsistence costs.

Noise

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for noise insulation for commercial premises in respect of noise from new railways; and what consideration he gave to including such premises or problems arising from ground-borne noise in the draft noise insulation regulations upon which consultation is now taking place.

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of the proposed regulations is to provide, for new railways, arrangements which relate equitably to those already applicable to the insulation of dwellings near new roads; commercial premises were not therefore considered for inclusion. The regulations provide for sound insulation; this would not be effective against ground-borne noise, which involves different technical factors and is therefore specifically excluded.

Roads

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount of money provided by the Government for capital road expenditure schemes for North Yorkshire in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: Central Government support for local authority schemes in North Yorkshire has been provided as follows:

Year	Transport supplementary grant (net) £ million	Capital allocations (until 1989-90) or credit approvals £ million
1985-86	3·482	8·500
1986-87	3·562	9·050
1987-88	3·552	8·870
1988-89	1·925	6·440
1989-90	2·653	7·330
1990-91	3·444	4·909
1991-92	6·157	9·321
1992-93	6·452	8·607
1993-94	9·645	12·463
1994-94	4·298	8·904

Motorcycles

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the research evidence on which he bases his Department's estimates on the effect of fitting leg protectors to all motorcycles on the incidence of death and serious injury to motorcylists.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the Transport Research Laboratory's working paper WP/VS/213 entitled "TRRL Review of Research on Motorcycle Leg Protection —1991", a copy of which was placed in the Library in July 1992.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist for regulations applying to the United Kingdom requiring motorcycles to be fitted with leg protectors.

Mr. Key: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the European Commission proposal, Com 264B final, action programme on road safety, which refers to leg protection devices for mopeds, applies only to mopeds or to all motorcycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The European Commission's action programme on road safety (COM 93 246 final) proposes, among other things, a new initiative in the field of "leg protection devices for mopeds", but translation inconsistencies in the document leave it unclear precisely what is intended. The United Kingdom proposes to clarify the matter in the Council working group to which consideration of the document has been remitted.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Videos

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought against those responsible for hiring video tapes of films with an 18 or 15 classification to those under age; and how many resulted in convictions, for the last year for which figures were available.

Mr. Maclean: The Video Recordings Act 1984 does not differentiate the supply of a video recording of classified work for hire from other forms of commercial supply, such as the supply of a classified video for sale. In 1989, there was a total of 47 prosecutions and 42 convictions under the Act, of which one was a successful prosecution under section 11 of the Act relating to supply of a video recording in breach of the classification awarded. Information collected centrally from 1990 onwards does not identify separately offences committed under this specific Act from other summary offences.

Alexander Schweidler

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if immediate steps will now be taken to withdraw the United Kingdom citizenship of Alexander Schweidler; and if he will make it his policy in future to refuse him entry into the United Kingdom on the grounds that his presence will not be conducive to the public good.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where allegations of war crimes have been made against a British citizen or a person resident in the United Kingdom, they fall to be investigated by the police war crimes unit. Where a naturalised British citizen is involved, it would not be appropriate to consider deprivation of citizenship until those investigations had been completed. British citizens cannot be refused entry to the United Kingdom.

Dorothy Nwokedi

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 535, whether valium was administered to Dorothy Nwokedi during her deportation on 9 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that a port medical inspector at Gatwick airport made available to Mrs. Nwokedi a 5 milligram tablet of valium, which she took after take-off.

Marchioness

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many victims of the Marchioness disaster had their hands severed by the authorities; and for what purpose this was done;

(2) who decided to sever the hands of some of the victims of the Marchioness disaster;

(3) who decided which victims of the Marchioness disaster should have their hands severed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Westminster coroner that hands were removed from the decomposed bodies of 25 victims of the Marchioness disaster, for the purpose of enabling fingerprinting to be carried out to assist in the process of identification. This was done on the coroner's authority, in the light of advice from the Metropolitan police and the pathologist on the best methods of establishing the identity of the bodies concerned. The question of which bodies needed to have the hands removed was a matter for decision by a Metropolitan police senior fingerprinting officer. Coroners are independent judicial officers and Ministers have no authority to comment upon the way in which a coroner conducts his inquiries in any individual case.

Fire Authority Report

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons he has not delivered to the chairman of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority, Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on the inspection of the authority made in the summer of 1993;

(2) for how long he has had possession of the Her Majesty's inspectorate report on the inspection of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority made in the summer of 1993;

(3) if he will instruct that Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority be delivered immediately to the chairman of the authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The draft report was not completed and finalised until 17 November 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend approved publication of the report on 30 November and printing was completed on 20 December 1993.

Copies of the report were sent to the chief fire officer and the clerk to the authority on 21 December 1993. Copies will be available in the Library of the House and to the public from 11 January 1994.

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the guidelines issued to magistrates with regard to sentencing policy in respect of guilty pleas; and why the question from the hon. Member for Ilford, South of 18 October received no answer.

Mr. Maclean: A copy of the sentencing guidelines issued by the Magistrates Association to its members on 17 September 1993 has been placed in the Library. I regret that the hon. Member's question of 18 October was not answered. As I explained when I wrote to him on 9 December, this was because of an administrative error that occurred when the question was transferred from the Lord Chancellor's Department to the Home Office. A copy of that letter has also been placed in the Library.

Body Belts

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 534, on what occasions in the last year a body belt has been used in a police station; and what were the circumstances surrounding that use.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am not aware of any occasion in the past year in which a body belt has been used in a police station.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Michael Howard: Our records show that the following Members of the House of Lords have been appointed to Home Office non-departmental public bodies. Salary details where readily available have been provided. I will write to my hon. Friend concerning details of those salaries not included in the reply.

Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Howard: Our records show that the following former hon. Members have been appointed to Home Office non-departmental public bodies:

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:

Parole Board

Mrs. Sheila Faith, independent member since 1991, non-salaried.

Bowbelle

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where, and at what time, an officer of the Metropolitan police boarded the Bowbelle on 20 August 1989 for the purpose of taking any statement from any member of its crew; what statements were taken; if they were available to the inspector conducting the inquiry; whether they have been published; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that no Metropolitan police officers boarded the Bowbelle on 20 August 1989 with the purpose of taking a statement from any member of the crew.

Deported Jamaicans

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of those passengers from Jamaica who were refused entry to the United Kingdom when they arrived at Gatwick on 21 December 1993; if he will list the names of those passengers who were given temporary admission to the United Kingdom; if he will list the names of those passengers who were detained at Campsfield House immigration detention centre; and if he will give a summary as to why each passenger was refused entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not our practice to disclose personal details of individuals with whom the Department has contact. Most of the passengers were refused entry because the immigration officer was not satisfied that they were genuine visitors who would return to Jamaica at the end of their visit. A small number were refused entry because they were apparently coming for settlement without the required entry clearance.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the opportunity given, in the time between the refusal to grant entry to the United Kingdom as visitors to Jamaican nationals at Gatwick on 21 December 1993 and their deportation from the United Kingdom, for passengers and their legal representatives to apply for judicial review of the refusal to grant entry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Removal is normally arranged as soon as practicable for passengers held in detention following refusal of leave to enter. Removal directions will normally be deferred for a short time if an application for judicial review is lodged.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when each passenger from Jamaica, detained at Campsfield House from 21 December 1993, after being refused entry to the United Kingdom, was informed of their rights to legal advice and representation; on what dates written explanations of reasons to grant entry to the United Kingdom were passed to solicitors; for how many passengers such explanations were supplied; and how many written explanations were outstanding when detainees were removed from the United Kingdom on 25 December 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each passenger was given written reasons for refusal of entry and advised that they were free to contact their High Commission or anyone else that they wished. One firm of solicitors acting for an individual detainee sought written details of the refusal decision and these were provided on 23 December. Oral explanations were given to various firms of solicitors acting for a further 12 detainess between 23 and 24 December. No requests for explanations, either written or oral, were outstanding at the time of removal.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Michael Lennon (Ref.: GAT 14116) was refused entry to the United Kingdom as a visitor at Gatwick on 21 December 1993; why applications by the hon. Member for Bradford, West for Mr. Lennon to ge given temporary admission to the United Kingdom were refused; whether Mr. Lennon applied to settle in the United Kingdom; whether Mr. Lennon inidicated he intended to seek employment in the United Kingdom; whether Mr. Lennon was known to have any criminal convictions or known to have criminal associates in the United Kingdom; whether he was in possession of any illegal substance when personally searched; who was his sponsor in the United Kingdom; whether he had a return air ticket to Jamaica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have written to the hon. Member.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors on flight YULE 966 from Kingston, Jamaica, were detained at Gatwick airport on 21 December 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One hundred and seventy eight passengers were required to submit to further examination under the Immigration Act 1971 and were therefore detained at the airport while awaiting interview.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the decision to detain visitors from Kingston, Jamaica, at Gatwick airport on 21 December 1993 was a reflection of a change in policy by the Home Office.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. We continue to welcome genuine visitors from all countries. There has been no change in the criteria for visitor cases generally or Jamaican citizens in particular.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from solicitors and others concerning entry procedures for those wishing to visit the United Kingdom following the deportation of Jamaicans on 25 December 1993; what action he has taken following such representations; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We had received on 7 January 44 letters from various individuals and organisations. They raised various issues but most were supportive of the action taken. Replies will be sent to individual correspondents as appropriate.

EC Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the provisional list of countries whose nationals will require visas to visit the EC from 1996; what plans he has to include (a) Barbados and (b) the Bahamas on the list; and what representations he has received from (i) these or (ii) other countries concerning their inclusion on any common visa list.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We await receipt from the Council Secretariat of the European Commission's proposals in respect of the list of countries whose nationals must be in possession of a visa when crossing the external borders of the member states. As soon as these proposals are received, they will be made available to Parliament in accordance with the normal scrutiny arrangements. No representations of the kind mentioned have been received.

Yardie Murderers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of Yardie murderers entering the United Kingdom by absconding from temporary admission licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am not aware of any case in which a convicted Yardie murderer has been granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom.

Immigration Documents

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of current instructions issued to immigration officers relating to those seeking to visit the United Kingdom; and copies of documents given to those refused entry to the United Kingdom as visitors, including advice given about rights to legal advice and legal representation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. It is not the normal practice to publish internal instructions. The written notice given to passengers refused entry as visitors informs them that they may contact their high commission or anyone else who they think may be able to help. I shall send a copy of the relevant notice to the hon. Member and arrange for one to be placed in the Library.

Illegal Substances

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what illegal substances were found by (a) immigration officers and (b) police officers on passengers who arrived on charter or scheduled flights from the Caribbean arriving at Gatwick on 21 December 1993; if he will give details of the circumstances; and how many passengers were charged with drugs-related offences.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No illegal substances were found by immigration officers. One passenger who had arrived on flight JQ001, on being searched by police prior to detention, was found to have in his possession a small amount of herbal cannabis. No passenger was charged with a drugs-related offence.

Immigration Controls (Gatwick)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) immigration officials and (b) police officers were on duty during the day at Gatwick South Terminal on 7 December 1993, 14 December 1993, 21 December 1993, 28 December 1993 and 4 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total numbers of immigration officers, chief immigration officers and immigration inspectors on duty at Gatwick South over the 24 hour periods in question were:

	Numbers
7 December 1993	86
14 December 1993	95
21 December 1993	114
26 December 1993	77
4 January 1994	91

In addition, on 21 December an additional 20 officers from other Gatwick offices were deployed at Gatwick South on an ad hoc basis for varying periods throughout the day.

For security reasons it is not the normal practice for the police to provide details of the numbers of officers on duty on particular days. However, the number of police officers involved in handling the consequences of flight JQ001 at Gatwick South on 21 December varied during the day up to a maximum of 15.

Jamaican Citizens

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Jamaican citizens were (a) granted entry to visit the United Kingdom and (b) refused entry to visit the United Kingdom during 1993; and how many of these Jamaican citizens were in possession of visas to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period January to September 1993, 12,000 Jamaican citizens were given leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors and 418 were refused leave to enter, of whom six had an entry clearance or work permit. Correspondence data for the fourth quarter of 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Jamaican high commissioner concerning the treatment of Jamaican nationals who arrived at Gatwick on 21 December 1993 and were refused entry to the United Kingdom as visitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No written representations have been received from the Jamaican high commission, which has nonetheless maintained a close interest in the treatment of Jamaican citizens refused entry at Gatwick on 21 December.

Carrier Fines

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of carriers who have been fined under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 in connection with charter or scheduled flights to Gatwick from the Caribbean since 1 January 1993 to date; if he will detail the total fine in each case; what information officials received from any carrier or others about passengers from Jamaica arriving at Gatwick on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not the practice to disclose information about individual carriers. Payments of £2,000 each were demanded in three such cases between 1 January 1993 and 7 January 1994. One of the passengers had travelled from Jamaica but none was a Jamaican citizen. The immigration service received information, including a passenger list, from United Kingdom Leisure about its flight on 21 December.

Legal Assistance Treaty

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the treaty between the United Kingdom and the United States of America on mutual legal assistance in criminal matters comes into force and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I signed the treaty in Washington on 6 January 1994. The other co-signatory was the United States Attorney-General. The treaty will enter into force upon exchange of the instruments of ratification, which, in accordance with the terms of the treaty, will be as soon as possible. The treaty continues in force the drugs agreement entered into by the United Kingdom with the United States of America in 1988 and provides a binding framework within which the United Kingdom and the United States of America may provide a full range of mutual legal assistance covering all crimes. The United States of America is one of the United Kingdom's largest and most important mutual legal assistance partners. In the last two to three years, the United Kingdom and the United States of America have jointly handled more than two hundred requests for mutual legal assistance concerning fraud, drug trafficking and other serious offences. The treaty is a logical next step in the continuing process of collaboration between our two countries in the fight against serious and international crime.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amount of compensation Mr. James Bloomfield received under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and what amount of compensation a person with identical injuries would receive under the new system.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not give details of awards in individual cases, nor will its successor body, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority.

Deportation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 535, what plans he has to ensure that deportees are advised of the immunisations which the Department of Health recommended for the country to which they are travelling, and that they and any children accompanying them are entitled to such immunisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The immigration service is considering the question of immunisation for those removed or deported under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971, and their dependants, in consultation with other interested parties including the Department of Health. I will inform the hon. Member of the outcome.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) non-visa nationals, (b) asylum seekers and (c) others were refused entry to the United Kingdom, detained and deported, since the enactment of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; what was the minimum and maximum period in each case between an application to enter being lodged and deportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two hundred and twenty-one asylum seekers were refused leave to enter in the period 26 July to 31 December 1993 and have been removed from the United Kingdom. The majority were detained throughout their period of stay.

The minimum and maximum time periods between arrival and removal, and corresponding information on persons other than asylum seekers, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total number of persons removed in August and September as a result of being refused leave to enter was 2,973; some may have been refused leave to enter prior to August. Corresponding data for October 1993 onwards are not yet available.

Post Office (Thefts)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of (a) assaults in the pursuit of robbery on Post Office delivery personnel and (b) theft of money or registered mail from Post Office vehicles have occurred in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Squatters

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the police operation to remove the squatters from Rutland Park mansions on the morning of Sunday 12 December; how many officers were involved; how many people were arrested; what led officers to believe that there would be violence; what acts of violence were committed; and whether the cost of the operation will be recovered from Brent council.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police that approximate additional police costs, excluding the use of support services, for the operation were £11,000. A total of 373 Metropolitan police officers were present. The police role was to prevent a breach of the peace. Prior intelligence had indicated that stong resistance might be offered to the enforcement of the order. In the event, there were no arrests and no acts of violence were committed. The Metropolitan police regard the orderliness of the eviction as a measure of the effectiveness of the police operation. They do not intend to seek recovery of any of the costs of the operation from the London borough of Brent.

Rutland Park Mansions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to charging councillors in Brent with wasting police time, following the eviction of squatters from Rutland Park Mansions on 12 December.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that no consideration is being given by the Metropolitan police to charging councillors in Brent with wasting police time.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers his Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Howard: The number of press officers, including the director of information, is:

1985	14·00
1986	17·25

1993	16·00

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names and job descriptions of each special ministerial adviser employed in his Department showing any particular outputs for which each adviser is responsible.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The special advisers employed by the Home Office are Mr. Patrick Rock and Mr. David Cameron. They provide advice on a range of departmental matters.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Care is taken to ensure that special advisers do not have access to kinds of information likely to create suspicions of impropriety.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what arrangements he will make to allow any country placed on the provisional list of countries whose nationals will require from 1996 visas to visit the EC to appeal against the inclusion on the visa list.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

There is no provision in article 100c of the treaty of Rome for appeals of this kind.

Mr. David Davis: HMSO printed 1,842 copies of the marine accident investigation branch report into the Bowbelle-Marchioness collision and 920 are still in stock. The Department of Transport received 320 copies for official purposes and 23 copies were purchased by other Government Departments. A total of 579 copies have been sold to date, either on wholesale terms or at the named price.

Documents (Marginal Notes)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to instruct all civil servants to ensure that marginal notes made on interdepartmental memoranda or other documents distributed for comment between Government Departments and executive agencies reporting to Government Departments always make comment directly on to the said documents and do not use detachable notes.

Mr. David Davis: There are no plans to issue such instructions.

DEFENCE

Belize

16. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the memorandum of understanding with the Government of Belize.

Mr. Hanley: We have advised the Belize Government that existing arrangements set out in memoranda of understanding, concerning the technical aspects of the British military presence in Belize need to be brought up to date to reflect the evolution of our military garrison into a jungle training team. The details of these arrangements are confidential between Governments.

British Troops (Germany)

17. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for bringing home British troops from Germany.

Mr. Hanley: The current strength of the Army in Germany is about 33,000. On current plans this will fall to some 24,700 by April 1995.

Defence Budget

18. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage proportion of defence expenditure will now, following the Chancellor's Budget statement, be assigned respectively to the Army, the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force in 1994-95.

Mr. Rifkind: Details of planned expenditure by each top level budget holder, together with provision for sea, land and air systems equipment will be contained in the 1994-95 Supply Estimates.

Bosnia

19. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the volume of aid delivered by British troops in Bosnia in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: In 1993 British troops in Bosnia escorted humanitarian aid convoys carrying a total of 77,739 tonnes of aid. In addition, the RAF humanitarian airlift into Sarajevo delivered a total of 10,354 tonnes of aid, and there have been over 1,000 such flights.

Economies

20. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which his Department has achieved all possible economies and reductions in unnecessary expenditures in respect of administrative and other running costs.

Mr. Hanley: Since the launch of the Department's efficiency programme in 1988-89 the MOD has consistently met the challenging targets it has been set, making improvements worth some £1·8 billion a year by 31 March 1993. We will continue to search for ways of reducing to a minimum the administrative and other costs of supporting our front line forces. To this end, we have set in hand the defence costs study, known as "Front Line First", to look into all aspects of defence support.

Mountain and Sea Rescue

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions over the past 12 months MOD personnel or equipment have been used in mountain or sea rescue operations.

Mr. Hanley: Between 1 November 1992 and 31 October 1993 United Kingdom military search and rescue helicopter flights and mountain rescue teams were called out on 2,049 occasions. A total of 724 of these callouts involved rescue operations.

22. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of long-term procurement needs in connection with small arms ammunition.

Mr. Aitken: My hon. Friend, the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, announced the award of a long term contract to Royal Ordnance in the Defence debate on 19 October last year at column 176. This contract covers over 90 per cent. by value of our small arms ammunition requirements in the period up to 1998.

European Fighter Aircraft

23. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Eurofighter 2000 will be the cornerstone of the RAF's future capability. The manufacturers are now forecasting first flight for April this year. This delay is disappointing but there is no evidence of any major design problem and it should not be of any great significance in overall programme terms. We and our collaborative partners plan to take a decision on a commitment to production in 1995, which will still allow production aircraft for the RAF to be delivered in 2000.

Yugoslavia

24. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are currently serving in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Hanley: There are at present approximately 2,330 British troops in Bosnia. In addition to those on the ground, Royal Navy ships and RAF squadrons are providing support to United Nations operations, including the humanitarian airlift into Sarajevo.

25. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the total estimated costs, including new computer systems, of moving the Procurement Executive to Abbey Wood, near Bristol, and report on current progress of the project.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated works cost of the new Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood, North Bristol, inclusive of site acquisition, construction, fitting out, professional works management and VAT is £255 million at current prices with an additional £90 million for the non-works elements of the move. No decision has yet been taken on the future information technology system for the site. The construction programme is proceeding within budget and to the planned timescale.

Cyprus

26. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Nations presence in Cyprus.

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations force in Cyprus—UNFICYP—currently totals some 1,300 personnel from the United Kingdom, Argentina and Austria. The United Kingdom contingent of over 400 personnel comprises a contribution to the headquarters staff, two companies of a roulement regiment in the infantry role and various support elements, including a flight of Army Air Corps helicopters.

NATO

27. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what issues he expects to be discussed at the NATO summit concerning the relationship between the European members of the Alliance and north America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be making a statement concerning the issues discussed at the NATO summit. The summit will undoubtedly reaffirm the continuing importance of the relationship between the European and North American members of the Alliance.

28. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his Hungarian counterpart to discuss the possible enlargement of NATO.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend has not had the opportunity to have discussions with the Hungarian Minister of Defence. However, I met Dr. Fur in Budapest on 13 October, when Hungary's relationship with NATO was amongst the topics discussed.

29. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strengthening of links between NATO and the new democracies of eastern Europe.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be making a statement concerning the decisions taken at the NATO summit, including on the need to strengthen the links between NATO and the new democracies of eastern Europe.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to argue for the introduction of sanctions for breaches of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty or withdrawal from the treaty.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom's policy on the non-proliferation treaty is to work towards its unconditional and indefinite extension in 1995. Questions of the imposition of mandatory United Nations sanctions are for the Security Council to decide in accordance with the United Nations charter, on a case by case basis.

Defence Establishments (Closure)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which Whitley Council agreed provisions have been observed in connection with the downgrading or closure of defence establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Great importance is attached to Whitley Council procedures and, bearing in mind that proposals covering some 1,000 establishments have been put to the trades unions over the past two and half years, we have a good record on consultation.

Hydrographic Office

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had on the risks to the Hydrographic Office's operational capability if companies receiving contracted-out work go out of business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Other than in discussions between staff and management, no such representations have been received.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets for financial savings he envisages as a result of introducing market testing procedures into the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. Aitken: The agency's market testing programme is at the feasibility stage; it is too early to predict the level of savings which may arise.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had regarding the future of long-term planning at the Hydrographic Office if market-tested functions go to tender every three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No such representations have been received other than in discussions between management and staff. Long term planning will continue to be the responsibility of the HO management board, and will be necessary in the context of its role as an integrated Government agency and the national centre of hydrographic expertise.

Mr. Hanley: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment—CBDE—under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letters from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 11 January 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the nature of the nerve agent which was transported to Porton, referred to in his Answer to the honourable Member for Leyton on 19th July, Official Report, column 81; and why this nerve agent was being transported (Question 27, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of the materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. The nerve agent transported to Porton Down in May 1977 were small quantities of the iso-butyl and cyclopentyl analogues of VX. They were transported in order to be retained at CBDE as reference samples.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the specific nature of the trials which were observed and participated in by the four United States Army liaison officers stationed at Porton Down from 1963 to 1973; and which chemical and biological agents were involved in these trials (Question 28, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records do not provide information about which trials the four US Army liaison officers stationed at Porton Down from 1963 to 1973 are likely to have observed nor about which agents were involved although these are likely to have been mustard and nerve agents.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking in which year Porton Down stopped research on pyrroles; how many of each species of small animals were used; and when the United States of America was first informed of this research through the Technical Co-operation Programme (Question 29, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Several classes of pyrroles were studied in the early 1960s to determine whether or not simple pyrrole derivatives might show pharmacological effects that might be used by an aggressor as an incapacitating agent and this area of research ceased round about 1963. Our records indicate that only rats were used for experimental purposes; they do not indicate the numbers involved which are likely to have been small.

4. The information arising from these studies was part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would therefore be part of the technical database drawn upon in cooperation with the United States of America during the 1960s under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when Porton Down first researched into Q fever (Question 30, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Research at Porton Down into coxiella burnetii started in 1989 in work aimed at identification techniques for the organism based on gene probe and antibody technologies.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the nature of the information on binary chemical weapons passed between the United States of America and Britain to assist Britain in its evaluation of the potential hazard of binaries, referred to in his Answer to the honourable Member for Leyton on 20th July, Official Report, column 170; when this information was passed; and under which defence agreement this information was passed (Question 31, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records do not indicate the precise nature of the information on binary chemical weapons passed between the United States of America and Britain to assist Britain in its evaluation of the potential hazard to the UK Armed Forces from potential aggressors who may possess binary chemical weapons. The information gained would have been provided during information exchange and collaboration with the United States of America on a continuing basis. This information was exchange under the aegis of the Defence agreements referred to by the Rt Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP, in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what tests and studies the chemical and biological establishment at Porton Down has carried out on the viral disease yellow fever; when these experiments took place; whether the experiments involved animals or service volunteers; what were the conclusions of these studies and tests; and under which defence agreement these results were exchanged with the United States of America (Question 34, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Work on yellow fever virus at Porton Down began in the early 1960s. Some work has been carried out to evaluate the vaccine strain as a simulant. Other work has addressed techniques for rapid identification. Some of the early work on antibodies for identification involved the use of mice and rabbits. No work has involved the use of service volunteers.

4. Preliminary conclusions are that appropriate techniques can be developed for rapid identification. The information arising from these studies is part of the chemical and biological defence programme and is part of the technical database drawn on the cooperation with the United States of America under the Technical Cooperation Programme and the Memorandum of Understanding on chemical and biological defence with the US and Canada.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking on what dates quantities of VX were transferred from Nancekuke to Porton; how the quantities were transported; what safety precautions were taken; which safety authorities and local council were warned before the transfer; and what was the nature of each of the trials in which the transferred VX was used (Question 35, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records do not provide information on the precise dates when quantities of VX were transferred from Nancekuke to Porton Down nor the nature of each of the trials in which the transferred VX was used but the transfers are likely to have taken place between 1957-1976. The transfers were carried out in accordance with the Report of the Working Party on the Transport of Nerve Agents from Nancekuke to Porton (Thompson Committee) published by HMSO in 1970. As indicated in the Report, the relevant police forces would have been notified and appropriate escorts and vehicles provided.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many scientific papers co-authored by scientists from Porton Down and their counterparts in the Australian military have been published since 1963; what were the dates of these papers; and in which scientific journal they were published (Question 36, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. I regret that our records do not provide this information in a readily accessible form. Nevertheless, I have consulted my senior staff and one scientific paper co-authored by scientists from the then Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down and their counterparts in the Australia has been identified. This paper on heat stress in NBC protective clothing was published in 1987 and appeared in Volume 125, pages 554-556 of Military Medicine.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the nature of the chemical agent transferred from Britain to Canada in the early 1970s mentioned in his Answer to the honourable Member for Leyton of 20th July, Official Report, column 173; what was the quantity of agent transferred; on what dates this agent was transferred; why the agent was transferred; how the agent was transferred; and what safety precautions were taken (Question 37, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The nature of the chemical agent transferred from Britain to Canada in the early 1970s was CR gas. Transfers took place in April 1970 (2 kg), August 1971 (10 kg), September 1972 (10 kg) and February 1976 (14·5 kg). Appropriate safety precautions were taken although as stated in the reply of 20th July (Official Report, column 173), our records do not indicate how the agent was used by Canada or on the precise defence agreement involved. The transfer of the agent probably took place under one of the agreements referred to by the Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-6.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking which United States military establishment and government agencies took part in the information exchange and collaboration on VX other than those mentioned in his Answer of 15th February, Official Report, column 63 (Question 40, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records indicate that the only other United States military establishment or government agency that took part in the information exchange and collaboration on VX was the Newport Indiana factory which I referred to in my reply to the honourable member for Leyton of 20 July 1993, Official Report, columns 172-173.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many service volunteers have been used for tests at Porton Down in each year since 1979; what is the purpose of these tests; and which chemical and biological agents have been used in these tests since 1979 (Question 41, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and,

(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The number of Service volunteers used for studies in each year since 1979 has been as follows:

1979	153
1980	340
1981	303
1982	161
1983	177
1984	131
1985	181
1986	96
1987	93
1988	136
1989	110
1990	83
1991	50
1992	112

4. Only a proportion of these studies have involved the use of a chemical agent; the only chemical agent used in studies since 1979 has been GB (Sarin).

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking which other nerve agents were involved in the research at Nancekuke referred to in his Answer of 16 July, Official Report, columns 717-8, to determine whether they presented a hazard to British armed forces; and when research started and ended on each of the nerve agents involved (Question 42, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The nerve agents involved in the research at Nancekuke and the approximate periods during which the research at Nancekuke was carried out were as follows:

a.	GB	1951-1976
b.	GE	1950s
c.	GF	1957-1976
d.	GD	1962-1980
e.	VX	1957-1976
f.	Other V series	1957-1980

Research into these nerve agents is also carried out at Porton Down as required by the chemical defence programme.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking under which defence agreement VX was transferred from the United Kingdom to the United States of America; and whether any transfer of VX was made from the United Kingdom to the United States of America other than that referred to in his Answer to the honourable Member for Leyton of 20th July, Official Report, column 172 (Question 43, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The only transfer of VX from the United Kingdom to the United States of America was the one referred to in my answer to the honourable member for Leyton of 20th July 1993, Official Report, column 172.

3. Our records do not reveal under which defence agreement VX was transferred from the United Kingdom to the United States of America. The transfer was probably under the Tripartite Toxicological Conferences which preceeded the Technical Cooperation Programme.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the experiments on staphylococcal enterotoxin B, referred to in his Answer to the honourable Member for Brent East on 16th July, Official Report, columns 718-9, began and ended; and if his Department has collaborated in experiments on this toxin with any other country (Question 45, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out studies on staphylococcal enterotoxin B since 1980 in order to assess the potential hazard to the United Kingdom Armed Forces and to provide appropriate protective measures. Experimental work on this toxin has not been carried out in collaboration with any other country although the results of this work form part of the technical database drawn on in cooperation with the United States, Canada and Australia under the Technical Cooperation Programme, with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence and with France under the Anglo-French defence Memorandum of Understanding on Defence Research.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what work Porton Down has done on evaluating tremorine as an incapacitating agent; when this work was carried out; how many tests and studies were carried out on animals and service volunteers; what was the conclusion of these tests and studies; when the results were shared with the United States of America; and through which defence agreement this scientific information was exchanged (Question 46, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Work has been carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since the early 1960s using oxo-tremorine as a pharmacological tool in order to examine the mechanisms of nerve agent poisoning and thus evaluate new drugs to treat such poisoning. This work has involved the use of small laboratory animals such as rats, mice and guinea pigs. This research is to develop effective therapeutic and pretreatment drugs. No studies or tests were carried out with service volunteers.

4. The information arising from these studies was part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would therefore be part of the technical database drawn upon in cooperation with the United States of America under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what has been the nature of collaboration between Britain, Australia and the United States of America with regard to nerve gases, and CS gas and CR gas; when this work was started and finished; where the work was carried out; and under which defence agreement the work was arranged (Question 47, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. As part of this work it has been necessary to evaluate the potential hazards from nerve gases, CS gas and CR gas. Studies into CR gas were carried out between 1971-1976 and CS gas between 1957-early 1980s. The studies on nerve gases started after World War II and are continuing. These address both the potential hazard as well as research into new and improved medical countermeasures to nerve agent poisoning. The results of this work have formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme and is part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what information arising from the transesterfication study referred to his Answer of 16th July, Official Report, column 712, QL, was shared with the United States of America, Canada and Australia; when this information was exchanged; and under which defence agreement it was exchanged (Question 48, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records do not indicate what information arising from the transesterfication study was shared with the United States of America, Canada and Australia. The information gained formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme and is part of the technical database drawn on in information exchange and collaboration with the United States of America, Canada and Australia under the aegis of the defence agreements referred to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, the Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will list the dates, participating countries and locations of each of the 15 meetings of sub-group E on chemical and biological defence of the Technical Co-operation Programme mentioned in his Answer of 1st December 1993, Official Report, column 163; which branches of the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence have been attending these meetings; and if he will make a statement on the achievement of this sub-group (Question 50, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records indicate that the dates, participating countries and locations of each of the meetintgs of Sub-group E on Chemical and Biological Defence of the Technical Co-operation Programme since 1967 have been as follows:

	Month	Year	Participating countries	Location
1	Aug	67	UK, USA, Canada and Australia	Edgewood USA

3. The main participant from the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence has been the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment augmented as appropriate by representatives from Ministry of Defence headquarters.

4. The achievement of Sub-group E has been to promote successful collaboration in chemical and biological defence research between the UK, USA, Canada and Australia.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when chemical and biological agents and materials have been exchanged between Britain and Australia; what was the nature of these agents and materials; in what quantities they were exchanged; for what purposes they were exchanged and under which defence agreement or memorandum of understanding they were exchanged (Question 54, Order Paper 15 December 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records indicate that the quantities of chemical and biological agents and materials provided for defence research collaboration by Britain to Australia are as follows:

a. November 1959	V agent intermediate	12 lbs
b. November 1972	Charcoal cloth	24 m roll
c. August 1977	G agent intermediate	20 lbs
	CR	3 lbs

3. Our records do not include information on how the agent or material was used by Australia or on the precise defence agreement involved. The transfer was probably under one of the defence agreements referred to in my reply to you of 16 July 1993, Official Report, column 716.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many legal actions have been taken against the Ministry of Defence since 1963 by service volunteers who have been tested with chemical and biological agents at the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down; and how these legal cases were settled.

Mr. Hanley: Our records show no such legal actions.

Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what fixed-wing tactical transport capability is required for the British contribution to the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps.

Mr. Hanley: We would expect to make maximum use of all of our fixed-wing air transport aircraft—Tristar, VC10 and Hercules—in tactical and strategic roles, supplemented as necessary by civil aircraft, to deploy the British elements of the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the aircraft observed by Skyguard radar since June 1989 were flying at medium level within the meaning of his answer of 14 July, Official Report, column 560.

Mr. Hanley: In my answer of 14 July—Official Report, column 560—medium level was intended to refer to aircraft operating at heights above 2,000 ft above ground level. Reports on Skyguard deployments prior to November 1992, during which 1,175 military aircraft were observed, do not distinguish between aircraft operating at low and at medium level. Of the 627 aircraft observed by Skyguard since that time, 243 were operating at medium level.

Knightsbridge Barracks

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the ownership, administration and use of Knightsbridge barracks now or in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The requirement for barracks in central London is being reviewed. Sites examined will include Knightsbridge barracks.

Civil Servants (Re-employment)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) retired officers and (b) retired civil servants have been re-employed by his Department (i) directly and (ii) as consultants in each of the past five years; what are the arrangements for their remuneration and for treatment of their pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The number of retired civil servants directly re-employed and that of ex-service personnel recruited to the civil service as retired officers in each of the past five years is:

	1993	1992	1991	1990	1989
Civil Servants	282	288	415	550	552
Retired Officers	250	205	187	189	160

There are no centrally maintained records for either retired service personnel or civil servants engaged as consultants and this information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Retired officers and re-employed civil servants are paid in accordance with nationally negotiated and agreed pay scales for the grade to which they are appointed.

In accordance with the principle that civil servants, when re-employed should not receive more, by way of salary and pension together, than was being paid in salary immediately prior to retirement, the civil service pension may be subject to abatement. Pensions received by service personnel under the armed forces pension scheme are not subject to abatement on re-employment, unless retirement was under one of the early release schemes.

The level of remuneration for conslutants is determined either by a set fee for employees of consultancy companies or by the personal worth of an individual consultant. This is constrained, overall, by the sponsors' available funds.

Jordan

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the British-Jordanian defence exports agreements were terminated; on what dates each of the agreements were suspended; and what were the reasons for each suspension and their termination.

Mr. Aitken: I presume that the hon. Member is referring to the memorandum of understanding between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Jordan, signed on 19 September 1985 and supplemented on 9 June 1987. While the line of export credit for Jordan was effectively terminated in 1991, neither of these memoranda has been terminated or suspended.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who signed the defence sales agreements with Jordan on 19 September 1985 and 9 December 1987 on behalf of the British Government; and in what form Parliament was notified of the concluding of each agreement.

Mr. Aitken: Her Majesty's Ambassador to Jordan was the signatory for Her Majesty's Government. Under successive Governments it has not been general practice to inform Parliament of the signature of such memoranda. However, the memorandum of understanding signed on 19 September 1985 was referred to in written answer by the then Minister of State for Defence on 17 February 1986 at column 58.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the British-Jordanian defence sales agreements contained a cap on total expenditure; and on what dates that cap was reached.

Mr. Aitken: The memorandum of understanding concerning the supply of defence equipment to Jordan, signed on 19 September 1985, covered contracts to a total estimated value of £270 million. The supplement signed on 9 June 1987 covered additional contracts to a total estimated value of £40 million. Expenditure did not in fact reach these figures.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what income was generated by International Military Services in respect of fees on brokerage for administering the British-Jordanian defence sales agreements of 19 September 1985 and 9 June 1987.

Mr. Aitken: International Military Services is a private limited company. The information requested relates to the trading operations of the company and is commercially confidential. IMS publishes its accounts for public scrutiny in accordance with company law.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the information the Scott inquiry was given as to the quantities of items listed under the 60 projects relating to Jordan in his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 295-6.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 13 December 1993 at column 528.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Government to Government defence exports agreements were made with Jordan since 1979 other than those listed by the Minister on 3 November, Official Report, column 296; and what British Government agency was responsible for administering them.

Mr. Aitken: A memorandum of understanding with Jordan, covering the supply of Khalid main battle tanks, was signed on 28 November 1979. The contract which gave effect to the MOU was held by International Military Services. A further memorandum, covering a modification programme to the tank, was signed on 2 January 1989. This has been administered by my Department. We have no record of any other similar arrangements with Jordan being signed since 1979.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether information on the quantities and values of the items in the Jordan arms sales package have been supplied to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

Mr. Aitken: Details of information provided to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry are a matter between the inquiry and my Department.

F3 Tornado

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 529, what consultations he has had with the International Standards Organisation and the British Standards Institution concerning Airwork's ISO 9001 certification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We have had no such consultations.

Quangos

122. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be compiled without disproportionate cost. However, on 1 August 1993 six members of the House of Lords were holding positions on MOD public boards. They are as follows:

The Lord Bridges—Member of the Royal College of Defence Studies Advisory Board. Unsalaried.

The Baroness Platt of Writtle—Member of the Meteorological Committee. An honorarium of £250 per annum is payable.

The Earl of Swinton—Chairman of the Anglo American Community Relations Committee, Menwith Hill Station. Unsalaried.

The Baroness O'Cathain—Member of the National Employers' Liaison Committee. Unsalaried.

The Duke of Westminster—Member of the National Army Museum. Unsalaried.

The Lord Gregson—Chairman of the Royal Military College of Science Advisory Council. Unsalaried.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Companies (Dealings)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what dealings he, or any member of his Department, has had, whether for export promotion or for any other purposes, with (a) A.T.E. International Ltd., (b) Admincheck Ltd., (c) Advance Electronics Development Ltd., (d) Archin Centre I.C.E. Ltd., (e) Atlas Equipment Co. Ltd., (f) Atlas Air conditioning Co. Ltd., (g) Dominion International, (h) Endshire Export Marketing, (i) Falcon Systems, (j) Geodesigns, (k) Investacast Precision Castings Ltd., (l) Meed International Ltd., and (m) Rajbrook Ltd.; and what was the purpose of his dealings with each of these companies.

Mr. Aitken: My officials have found no record of any dealings with the companies listed.

Joint Analysis Centre, Molesworth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many American citizens work at the joint analysis centre at Molesworth; how many British citizens work at the centre; whether GCHQ staff are employed at the centre; whether toxic chemicals are stored on or near the centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently 463 US military and civilian personnel, and four United Kingdom military personnel assigned to the joint analysis centre—JAC—at RAF Molesworth. No United Kingdom civilians are employed at the JAC. Additionally, there are United Kingdom and United States staff located at RAF Molesworth and RAF Alconbury who support the JAC. There is a hazardous waste storage facility at RAF Molesworth which stores items temporarily until they can be disposed of in accordance with regulations. Examples of hazardous items stored at this facility are petroleum, paint products and dry batteries.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what justification there is for the expansion of the joint analysis centre at Molesworth; what is the connection between this station and Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire; how much the expansion of the joint analysis centre at Molesworth has cost; Who paid for the expansion of the centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No expansion of the joint analysis centre at RAF Molesworth is currently being undertaken. The decision to locate the JAC at RAF Molesworth, announced by my predecessor on 11 January 1990 at columns 691-92, has entailed construction work at the station. Use has also been made of existing facilities at RAF Molesworth although some modification work has been necessary. This work is ongoing and has been subject to normal planning procedures. The role of the centre is to process and analyse military information from a variety of sources.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of all letters from fire authorities relating to his Department's buildings and facilities received over the last 10 years following fires.

Mr. Hanley: As far as can be determined only five letters have been received from local fire authorities in the last 10 years. These relate to fires at MOD main building —27 April 1985—AWE Burghfield—2 December 1988 —RAF Coltishall—21 April 1990, Allenbrooke barracks, Larkhill—7 July 1991 and RAF Carlisle—23 March 1992. A copy of the letter of 3 May 1985 from the London fire brigade is already in the Library and copies of the others will now be placed therein.

Fraud

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of reported fraud in the Ministry of Defence in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Hanley: Latest estimated figures for loss to MOD arising from fraud for the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93 were as follows:

1990-91	53 cases valued at £984,000
1991-92	45 cases valued at £63,000
1992-93	54 cases valued at £205,000

These figures exclude "procurement fraud"—fraud perpetrated by contractors including corruption of officials by contractors and collusion between officials and contractors.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy for dealing with employees found guilty of fraud.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's policy is that civilian staff who commit fraud are liable to be dismissed. Mitigating considerations may affect the penalty in individual circumstances.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians were judged to be guilty of fraud in his Department in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many were dismissed.

Mr. Aitken: The number of civilian staff found guilty of fraud in the Ministry of Defence in 1990, 1991 and 1992 were 68, 140 and 88 respectively. The numbers dismissed in each of these years were 27, 52 and 44.

Irregular Expenditure

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken following the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General to the Commons Public Accounts Committee published on 15 March 1993 to cut irregular expenditure in his Department.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the Treasury minute on the "28th Report from the Committee of Public Accounts 1992-93"—Cm 2199.

Contracts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was set aside in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 to cover increased costs incurred through delay in producing contracts placed by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of contracts placed by his Department in the last five years show cost increases in excess of 25 per cent. by the time of completion.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department has taken to ensure that contracts with foreign companies do not cost more than originally planned.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's aim is to award contracts to United Kingdom and overseas suppliers at fixed or firm prices, against tight specifications.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the standard practice of his Department on indexing payments for inflation up until the scheduled delivery date only in contracts for the procurement of equipment.

Mr. Aitken: My Department would normally consider the indexing for inflation of payments to contractors in any contracts with a duration of over five years. Our standard practice is not to continue such indexing beyond the scheduled delivery date if contracts fail to achieve this.

Project Management

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps he has taken to rationalise the definition of in-service dates on individual projects to enhance comparability;

(2) what is his current definition for an in-service date in relation to the procurement of equipment;

Mr. Aitken: An equipment's in-service date is generally defined as the date by which the equipment, or a specified number of equipments will contribute to operational capability. The interpretation of this definition can vary because of the differing characteristics of equipment, and the ways in which they are used. My Department's current approval processes require that the basis for defining the in-service date should be explained at the start of procurement.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures he has implemented to improve project management in the light of his Department's "Learning from Experience" report.

Mr. Aitken: A directorate was established as a centre of expertise for project management to pursue the recommendations of the learning from experience report and provide support and guidance to all project office staff. The training available to project managers has been improved; structured risk management has been introduced for all projects and a help desk has been set up to which project managers can refer queries. A regular project managers newsletter is produced to disseminate new initiatives and best practices derived from the lessons learned from other projects.

Computer Theft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated value of computer theft in his Department in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The estimated value of the theft of computer hardware during the period in question is £94,000, which occurred in financial year 1990-91.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual cost to the Department of the car service for Ministers in 1990-91; and how many vehicles were involved.

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1993, column 741]: The answer I gave the right hon. Member on 15 December at column 741 contained an error. The cost to the Defence budget of providing five vehicles for Defence Department Ministers in 1990-91 was some £200,000.

Defence Establishments (Shoeburyness)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the defence establishments in the area of Shoeburyness, Essex.

Mr. Sainsbury: A list of all those Retex proposals which were put before the Retex programme monitoring committee, and those projects which have been approved, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Education and Training Targets

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to ensure that his Department is fully committed to the national education and training targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department of Trade and Industry is wholly committed to the national targets. Mr. Neil Hamilton: Following publication on 9 December of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) report on the supply of national newspapers I announced that the Secretary of State had decided to prohibit by order certain restrictions on wholesale supply which the MMC had found to be against the public interest. A notice of the Secretary of State's intention to lay an order before Parliament was published on 21 December.

Written representations were invited from any persons whose interests are likely to be affected by the order. At this early stage of consultation no meetings with any individuals or organisations have been arranged.

Post Office Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the privatisation of the Post Office, together with the timetable for its implementation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are conducting a review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office. Continued public sector ownership, as well as private sector options, are being considered. The review is still continuing, and no decisions have been taken. An announcement will be made in due course.

Bank of Commerce and Credit International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the visit by Touche Ross the liquidators of BCCI to Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. This is a matter for the liquidators.

Utility Regulators

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will extend the power of the utility regulators to ensure that the rights of low-income consumers are protected.

Mr. McLoughlin: Each utility regulator already has a duty to protect the interests of all consumers in respect of prices and quality of service.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the citizens' advice bureaux report, "Out of Control", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will ask the utility regulators to investigate the CAB's findings.

Mr. McLoughlin: Ministers are considering the CAB report, as are the utility regulators, who also received copies.

Utilities (Consumers)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek discussions with the utility chairmen about the rights of low-income consumers.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for the regulators, who have a duty to protect consumers' interests.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the National Consumer Council and the utilities consumer committees to consider what improvements might be made in the rights of low-income consumers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Consumer Council and the utilities consumer committees have a duty to consider the interests of all consumers.

Extended Warranty Schemes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will consider if the practice of other high street retailers of promoting their extended warranty schemes rather than the ones offered cheaper by manufacturers may breach the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976;

(2) if he will refer extended warranty schemes operated by white goods retailers to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the competition legislation responsibility for considering and, if appropriate, investigating allegations of restrictive trade practices, anti-competitive behaviour and abuse of market power lies with the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg. I am asking Sir Bryan to consider whether the practice identified by the hon. Member warrants investigation and to write to the hon. Member.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for trade with Vietnam will be restored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Now that Vietnam has normalised its relationship with the International Monetary Fund and is making arrangements with its creditors to restructure its outstanding trade debts restoration of ECGD cover is under urgent consideration. I expect a decision to be taken in the next month or so.

Business Support Schemes

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been spent under each scheme available for supporting businesses from his Department in 1993-94 in each county of England, Wales and Northern Ireland and each region of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLouglin: A breakdown by county of the Department's schemes for business support is not available except at disproportionate cost. However, the table shows expenditure to the end of November 1993 for those schemes which give direct grant or support to business, broken down by region where that is possible. Schemes covering England often have counterparts funded by the territorial departments. A regional breakdown of expenditure on the Department's business support schemes under the Industrial Development Act 1982 is provided in the appendices to the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual reports.

London United Investments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to take any civil or criminal action against KPMG Peat Marwick following the criticisms of the firm's auditing practices by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their report on London United Investments.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Copies of the inspector's report have been passed to the Serious Fraud Office and to the relevant supervisory bodies, the Institutes of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and in Scotland, for such further action as those bodies deem appropriate.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate the electoral procedures of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the accountancy firms preparing the compilation reports for small companies are to be exempt from the monitoring requirements of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I shall be making a statement shortly on this and other details of the implementation of the proposed relaxation of the audit requirement for small companies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what oral or written discussions he or his Department has had with any official of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants about its internal democracy;

(2) what discussions he or his Department has held with any representative of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants in respect of its democracy.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has been told by the association that electoral reform will be one of a number of subjects which will feature in proposals for revisions to its bye-laws. These will be put to its council and members in a general meeting, in due course.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy in relation to the award of contracts to accountancy firms (a) against whom legal proceedings are being taken and (b) who have been criticised in the DTI inspectors report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on 27 October, Official Report, column 671.

Professional Ethics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will provide a list of the reforms of professional ethics which he has urged recognised supervisory bodies to adopt.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: It is my duty to satisfy myself that the ethical guidance provided by the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors meet the requirements of paragraph 7 of schedule 11 to the Companies Act 1989. This is one of the matters covered in my Department's routine monitoring of and discussions with the supervisory bodies.

Defence Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) in which year a specific allocation of Export Credits Guarantee Department's cover was allocated for defence exports; what was the size of the provision; and how that decision was reported to Parliament;

(2) on what date it was agreed to allocate a sum within the Export Credits Guarantee Department for the offering of insurance cover on defence exports; what that sum was; and on what dates that sum was subsequently revised.

Mr. Needham: On 28 June 1988 the then Minister for Trade announced, in a written answer, that £1 billion of export credit support would be made available by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to support large contracts for the sale of United Kingdom defence equipment.

The sum of £1 billion was never revised and the unused balance was effectively withdrawn in August 1991.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the size of the Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for defence exports in each year since 1985-86, the take-up of the cover and the year-end total of the contribution in respect of this cover to the Export Credits Guarantee Department's cumulative reserves and provisions.

Mr. Needham: ECGD's annual report includes a table detailing the breakdown of its capital goods business by industry sector including defence. A copy of ECGD's last annual report is in the Library of the House, the 1992-93 report will be laid before the House late this month. ECGD's accounts are not put together on a basis which enables the contribution of different industry sectors to its cumulative reserves and provisions to be detailed separately.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Eggar: The table sets out the information available.

Name	Post	Salary	Duration
Sir Julian Ridsdale	Member of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board	Unpaid	27 October 1992—26 October 1994
Charles Longbottom	Non-executive director, of British Shipbuilders	£5,000	Since 1988 (renewed on a yearly basis)
John Corrie	Chairman of the Transport Users Consultative Committee for Scotland	£6,310	1 January 1989—31 December 1995
Robin Hodgson	Member of the West Midlands Industrial Development Board	Unpaid	1 January 1989—31 December 1994

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Eggar: No such appointments have been made since 1979.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which auditing guidelines, issued by the Auditing Practices Committee while his Department was represented on it, urged auditors to be passive.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I do not accept the premise on which the hon. Member's question is based.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the kind of auditing firms who will be exempt from monitoring by the recognised supervisory bodies as a result of the small company audit exemption proposals contained in the Chancellor's statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The announcement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 30 November 1993, Official Report, columns 934-35 does not affect the monitoring requirements for company auditors. Any individual or firm who chooses to remain a member of a recognised supervisory body and retain eligibility for appointment as a company auditor under the rules of that body will remain subject to the monitoring arrangements of that body.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a list of the minutes of meetings of the Auditing Practices Board received by his representatives on that board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's representative has received minutes of the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board which he attended on the following dates:

1991	1992	1993
3 July	14 January	12 January
9 September	11 February	9 February
15 October	10 March	9 March
3 December	13 April	19 April
	19 May	11 May
	30 June	8 June
	28 July	13 July
	8 September	21 September
	25 September	12 October
	15 October	16 November
	24 November

Minutes of the board's meetings may be obtained from the board's secretary.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will seek to amend the regulation on non-audit fee disclosures so that companies will be required to give details of the non-audit services purchased from their auditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so. The regulations already require companies to disclose in their annual accounts the amount of fees paid to their auditors and their associates for non-audit work.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he takes upon receiving a complaint about the conduct of the bodies acting as recognised supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I would first consider whether the complaint concerned the statutory duties imposed on the supervisory bodies by the Companies Act 1989. If so, I would refer the complaint to the relevant supervisory body for it to consider. If the complaint concerned the complaints procedure established by the supervisory body to meet its statutory duty under the Companies Act 1989, I would consider whether the body had properly discharged that duty.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to take powers to provide that the recognised supervisory bodies do not threaten academic freedoms.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. I have no evidence that the recognised supervisory bodies act in the way the hon. Member implies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will seek to introduce legislation under which auditors of public limited companies will be required to file audited information about their affairs with the appropriate recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assurances he has sought or will be seeking on democracy and openness from the organisations acting as recognised supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Each supervisory body for company auditors was required to satisfy the Secretary of State that it met the requirements for recognition set out under part II of the Companies Act 1989. Sections 35 and 36 of that Act, and the Companies Act 1989 (Register of Auditors and Information about Audit Firms) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991/1566), require those bodies to make certain information available to the public about those eligible for appointment as company auditor. Section 37 of the Companies Act 1989 requires them to submit an annual report on audit regulation to the Secretary of State, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the year-end cumulative surplus or deficit and the year-end total of provisions for the Export Credits Guarantee Department in each year from 31 March 1986.

Mr. Needham: This information is reported in ECGD's annual trading accounts copies of which are in the Library of the House; the 1992-93 accounts will be laid before the House later this month.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision was made in the expenditure plans for 1993-94 of the Export Credits Guarantee Department for writing off irrecoverable debts from Iraq; and what provision was made for 1994-95 and 1995-96 in the public expenditure plans of November 1992 and those recently published.

Mr. Needham: ECGD's trading operations do not constitute a charge on public expenditure and as such there is no provision for any such costs in ECGD's public expenditure plans.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total exposure of the Export Credits Guarantee Department in respect of exports to Iraq (a) up to the invasion of Kuwait in August 1990 and (b) subsequently; how much of this exposure has so far been written off as irrecoverable; and in which financial years this was done.

Mr. Needham: ECGD's total exposure on Iraq is now estimated at £652 million of which £521 million relates to claims paid outstanding for recovery. ECGD's 1991-92 accounts included a provision for loss equivalent to 93 per cent. of exposure on Iraq; the 1992-93 accounts are still being audited.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Export Credits Guarantee cover was obtained to support the financing of the British-Jordanian defence sales agreements; and how payments insurances cover was provided for.

Mr. Needham: ECGD provided support for two defence equipment lines of credit to Jordan which were signed in 1986 and 1987 respectively.

Companies (Exports)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what dealings he or any member of his Department has had, whether for export promotion or for any other purpose with (a) A.T.E. International Ltd., (b) Admincheck Ltd., (c) Advance Electronics Development Ltd., (d) Arctic Centre I.C.E. Ltd., (e) Atlas Equipment Co. Ltd., (f) Atlas Air Conditioning Co. Ltd., (g) Dominion International, (h) Endshire Export Marketing, (i) Falcon Systems, (j) Geodesigns, (k) Investacast Precision Castings Ltd., (l) Meed International Ltd., and (m) Rajbrook Ltd.; and if he will give the purpose of his dealings with each of these companies.

Mr. Needham: Some of the companies named have contacted the Department in connection with the publication by the United States treasury office of assets control of lists of specially designated nationals. Some have contacted the Department about export licences. It is not the practice of the Department to disclose details of such commercially confidential matters.

British Coal (Pensions)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what rates of growth net of contributions have been achieved by coal industry pension funds in each of the last 15 years; and in which of these a guarantee would have had to have been effected if his present proposals had been in operation.

Mr. Eggar: The performance of the British Coal pension funds and their record of deficiencies and surpluses are matters for the trustees of the pension schemes.

Nuclear Material

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 38, if he will set out (a) those notifications of withdrawal of nuclear materials from safeguards that were temporary, giving the uses to which the material was put and (b) those notifications which were permanent.

Mr. Eggar: The majority of the withdrawal notifications referred to in my answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 38, concerned the permanent withdrawal from safeguards of depleted uranium for sources shielding or small amounts of other nuclear materials for research and development or analytical purposes.

Safeguards Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions since the entering into force of tripartite safeguards agreement with EURATOM and the International Atomic Energy Agency, the safeguards authorities have been notified by Her Majesty's Government of intended withdrawals under clause 14 of the treaty.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with the provisions of article 14 of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement, 571 advance notifications of the withdrawal of nuclear material from safeguards have been made since May 1979. The majority of these involved either the temporary withdrawal of material transferred to MOD sites for processing before being returned to safeguards at civil sites, or, in the case of permanent transfers to MOD sites, the withdrawal from safeguards of material such as depleted uranium for source shielding or small amounts of other nuclear materials for R & D or analytical purposes.

External Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the trade and commodity coverage of the 1980 weights given in table F2 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics"; and what were the corresponding weights in 1980, 1985 and 1990 in terms of United Kingdom exports and imports of manufactures.

Mr. Needham: The coverage of the weights is given in the footnote to table F2 in the" Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics".

The other information requested is shown in the table.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the publication date for the nuclear installations inspectorate's examination of generic safety issues in Magnox reactors in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive is planning to publish the nuclear installations inspectorate's report reviewing the generic safety issues of the long term safety reviews of Magnox power plant by the end of April.

Trade Balance

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the net balance of trade with the other EC countries in 1972 and (b) the total balance of trade in the period since the United Kingdom joined the EC; and what were the figures in respect of manufacturing trade.

Mr. Needham: The available information is given in the table.

[1] The crude balance of trade is defined as exports (free on board) less imports (cost, insurance and freight).

[2] The EC is defined throughout as it was defined in 1992; that is, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Germany (including the former Democratic Republic), Italy, the Republic of Ireland, Denmark, Greece, Portugal and Spain.

[3] Manufactures are defined by sections 5 to 8 of the standard international trade classification.

Defence Sales

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what rescheduling of payments on outstanding debts occurred in course of the British-Jordanian defence sales agreements; on what dates this occurred; and how this was reflected in public accounts.

Mr. Needham: ECGD-insured debts of £170 million due from Jordan have been rescheduled. These debts relate to payments of principal and interest due between 1989 and early 1994; a substantial proportion relates to the defence sales agreements. The debts are covered by two bilateral rescheduling agreements, the first signed in August 1991 and the second in January 1993. The reschedulings were concluded as part of general agreements reached between Jordan and its creditors in the Paris Club. To date payments under these agreements have been made on time.

The rescheduling of these debts is reflected in ECGD's annual trading accounts.

Plutonium

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the quantities of plutonium material unaccounted for for each of the last 10 years of Magnox reprocessing at Sellafield, and details of projections of MUF quantities of plutonium once the thermal oxide reprocessing plant is in operation.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1977, British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) and the AEA have issued annual press releases giving the difference between the book inventory of nuclear materials on each site and the measured physical inventory. This difference, known as 'material unaccounted for'—MUF—indicates an apparent gain of material when positive and an apparent loss when negative. It is not normally evidence of an actual loss or gain of material but often reflects measurement error.

The figures published by BNFL and the AEA for the 10 years to 1991-92 were:

	Kg
1982-83	-0·5
1983-84	+4·2
1984-85	+9·1
1985-86	+4·0
1986-87	+2·2
1987-88	-1·5
1988-89	+4·0
1989-90	-1·0
1991-92	+9·8

Once the thermal oxide reprocessing plant comes into operation, its contribution to Sellafield MUF will be reflected in the site figures in the normal way. The impact on the total will depend on the plant's performance.

The safeguards system for THORP has been described in papers presented at the 15th European Safeguards Research and Development Association—ESARDA—symposium in Rome in May 1993 which make it clear that the tracking of nuclear material inventories is only part of an overall safeguards system covering a variety of arrangements.

EURATOM

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which United Kingdom representatives are members of the European Commission and EURATOM special scientists group on atomic energy questions; for how long they have been members of the group; and if he will set out the part played by Her Majesty's Government in the choice of United Kingdom members of the group.

Mr. Eggar: The last five-year mandate of EURATOM's Scientific and Technical Committee—STC—expired on 31 March 1993. A Council decision confirming the membership of the STC for the next period to March 1998 is expected shortly. Renewal of the mandate will be announced in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Radioactive Waste Storage

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the proposed management strategy for the radioactive waste that will be stored at Sellafield following retention in the enhanced actinise removal plant, as referred to in paragraph 6 of his decision document on THORP, published on 15 December.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 18 February 1993, Official Report, column 319.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reliability calculations his Department had conducted, or contracted to consultants, to evaluate the safety of the high level radioactive waste storage tanks at Sellafield using the EC computer program PC Cosyma.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc, subject to the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate's views as to safety.

DEFENCE

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give direction to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Hanley: No such powers are held by my right hon. and learned Friend under existing legislation.

Tornado

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when an order for further thermal imaging airborne laser designator pods for the Tornado aircraft will be placed.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to announce that a contract for further thermal imaging airborne laser designator—TIALD—pods for the ground attack Tornado was agreed with GEC Marconi Avionics on 11 January 1994. The order, worth around £50 million, will provide more than two years' work for the company's Edinburgh factories and its suppliers around the country.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proposals he has to make the provision of the sixth European VAT directive retrospective to 1 January 1990; and what he estimates will be the effect on local authority capital expenditure since that date;

(2) what proposals he has to refund VAT to golf clubs and other golf course operators as a result of implementation of the sixth European Community VAT directive;

(3) what estimate he has made of the effect of implementation of the sixth European Community VAT directive on the 5 per cent. de minimis exemptions for local authorities for trading activities;

(4) what estimate he has made of the administrative costs to local authorities of the implementation of the sixth European Community VAT directive;

(5) what is the position in the United Kingdom in relation to the implementation of the EC sixth VAT directive; what advice has been issued by Customs and Excise to local authorities on the implementation of this directive; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I assume the hon. Member is referring to my announcement to the House of 22 July 1993, Official Report, column 303, about the prospective VAT exemption for sporting services supplied by non-profit-making sports bodies and local authorities. This will be introduced by Treasury order to implement article 13(A)1(m) of the EC sixth VAT directive with effect from 1 January 1990. At this stage it is not possible to estimate the likely consequences for local authorities. The precise scope and effect of the exemption are at present under consideration in the light of responses from local authorities and others to the consultation paper issued by Customs and Excise. I hope to make a further announcement shortly.

Taxes and Incomes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) of 13 December, Official Report, column 472, if he will provide the information on tax and income by region.

Mr. Dorrell: Readily available estimates for English regions based on the survey of personal incomes are in the tables. For 1980-81 and 1989-90, married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation in 1990-91, husbands and wives are counted separately. The estimates of total income relate to income subject to income tax and exclude non-taxable income such as certain social security benefits. The quantile groups of taxpayers are defined by reference to the number of taxpayers in each region in each year.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to end the avoidance of tax by payment in vintage wine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Measures announced in the Budget, and now published in the Finance Bill, will stop employers avoiding the operation of PAYE—pay as you earn—by paying their staff in assets which can then swiftly be turned into cash. This will include payment in the form of vintage wines, when arrangements exist for the employee to sell those wines. Such payments have always been taxable: the new rules simply remove the ability to defer the tax liability until after the end of the year.

Privatisation Publicity

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on publicity for (i) the Northern Ireland Electricity privatisation and (ii) the British Telecom third privatisation.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of offer advertising was £2·3 million, excluding VAT, for the Northern Ireland Electricity—NIE—share offer and £13·5 million, excluding VAT, for the BT3 share offer. The NIE costs were equally split between the company and the Department of Economic Development.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury has a number of powers to regulate borrowing and lending by local authorities. In addition, the exercise of some of the relevant powers of other Government Departments is subject to formal Treasury consent.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Since 1979 three former hon. Members have held appointments on quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations for which I have responsibility. These were to the Securities and Investments Board (SIB):

Mr. Robin Hodgson: non-executive director; duration of appointment four years from 1985; salary £8,000 per annum in 1985 to £10,500 per annum in 1989.

Dr. Oonagh McDonald: non-executive director; duration of appointment two years from 1993; salary £13,500 per annum.

Lord Stewartby: non-executive director; duration of appointment two years from 1993; salary £13,500 per annum.

Counterfeit Coins

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the circulation within the United Kingdom of counterfeit pound coins; what action is being taken against those making such coins; what advice is given to those in business warning of the circulation of such coins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I have received no formal representation about the circulation within the United Kingdom of counterfeit £1 coins and, although there are some in circulation, the numbers are believed to be extremely small in relation to the total number of £1 coins in circulation.

Under the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981, it is a criminal offence to make a counterfeit of a coin or to pass it on to another person. Where sufficient evidence of such activities exists, it is for the police to take action against those responsible.

No specific advice has been given to those in business warning of the circulation of counterfeit £1 coins.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no such powers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons without accommodation claimed income support in the Newbury constituency in each month between December 1992 and November 1993.

Mr. Burt: I am informed by Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider including in the pension book information on help available to pensioners through the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Hague: The administration of retirement pension is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Andrew Bowden, dated 11 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will consider including information in pension order books about the help available to pensioners through the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme.

The Benefits Agency receives numerous requests from within the Agency, other Agencies, Government Departments, Local Authorities and commercial interests to include material in the pension order book.

The purpose of the notes is to provide customers with information relating to payment of pensions and regular reviews are undertaken to ensure that the notes are easy to understand and concise and to the point, as it has been found that many pensioners are deterred from reading notes that are too lengthy or complex.

If we were to accede to these requests to include additional information, not only would there be operational difficulties in complying with the volume of such requests but the amount of written material may once again deter pensioners from reading the essential notes.

The Energy Action Grants Agency (EAGA) are responsible for administering the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) and already have arrangements in place to promote HEES. EAGA supply leaflets on HEES free of charge to local authorities, housing benefit offices, housing associations, Citizens Advice Bureaux, the Benefits Agency, job centres, Age Concern and other organisations which have contact with the HEES client group. EAGA also encourage installers to promote HEES locally by means of advertising, press publicity and distribution of their leaflets.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners opt to receive their state pension by automated credit transfer.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Andrew Bowden, dated 11 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the proportion of pensioners receiving payment of Retirement Pension (RP) by automated credit transfer (ACT).

I am able to tell you that as of 3 October 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 2,623,378 pensioners were having their RP paid by ACT. This represented 26·53% of the total caseload.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral answer of 9 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston), Official Report, column 494, if he will now make a statement in regard to the information sought by the hon. Member.

Mr. Burt: The hon. Member for Bristol, East suggested in her intervention on 9 December that at a meeting on 2 December with departmental officials and the head of the government statistical service, she had been told that information on low income statistics could be made available to her which had been previously refused in a series of replies to her questions, on grounds of disproportionate cost or incompatibility with this Department's statistical practice; and she intimated that this information had been wrongly withheld from the House. This is not so.

It continues to be the case that the results in question are either not available at all, could be made available only at disproportionate cost to public funds, or require the use of conventions which DSS statistical advisers consider unsound in the particular context. However, as I have repeatedly said in correspondence with the hon. Member, this Department makes available to bona fide researchers the base data set from which the households below average income statistics are obtained, to enable them to undertake what further analyses they choose under the conventions they prefer. This is entirely compatible with the principles of open government.

At the meeting to which she referred, the hon. Member was not offered replies to questions previously refused on grounds of disproportionate cost, non-availability or unreliability. She was, however, reminded that the base data set could be made available to her research advisers for their own use in the computer readable form of their choice. This repeated an offer first made some months ago, which I understand her researchers have now taken up. This Department's practice continues to be to provide reliable information within normal parliamentary conventions.

I have repeatedly offered the hon. Member for Bristol, East a meeting to discuss the issues about which she is concerned, but she has chosen not to take this up.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may generally give directions to local authorities, among others, or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, in their capacity as employers, as qualifying mortgage lenders and as bodies which may be required to provide information or evidence under the Child Support Act 1991.

More specifically, the majority of his powers to give directions to local authorities, or to otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, relate to the administration of housing benefit and council tax benefit. These powers are to be found in:

Sections 5, 6, 75 to 77, 127, 128 and part VIII of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 (as amended) and Sections 130 to 137 of part VII of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 (as amended).

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may also specifically direct local authorities to provide such relevant information about a person's housing benefit or council tax benefit entitlement in accordance with paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the Child Support Act 1991.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people who would be eligible for housing benefit were they not protected tenants; what the cost of giving benefit to these people would be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

HEALTH

Racal Healthlink

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) regions, (b) districts, (c) trusts, (d) family health service authorities and (e) general practitioners use the Racal healthlink.

Mr. Sackville: Information to the end of November shows that six regions use the Racal healthlink, together with 98 family health services authorities, 932 general medical practitioners and 1,656 dental practices. Precise figures are not available for districts or trusts. However, figures are estimated to be five to 10 and 40 to 50 respectively.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of setting up the Racal data network to (a) the Department of Health, (b) health regions and (c) health districts.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of setting up the infrastructure required to operate the healthlink service was met entirely by Racal Network Services Ltd.—RNSL.

Costs attributable to the Department were those relating to the employment of civil servants and consultants between November 1987 and November 1991 when the healthlink service was being planned and implemented. These costs are estimated to be £450,000.

The only costs payable by health regions and districts are those generated by usage of the healthlink service and records of these transactions are not available centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what machinery exists to safeguard general practitioner fundholders' choice of hospital;

(2) what representations she has received from fundholding general practitioners about choice of hospital for their patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have frequent contact with general practitioner fundholding practices. General practitioner fundholders are able to purchase the best possible care for their patients from whichever hospital they judge best.

Dental Handpieces (Sterilisation)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it mandatory for manufacturers to include information on the method of sterilisation of dental handpieces.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 December 1993, at column 1007.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which European countries it is mandatory for manufacturers to include information on the method of sterilisation of dental handpieces.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the powers she has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise to require them to act in a way which she prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which she may exercise these powers.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a number of such powers. They could be listed comprehensively only at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member has a specific function in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Public Appointments

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of (a) the Labour party, (b) the Conservative party and (c) other political parties who are (i) chairs and (ii) non-executive directors of (1) regional health authorities, (2) district health authorities, (3) trusts and (4) family health services authorities; and if he will give the party breakdown for each authority and trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

We do not seek details of political affiliation. People are appointed for their personal qualities, and for the skills they bring to the leadership and strategic direction of the national health service.

South Birmingham Health Authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what request she has received from the West Midlands regional health authority for advice as to the suitability of Jane Slowey as a potential non-executive director of South Birmingham health authority;

(2) what advice she or any member of her Department gave the West Midlands regional health authority as to the suitability of Jane Slowey as a potential non-executive director of South Birmingham health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

The Attorney-General: I have no such powers.

WALES

Waiting Lists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the most recent waiting list figures are for each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information on waiting lists for Welsh hospitals is for March 1993, published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1993", No. 2. A copy of this publication is held in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the names of the individuals undertaking the review of city challenge;

(2) if the review of city challenge was put out to tender;

(3) for what reasons consultants have been asked to review city challenge;

(4) which consultancy firm is undertaking the review of city challenge;

(5) what is the cost of the review of city challenge.

Mr. Baldry: Consultants have been asked to undertake an interim evaluation of city challenge as part of the usual monitoring and assessment of Government programmes.

Six companies were invited to tender for the contract. All six responded. The European Institute of Urban Affairs, Liverpool—John Moores—university, led by Professor Michael Parkinson, was awarded the contract. For commercial reasons, the Department does not disclose the cost of individual contracts.

The Department has also carried out an internal management review of city challenge procedures. The review made a number of recommendations to streamline procedures and further reduce bureaucracy. City challenge chief executives were represented on the review group. Many of the recommendations have already been implemented and much of what it was considering has already been overtaken by developments on the single regeneration budget and integrated regional offices.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Curry: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hazardous Wastes

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on the export of hazardous wastes to developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Below is the text of a statement which I have sent to the secretariat of the UNEP Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

"The United Kingdom restates its intention not to permit the export of wastes to developing countries for final disposal. However, the United Kingdom remains of the view that recycling of wastes offers environmental benefits provided that adequate environmental standards are maintained. Movement of wastes across international boundaries for that purpose does not detract from the environmental benefits, even though there is more difficulty in ensuring that the required standards are being maintained. The control mechanisms provided for under the Basel Convention are designed to overcome those difficulties. The United Kingdom, therefore, does not intend, for the time being, to prohibit the export of any waste moving towards environmentally sound recovery processes within developing countries, provided that the requirements of the Basel Convention are met. The United Kingdom is taking an active role in the work proceeding in the Technical Working Group to draw up guidelines for environmentally sound recovery operations. These guidelines will assist the United Kingdom in deciding which operations are environmentally sound and which are not.

Shipments of hazardous waste from the United Kingdom to developing countries will be investigated over the coming months so that the United Kingdom can meet its obligations under the Basel Convention and the EC Waste Shipments Regulation: any shipments which are not moving towards environmentally sound recovery operations will be prohibited. If, following this investigation, we find that, in general, wastes exported from the United Kingdom to developing countries are not being recovered to adequate environmental standards, then the United Kingdom will consider again the question of imposing a general ban on the movements of hazardous wastes to all or selected developing countries. We will report on our progress in this investigation".

Travellers

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish guidance on the planning aspects of gipsy sites.

Mr. Baldry: My Department and the Welsh Office issued a joint circular on 5 January giving guidance to local planning authorities on the planning aspects of gipsy sites. The guidance forms part of our measures to reduce unauthorised camping, including our proposals to reform the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

The guidance should help local planning authorities to decide where gipsy caravan sites are best located and provide for them in development plans. Our objective is that gipsies should find, develop and run sites for themselves, as many of them wish to do.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which costs relating to accommodation of the occupied royal palaces are borne by his Department and which by the occupants of (a) grace and favour accommodation and (b) accommodation for members of the royal family no longer on the Civil List.

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

My Department meets the landlord's costs of grace and favour accommodation in the occupied royal palaces in England, including that of members of the royal family no longer on the Civil List. These costs include maintenance of the structure and exterior of the building, painting or wall-papering of internal walls and surfaces, permanent fixtures in bathrooms and kitchens and the provision and maintenance of hot water, heating and electrical services. Occupants meet the costs of carpets, curtains, other soft furnishings and moveable equipment and day-to-day minor maintenance and pay for light, heat, water, telephones and council tax. There are slightly different arrangements for the Queen's house, Edinburgh for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible and where his Department pays for all maintenance costs including minor maintenance. The occupants are responsible for paying for the costs of utilities, council tax, soft furnishings and moveable equipment.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the £250,000 spent on refurbishment of apartments in St. James's palace was spent on royal apartments; and how much was spent on each apartment.

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

The sum of £40,000 was spent on royal apartments at St. James's palace in 1992-93, of which £38,000 was on an apartment for His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales when he moved from Kensington palace. The remaining £2,000 was spent on minor items of maintenance in other royal apartments.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to give permission to British Nuclear Fuels plc for the operation of its waste treatment facility for the encapsulation of plutonium-contaminated material located at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Operation of this facility is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc, subject to meeting the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sensitive Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries included on the restricted list for sensitive technologies or military exports (a) in 1979, and (b) currently; and if he will indicate the reasons for the changes in the list since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992 imposes restrictions on the export of sensitive technologies and military goods. Unless otherwise specified, the export of goods listed in this order is controlled to all destinations.

A list of destinations subject to special export licensing procedures was first announced to Parliament on 19 December 1991, Official Report, columns 230-31, and subsequently published.

Since then, the following changes to that list have been publicised:

the deletion of Hungary as a result of its deproscription by COCOM;

the deletion of the Soviet Union and replacement by individual identification of all territories formerly part of the Soviet Union;

the deletion of Czechoslovakia and replacement by individual identification of the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic following their separation into individual countries on 1 January 1993;

the addition of all territories formerly part of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic were deproscribed by COCOM on 1 January 1994 and this will be reflected in the next published list.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was received from the Government of Saudi Arabia to the official protests following the breaking up of a concert at the international school at Yambu by Saudi police.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Saudi Arabian authorities were very concerned about the interruption of the winter concert at Yanbu international school on 29 November 1993. They have told Her Majesty's embassy in Riyadh that the incident will be investigated.

Ben Needham

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to discover the whereabouts of the toddler Ben Needham following his abduction in Greece in 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since they were informed of Ben Needham's disappearance, consular officials have been in regular contact with the Greek authorities in Athens and Kos, and also with the United Kingdom police. The Greeks have conducted several searches for Ben on Kos. The Greek police and police in several other countries continue to investigate every reported sighting. Ben has not been forgotten.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons he declined the request for a spokesman for the BBC Radio 4 programme "File on Four" on 21 December 1993 relating to Lockerbie.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy on the Lockerbie bombing has been made clear on numerous occasions.

COCOM

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken at the meeting of the Co-ordinating Committee on Multilateral Export Controls held in The Hague on 16 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representatives of the Governments participating in COCOM met in The Hague on 16 November. They agreed that COCOM should be terminated as soon as possible, but no later than 31 March 1994. There was also broad agreement that, at the same time, new arrangements should be established to promote transparency and responsibility in the transfer of armaments and related dual-use goods: the details of the new arrangements remain to be decided.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Goodlad: There are many ministerial statutory powers in relation to local authorities in the United Kingdom. However, none of them, so far as I am aware, specifies that it is the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who is to exercise the power. As regards those powers expressed to be exercisable by "the Secretary of State", it would be most unusual for my right hon. Friend to be the appropriate Secretary of State to do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Tim Smith: Under the present constitutional arrangements for Northern Ireland I have no powers of direction which are specific and exclusive to the local authorities in the Province. Government Departments do, however, have powers under a wide range of legislative provisions to direct and to prescribe by regulations and by other means what action should be taken by district councils. This information is not readily available, however, and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION

Student Awards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out for each local authority in rank order the expenditure on major discretionary awards per head of adult population in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: The available information on discretionary awards made at between 50 per cent. and 100 per cent. of the mandatory rate is given in the table.

[3] Expenditure on sandwich students not available.

[5] Haringey made no full value awards in 1991-92.

No information is available in respect of awards made by the London residuary body.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the expenditure on supplementary allowances to students in receipt of a mandatory award in respect of their dependants; and if he will give a breakdown of such allowances by age group of students and gender of students.

Mr. Boswell: In the 1991-92 academic year, the latest year for which data are available on mandatory awards made by local education authorities, the gross value of the supplementary allowances made in respect of students' dependants was £29·2 million. Supplementary allowances are not payable separately: they form part of the student's total maintenance requirement which may be reduced according to the other resources available to him before his net grant is calculated. Information on the age group and gender of students eligible for dependants' allowances is not collected centrally.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what help is available to assist with the cost of school meals and transport for mature students in receipt of a mandatory award who have children of school age.

Mr. Boswell: Since the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in 1988, only children whose parents are in receipt of income support and those children who are themselves eligible for income support, are entitled to receive free school meals. Although most full-time students are not entitled to social security benefits, including income support, certain students in vulnerable groups, including lone parents and disabled students, may be able to claim benefits. Students' partners are able to claim benefits in their own right.

Local education authorities must provide free transport if they consider it necessary to facilitate a pupil's school attendance, and may help other pupils with their fares. Authorities are not required to make special arrangements for children whose parents are in receipt of a mandatory award.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will reply to the petition on nursery education presented to the House on 19 November 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has noted this petition. It calls for a statutory duty to be laid on local education authorities to provide nursery education on demand. We have repeatedly made clear that the Government's policy is to promote choice and diversity in pre-school provision and to extend access as resources allow. Universal state nursery education would be neither consistent with that policy nor affordable at present.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The former Members of the House of Commons who have been appointed since April 1992 to the bodies for which the Department of National Heritage is responsible, are set out.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The only former British representative member in the European Parliament who has been appointed since April 1992 to the bodies for which the Department of National Heritage is responsible, is:

The Baroness Hooper—trustee, National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside, April 1993 for five years.

Information about the appointment of former MEPs to bodies which are now the responsibility of the Department of National Heritage before the creation of the Department is not held centrally.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many civil servants are employed at his Department to deal with tourism issues; and what is the total annual cost of their salaries.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will arrange for the national register of playing fields to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council is providing a copy of the register's database on diskette to the Library of the House.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list for each civil service grade in his Department (a) the total number of persons employed and (b) the total number of women employed.

Regional Conferences

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will provide a list of the (a) dates, (b) locations and (c) invitees for his current programme of regional conferences with groups involved in Department of National Heritage subjects.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage is holding a series of regional conferences throughout England for bodies involved in DNH subjects in order to support networks and help create new ones, and to identify examples of best practice and innovation for dissemination throughout the country.

The first conference took place on 3 December 1993 for the northern region at St. James's park, Newcastle United Football Club. The next four conferences will take place in 1994 as follows—venues have not all be identified:

18 February
South-west: Rougemont hotel, Exeter
15 April
West Midlands
10 June
Eastern region
22 July
North-west

There will be four more conferences for the south-east, east midlands, Yorkshire and Humberside and London, but the order and timing of those conferences are yet to be established. I would expect the conference series to be completed in spring 1995.

The invitation list will vary from region to region. I attach an illustrative list of organisations likely to be invited. We envisage each conference to be attended by about 100 delegates.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Escort Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of escorting all prisoners in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 12 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of escorting prisoners in the Metropolitan Police area in each of the last five years.

This information is not readily available in the form which you require and could only be obtained in that form at disproportionate cost. In preparation for the contracting out of the court escort and custody service in the Metropolitan Police District, however, estimates were made, in a special exercise, of the costs for the financial years 1994-95; 1995-96 and 1996-97. These estimated costs were £28·468 million for 1994-95; £29·283 million for 1995-96 and £29·816 million for 1996-97. These figures include the cost of custody of prisoners at court, but exclude the costs of escorting and of court custody of category A prisoners.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of escorting category A prisoners in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 12 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of escorting Category A prisoners in the Metropolitan Police district in each of the last five years.

Information in the form requested is not readily available and can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the operation by the Prison Service of grants of home leave for prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Peter Luff, dated 12 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the review of the operation of home leave for prisoners.

The information you request is contained in my letter to the Member for Brecon and Radnor on 17 December (Col. 946).

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Howard: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Doncaster Prison

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a contract has been let for the management of Doncaster prison.

Mr. Howard: On 1 February 1993 it was announced that from 1 April 1993 the Prison Service agency would assume full responsibility for taking forward Government policy on the involvement of the private sector in the management of prisons.

In accordance with EC services directive 92/50 EEC, a notice advertising the requirement for service provision for the operation of Doncaster prison was placed in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Community.

Following the issue of this notice, invitations to tender were issued to eight bidders on 16 July 1993.

After careful consideration of the proposals submitted, the prisons board has decided to award the contract to Premier Prison Services Ltd. A contract will be signed in the next few days, subject to the agreement of satisfactory terms and conditions.

Premier Prison Services Ltd. is a joint venture company owned by Serco Ltd. and Wackenhut Corrections Corporation. Wackenhut Corrections Corporation has experience of running penal establishments in the USA and Australia.

Doncaster is a category B local prison and is due to take its first prisoners by July this year.

Deportation

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the outcome of the joint Home Office/Metropolitan police review of deportation procedures.

Mr. Howard: Following the tragic death of Mrs. Joy Gardner, I put in hand a joint review, with the Metropolitan police, of procedures in cases where the force assists the immigration service in the removal of people from this country under immigration powers. A representative of the Association of Chief Police Officers has also been involved in the review.

Police involvement is required in only a small minority of removal cases. Wherever possible, the departure of people voluntarily or under the supervision of the immigration service is the preferred option. Compulsion is used only as a last resort.

The review is now complete. I am placing a copy of its report in the Library. I have accepted its recommendations as a sensible basis for continued co-operation in this sensitive area.

As a result of the review, in cases involving the removal of someone from the United Kingdom, there will be systematic arrangements for consultation between the immigration service and the police before visits are made to private premises. These will include more informative requests for police assistance, to a standard format; joint planning meetings in potentially difficult cases; and an expectation that the need for a planning meeting will be addressed in every case.

The review addressed the use of special restraint equipment in cases where the person being removed behaves violently or disruptively. The conclusions were that handcuffs should be available where necessary in accordance with ordinary police practice; that the use of additional arm and leg restraints, under strictly controlled conditions, is justified in those cases where the detainee cannot be adequately restrained with handcuffs; but that the use of mouth restraints—which was suspended in August 1993—should not be resumed. I accept these conclusions.

The report of the review also contains recommendations for enhanced training of police officers who act as escorts in such cases.

The police have an important role in assisting the immigration service to remove people in breach of the immigration laws, especially where it proves necessary to arrest such people in the community for detention pending removal. The review found that there was also a proportion of cases where the violent or disorderly nature of the person being removed, or his criminal record, warranted a police escort, but that otherwise trained escorts from suitable private contractors could continue to be used.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what purpose his Department employs the private security firm of Norwest Holst in connection with the M11 link road.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The Home Office does not employ the private security firm of Norwest Holst in connection with the M11 link road.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to his question by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport, the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris), on Tuesday 14 December, Official Report, column 589.

Police and Local Communities

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to improve liaison between the police and local communities in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Under proposals that I expect shortly to bring before Parliament, each police authority will have a duty to consult local people and to publish a local policing plan reflecting local and national goals. In addition, the parish constable scheme, which is being introduced on a pilot basis, will also improve the liaison between the police and the community.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff years have been expended on the Health and Safety Executive's market-testing programme since 1 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive expects its market-testing programme to produce significant savings. However, the initiative is at an early stage and, to date, the number of staff years spent on market testing, net of savings, is 14·5.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct the Health and Safety Executive to place in the Library a copy of the publication "The Cost to the British Economy of Work Accidents and Work-Related Ill Health".

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Yes, copies will be made available when it is published.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Commission's review of regulations has so far highlighted any of the sets of regulations identified by the Secretary of State as early candidates for revocation in his press notice of 20 July 1993 as the source of substantial undue costs to business.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The set of regulations referred to in the press notice were identified by the Health and Safety Executive as seeming to have outlived their usefulness in their contribution to maintaining health and safety standards.

The Government share the Health and Safety Commission's view that allowing outdated and unnecessary legislation to remain on the statute book adds to the complexity and uncertainty faced by business and others, distracts attention from essential requirements and thus reduces the effectiveness of the regulatory regime in maintaining necessary standards of health and safety.

Workstart

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job placements have been achieved by each of the workstart pilot schemes; and in what categories of employment these placements have been found.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 7 December 1993, Official Report, columns 210-11.

The participants are working in a range of employment categories including factory operatives; drivers; sales assistants; clerical assistants; hotel and catering assistants; and labourers.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what anti-displacement measures have been incorporated into the operating procedures of workstart pilots; and how successful they have been.

Miss Widdecombe: All the pilots require employers to sign a declaration stating that they have not dismissed or made redundant any employees directly or indirectly for the purposes of employing the subsidised employee. Each pilot monitors the position of participating employers.

Initial evaluation of Workstart has found no evidence of displacement.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following relevant powers have been identified in the main legislation governing the Department's activities:

Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1958, section 3(1): power to direct local authorities to provide sheltered employment pursuant to section 15 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Employment and Training Act 1973, section 10(2)—as amended by section 45 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993: power to direct local education authorities—in Scotland, education authorities—to provide, or arrange for the provision of, a careers service.

Employment and Training Act 1973, section 10(7)—as amended by section 45 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993: power to direct LEAs to transfer relevant records to providers of the services.

Employment and Training Act 1973, section 12(2): duty of LEAs to provide specified information in such form and at such times as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may direct.

Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, section 18(2): power, by regulations, to make local authorities responsible for the enforcement of the relevant statutory provisions.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The following noble Lords hold or held positions to which they were appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment:

The Baroness Turner of Camden

The Baroness Lockwood of Dewsbury

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I regret that it is not possible on the grounds of disproportionate cost to identify any former members of the European Parliament who may have been or who are members of the quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations sponsored by the Employment Department.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The following two appointments have been made:

Christopher Chope—Health and Safety Commissioner. Annual fee of £1,060 plus an attendance allowance of £105 for each fortnightly meeting attended. Appointed for three years from 1 April 1993. Former Conservative MP.

William S. Hilton—Employer member to the Construction Industry Training Board—CITB; also a member of the CITB administration committee. Eligible for allowance for loss of remunerative time. Appointment for the period November 1984 to April 1990—re-appointed in July 1988. Former Labour MP.

It is not possible on the grounds of disproportionate cost to include details of any appointments to the committees for the employment with people with disabilities, the industrial tribunals, and the employment appeals tribunal, with a total of over 2,250 appointees.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will calculate the appropriate daily volume of natural gas consumption for generation of electricity which is equivalent to the employment of each person employed above or underground in a coal mine of comparable performance to those recently closed as being uneconomic.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Estimated daily production per person, based on the overall average output per manshift in British Coal's mines for the period January to October 1993, was 7·85 tonnes of coal. Assuming an energy content of 237 therms per tonne, and average efficiencies of coal and gas fired power stations of 34 per cent. and 45 per cent. respectively, the equivalent quantity of gas for use in electricity generation would be 1,400 therms or 41 MWh.

Data on output specifically relating to recently closed mines are not held centrally.

TRANSPORT

Lorry Ban, London

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received about the operation of the London night-time lorry ban;

(2) what consultation his Department has undertaken with representatives of the public about the future of the London lorry ban;

(3) if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions in respect of the London lorry ban.

Mr. Norris: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members, from London borough councils and from the Freight Transport Association. Many of these related to the cost of administering the ban and the problems created by the operation of the system of exemption permits. I am considering proposals aimed at reducing the bureaucracy associated with the administration of the ban while maintaining the environmental protection it offers. These will be published shortly. I am arranging to meet the London Boroughs Transport Committee, the Freight Transport Association and the Association of London Authorities shortly.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his plans for the future procurement of trunk road and motorway maintenance work.

Mr. Key: We have no plans to change the current arrangements in the run-up to the establishment of the Highways Agency in April 1994. From then on, it will be one of the tasks of the chief executive to keep the arrangements under review, with a presumption in favour of increasing the opportunities for the private sector to participate in this work.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. MacGregor: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Motorway Charges

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates his Department has made of the impact of motorway charges on serious injuries and fatalities to vehicle occupants, cyclists and pedestrians.

Mr. Key: Motorways are among our safest roads. A key objective of motorway charging is to provide another source of finance to expand the network more quickly. This will reduce the diversion to other roads which would otherwise occur as the motorway network became more congested.

The Green Paper "Paying For Better Motorways"—Cm. 2200—considered in some detail the extent to which charging might of itself cause diversion to other roads. The research summarised in the document suggested that charging at levels well below those used in other countries—as was suggested in the Green Paper—would cause only modest diversion.

The overall effects of charging on road safety would depend on a number of factors. These include the timing of introduction; the overall charge levels and any variations in charging between different roads and at different times of day; and the practical effects of charging in terms of facilitating quicker expansion of the motorway network. Such issues require further exploration. In the meantime, there is no basis for assessing in detail the likely effects of charging on road safety.

London Underground (Power Failure)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that there is no repetition of the power failure affecting the London Underground on 24 November.

Mr. Norris: I have asked London Transport for an urgent, full report on the circumstances of the power failure, to include what actions it proposes to ensure that there is no recurrence.

SCOTLAND

Health Board Staff

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff who had been sacked but who were threatening legal action were re-employed on the same salary in each of the last 10 years in each health board in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many non-executive members of each NHS trust, which has such members, have a background in health care.

Mr. Stewart: The number of non-executive members, including chairmen, of each NHS trust, who have a background in health care, is as shown in the table:

Ayrshire and Arran Community Healthcare NHS Trust	2
Caithness and Sutherland Hospitals NHS Trust	4

Prisons

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many disciplinary offences were committed in each Scottish prison in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have asked Mr. E. W. Frizzell, the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, to arrange for a reply to be given to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. John McFall, dated 12January 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of disciplinary offences committed in each Scottish prison in each of the last five years.

Data on the number of disciplinary offences were first collated on a financial year basis in 1989-90 and information for the four years since then is given in the table.

Differences between establishments and over time should be treated with caution, as there may be variations in the way in which some establishments record disciplinary offences, and in the prisoner mix at certain establishments during the period concerned. It should be noted also that in 1992-93 the average daily prisoner population was 5,395 compared with 4,886 in 1989-90.

Cancer

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the trend of death from cancer; what assessment he has made as to its causes; and if he will increase funding for cancer research programmes.

Mr. Stewart: The table shows the number of deaths from cancer for the zero to 64 age group and for persons of all ages in the period 1975 to 1992.

	Age 0-64		All ages
Year	Males	Females	Males	Females
1975	2,572	2,249	7,056	6,011
1976	2,579	2,305	7,165	6,250
1977	2,546	2,272	6,902	6,286
1978	2,573	2,385	7,158	6,566
1979	2,450	2,350	7,357	6,550
1980	2,374	2,248	7,194	6,501
1981	2,324	2,213	7,298	6,639
1982	2,455	2,249	7,315	6,762
1983	2,476	2,274	7,325	6,885
1984	2,386	2,398	7,376	6,923
1985	2,417	2,247	7,420	7,035
1986	2,345	2,199	7,443	7,091
1987	2,349	2,158	7,563	7,087
1988	2,332	2,156	7,518	7,202
1989	2,179	2,220	7,593	7,324
1990	2,219	2,163	7,608	7,349
1991	2,205	2,040	7,589	7,287
1992	2,133	2,115	7,796	7,336

Although there has been an increase in the number of deaths of both men and women of all ages, the trend in relation to the under-65s is downwards. This is encouraging in view of the target of a 15 per cent. reduction in cancer mortality in that age group between 1986 and the year 2000.

Mortality rates associated with some childhood and young adult cancers have declined substantially as a result of advances in chemotherapy. There has also been a modest decline in mortality associated with those cancers which are amenable to treatment. Mortality rates for cancers which become symptomatic only at an advanced stage have remained constant. The main increase in cancer-related mortality in women is lung cancer. In men, the most significant increase has been in the incidence of cancer of the prostate. The causes of all types of cancer are however constantly monitored, primarily through the Scottish cancer registration system.

Funding of cancer research remains high on our list of priorities, and has been increased significantly by the establishment of the Scottish cancer therapy network, which aims to ensure that all patients suffering from cancer in Scotland receive the best and most up-to-date treatment available.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what date he estimates hospital waiting lists will be (a) one year or less and (b) six months or less.

Mr. Stewart: At 30 September 1993 less than 9 per cent. of those on in-patient and day case waiting lists had waited more than 12 months—down from 15 per cent. in 1991. All health boards are working to ensure that no one waits longer than 12 months by April 1997, and some are on course to achieve this significantly sooner.

Pain Relief Clinics

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many pain relief clinics there are in each health board area;

(2) what is the greatest travelling distance that a patient could have in order to attend a pain relief clinic;

(3) what is the current average waiting time for a first appointment at each pain relief clinic;

(4) what is his policy on the provision of pain relief clinics;

(5) what plans he has to reduce waiting times for first appointment at pain relief clinics;

(6) how many specialists are employed in pain relief clinics in 1988 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Stewart: The table identifies, within health board areas, those hospitals which hold pain relief clinics—which are recorded as anaesthetic clinics. The table also lists the average waiting times experienced by those patients who had a first appointment at these clinics during the six months to 30 September 1993.

It is for health boards as purchasers of care to secure from provider units or trusts an appropriate level of pain relief services based on assessment of local need. It is for health boards too to take suitable action on waiting times in light of their own targets. Information on the number of specialists employed in pain relief clinics, and on distances travelled by patients to these clinics, is not held centrally.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 888, on the dismissal of Laurence Peterken; whether officials of the Scottish Office were consulted by Greater Glasgow health board, or its chairman, at any stage before 2 November.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Officials held discussions with representatives of the health board on a number of occasions about the board's proposals for a severance package for Mr. Peterken but were not consulted by the board about the proposal to dismiss him.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the reason for the time taken between his views being sought on 5 November 1993, on the appointment of Mr. Peterken to the post of special project director and his being offered the post on 12 November 1993.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: There were a number of exchanges between the Department's lawyers and lawyers acting for Mr. Peterken as to the form and content of the contract of employment.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions officers of the central legal office of the Scottish Office had discussions with Mr. W. S. Fyfe concering the proposed removal of Mr. Laurence Peterken from his post.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Central Legal Office, which exists to provide independent legal advice to the national health service in Scotland, is part of the Common Services Agency, not of the Scottish Office. I understand officers of the Central Legal Office had frequent discussions with Mr. Fyfe concerning Mr. Peterken's position.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which persons were involved in the appraisal of performance of Mr. Laurence Peterken for the year to 31 March 1993.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Mr Peterken's performance for the year to 31 March 1993 was appraised by the former chairman of Greater Glasgow health board, Sir Thomas Thomson, who was in office for the period under review. This appraisal was supplemented slightly by the then chairman, Mr. W. S. Fyfe, who took up office on 1 April 1993 and submitted by him to the management executive for the NHS in Scotland. The appraisal was reviewed by the acting chief executive for the NHS in Scotland following discussions with the former NHS chief executive.

Common Services Agency

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has sought an estimate of the cost of commissioning external consultants to review the operation of the Common Services Agency.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Costs

Mr. Gapes: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the cost in terms of (a) staff, (b) lighting, (c) heating, (d) catering and (e) other costs of operating Parliament on its current hours; and what would be the estimated cost should the recommendations of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House relating to hours of sitting be implementing in full.

Mr. Beith: The costs of the House of Commons on the present basis of operations are set out in the 15th annual report of the House of Commons Commission—House of Commons Paper No. 820 of Session 1992-93. It is not practicable to provide an estimate of changes in these costs if the recommendations of the Jopling report were to be implemented in full. However, an indication of the additional staff costs of sittings after 10.30 pm was given in response to a question by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 22 October 1993, Official Report, column 347.

Mr. Luff: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the cost per hour of the House sitting beyond midnight.

Mr. Beith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 22 October 1993, Official Report, column 347. The rate at which additional costs are incurred when the House sits after midnight is broadly the same as the rate at which costs are incurred when the House sits after 10.30 pm.

Posting Boxes

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many posting boxes there are (a) within that part of the Palace of Westminster under House of Commons control and (b) in the outbuildings in the parliamentary estates; how many have been replaced in the last five years; why this has been necessary; and what was the cost (i) within the Palace of Westminster and (ii) in the other buildings.

Mr. Ray Powell: There are 18 posting boxes within that part of the Palace of Westminster occupied by the House of Commons and nine boxes in the parliamentary outbuildings. During the past five years 14 of the boxes within the palace have been replaced, having become unserviceable through age, and inadequate for the volume of letters and packages they were required to accommodate. The new boxes, produced to designs approved by the appropriate Committees of the House, were provided by the Post Office in 1992 at no cost to the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Quota Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she proposes introducing to ensure that sheep do not die of malnutrition in any part of the United Kingdom as a direct result of loss of subsidy eligibility arising from the sheep quota scheme; and if she will immediately announce an emergency aid package to assist all farmers caught in such a dilemma.

Mr. Jack: There is no evidence that the introduction of quotas will result in farmers keeping animals that they will be unable to feed. We have already allocated some 18·7 million sheep quota units. In addition, some 780,000 quota units will be available for distribution from the 1993 national reserve and a special "pool" of quota set up for those who claimed premium for the first time under the 1992 sheep annual premium scheme. These are very substantial levels of quota allocations and will ensure, in general, that producers have access to the premium payments they need. Sheep producers also receive aid from other sources. For example, those in less favoured areas are eligible under the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme. Producers wishing to acquire extra quota can do so under the flexible transfer and lease arrangements we have negotiated. They can also sell any stock which is surplus to their requirements.

Diseased Cattle

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will instigate immediate checks on the health of all cattle and sheep entering the United Kingdom from whatever source.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 1 December 1993, Official Report, columns 590-91, about checks on imported cattle. Similar measures are applied to imported sheep.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will raise with the European Council of Ministers the resurgence in the United Kingdom of brucellosis from warble fly infested cattle, the risk to human health and necessary measures to eliminate such diseases.

Mr. Soames: The incidence of warble fly in imported cattle has been taken up vigorously with the veterinary authorities of the countries of origin concerned and notified to the EC Commission. Although the cases of brucellosis last autumn affected imported cattle as well as indigenous animals, investigations have not revealed conclusive evidence to confirm that the primary source of infection was an imported animal.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will take action to bar the free movement of cattle and sheep into the United Kingdom from any country reporting warble fly infestation.

Mr. Soames: No. All cattle imported into the United Kingdom, with the exception of those imported direct to a slaughterhouse for immediate slaughter, must be treated with an approved warble fly preparation within 24 hours of arrival at the premises of destination. Sheep are not susceptible to warble fly infestation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers govern the restriction of free movement within the European Community of animals which are a danger to public health.

Mr. Soames: Controls to prevent the spread of disease, including diseases transmissible to humans, as a result of trade in live animals within the Community are laid down in the following EC directives:

Council directive 64/432/EEC on animal health problems affecting intra-Community trade in bovine animals and swine;

Council directive 90/426/EEC on health problems governing the movement of equidae and their import from third countries;

Council directive 90/539/EEC on animal health conditions governing intra-Community trade in, and imports from third countries of, poultry and hatching eggs;

Council directive 91/68/EEC on animal health conditions governing intra-Community trade in ovine and caprine animals;

Council directive 92/65/EEC laying down animal health requirements governing trade in and imports into the Community of animals, semen, ova and embryos not subject to animal health requirements laid down in specific Community rules referred to in annex A(1) to directive 90/425/EEC;

Council diretive 92/117/EEC concerning measures for protection against specified zoonoses and specified zoonotic agents in animals and products of animal origin in order to prevent outbreaks of food-borne infections and intoxications.

Rabies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to ensure that Britain remains free of rabies.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) by my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) on 16 June 1992, Official Report, columns 455-56.

Milk

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of whether the national interest and that of milk producers would be better served by the bulk of our milk being handled by processors who have a proven track record in the development of new products instead of by Milk Marque, the successor of the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales will have to have regard to all the circumstances when deciding whether to approve the Milk Marketing Board's reorganisation scheme. One of the main purposes of ending the milk marketing scheme is to allow producers to decide to whom and on what terms to sell their milk. I look forward to when they will be free to do so.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the December Fisheries Council meeting.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Fisheries Council of 20 and 21 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Jack: I represented the United Kingdom together with the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Scotland, my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro).

The December Fisheries Council is the one at which total allowable catches—TACs—for the EC, and member states' quota shares of those TACs, are settled for the forthcoming year. Stocks are generally under pressure and efforts against them need to be reduced. However, within that overall strategy, on which decisions were reached by the Council without a vote, we obtained the best possible outcome compatible with the scientific advice. For some stocks, fishermen will have better prospects in 1994. In particular, they should be pleased with the large share of the North Sea nephrops TAC allocated to the United Kingdom; a significant increase in the availability of haddock in the North sea and of flatfish in the Irish sea; agreement to "mackerel flexibility" so that our fishermen can catch this species in the North sea between October and December at the same level as last year; the 40 per cent. increase in the United Kingdom's quota for cod at north Norway. In the light of the scientific advice, it would have been damaging to the stocks, and therefore not in the long-term interest of the fishermen themselves, to maintain the previous quotas for all stocks, but I negotiated the best obtainable outcome.

The Council also considered adjustments to the rules under which the Spanish and Portuguese vessels fish in Community waters. As a result of the strong line which we and others have been taking in the negotiation, the presidency produced a compromise document in an endeavour to find a way forward to an agreement. This document replaced the Commission's "blank cheque" approach under which we would have released the Iberians from all constraints without knowing what would go in their place. It represented a workmanlike first step in reflecting our key interest in ensuring satisfactory safeguards for all the areas around our shores and provides a useful basis for considering the detailed arrangements which will apply after 1995. I pressed for a decision to be reached quickly on the basis of the presidency's document so that the uncertainty facing our fishermen could be removed. However, agreement was not possible at this meeting. The Council agreed to continue work, on the basis of the Belgian presidency's proposal, under the forthcoming Greek presidency.

At my request, the Council considered, and adopted unanimously, an EC-Canada fisheries agreement which establishes satisfactory arrangements for managing complicated and sensitive fisheries.

There were two issues before the Council that have been concerning fishermen and environmentalists. The first was industrial fishing. In response to pressure that I have been applying for several months, the Commission will establish a working group. This will bring together marine ecologists and fisheries biologists to study the implications for the marine ecosystem of fishing in general and industrial fishing in particular. The group will also set priorities for future research work on the effect these have on the marine ecosystem, sea birds and cetaceans. There will be a report to the Council before the end of April 1994. The second issue concerns drift nets. There was no proposal before the Council for an extension of the derogation allowing limited use of long drift nets and no decision on this was taken. However, the Council asked the Commission to prepare a report on drift netting in the light of the best scientific advice available. A proposal could be made only if it were possible to demonstrate scientifically the absence of any ecological risk.

On the market situation, the Council noted that minimum import prices could not form a permanent instrument of market management. They could apply only in exceptional circumstances and the general range of minimum import prices would expire at the end of December. However, for salmon the Commission agreed to review the situation during January to see whether the minimum import prices for salmon should continue beyond 31 January 1994.

The Council agreed a regulation to implement the financial instrument for fisheries guidance, which amalgamates, with some amendments, the regulations dealing with fisheries structures and with marketing and processing. I voted against this new measure because some of its provisions did not provide value for money. The Government will carefully consider which provisions to implement in the United Kingdom bearing in mind the need to maintain an efficient industry while balancing fishing capacity and resources.

A Council decision concerning the objectives and detailed rules for restructuring the Community fisheries sector was adopted. This formalises the Council's endorsement in 1992 of the horizontal targets for reducing fishing effort contained in the 1993-96 multi-annual guidance programmes. I abstained, since the introduction of more binding targets goes beyond the requirement in the basic regulation for the Council to set objectives. The Netherlands also abstained; Greece voted against.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the powers she has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which she prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which she may exercise these powers.

Mr. Jack: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Set-aside

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the conditions that can be placed on land that has been set aside under the arable area payments scheme to improve or protect the environment and improve recreational opportunities; what plans she has to impose new conditions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The conditions for the management of set-aside under the arable area payments scheme are given in the explanatory guide to the scheme for 1993-94. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Farmers can obtain further advice on how to manage their set-aside land for specific environmental objectives from the arable area payments leaflet AR14, a copy of which has also been placed in the Library. In addition free advice on environmental matters is available to farmers through the ADAS agency.

The proposed countryside access scheme, which we plan to introduce later this year, should increase the recreational potential of set-aside by offering farmers incentive payments for providing public access to suitable non-rotational set-aside land. In addition, following pressure from the United Kingdom, the Agriculture Council has asked the Commission to undertake a study of the relationship between set-aside and arable land withdrawn from production under EC forestry and agri-environment regulations. We will continue to press for such land to be allowed to qualify as set-aside under the arable area payments scheme.

Press Officers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press officers her Department has employed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The number of press officers, including the chief press officer, employed by MAFF in each year since 1983 is as follows:

Year		Year
1983	6	1989	17
1984	6	1990	28
1985	6	1991	17

Year		Year
1986	6	1992	[1]7
1987	6	1993	7
1988	[1]7

[1] not including two press officers working specifically for ADAS.
[2] (as [1]above) and including an extra press officer to cover the introduction and implementation of the Food Safety Act 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Power (Privatisation)

15. Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to discuss privatisation with the chairman of Nuclear Power.

25. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet the chairman of Nuclear Power to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: I meet the chairman of Nuclear Electric regularly to discuss a range of issues.

Aerospace Industry

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will visit the aerospace industry in Lancashire to discuss the implications of the Budget.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a visit.

Payment of Debt

17. Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to bring forward proposals to deal with the late payment of debts.

Mr. McLoughin: On 30 November my Department published the consultation paper; it considers possible measures to address late payment including legislation for a statutory right to interest and a British standard on prompt payment as well as inviting other ideas. Responses to the consultation paper are invited by 31 March 1994.

Any measures arising from the consultation process will be implemented as soon as practicable after that date. In the meantime, the Government will continue to address the problem of late payment through the range of initiatives which have already been introduced.

20. Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on proposals to tackle late payment of commercial debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Representations have been received from individual small businesses and from other interested organisations seeking action to reduce the incidence of late payment. They have proposed a variety of possible measures, all of which have received careful consideration.

My Department is currently consulting on possible new measures to address the problem of late payment through the consultation paper "Late Payment of Commercial Debt". Responses are invited by 31 March 1994. In the meantime, the Government will continue to address the problem of late payment through the range of initiatives which have already been introduced.

Pit Closures

18. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of the mining supplies industry to discuss the impact of the colliery closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: I met the Association of British Mining Equipment Companies—ABMEC—in May 1993 and I have had frequent contact with individual companies in the industry since then. An increasing number of mining equipment companies are in contact with the Department to take advantage of the mining equipment company scheme which I announced in August.

Recycled Materials

19. Mr. Marland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action has been taken over the past year to encourage industry to make greater use of recycled materials.

Mr. McLoughlin: The main reason manufacturers use recycled materials is to gain competitive advantage.

We have seen levels of United Kingdom recycling increase in recent years. Between 1991 and 1992 the tonnages of recycled plastics rose by almost 20 per cent., of glass containers by almost 20 per cent. and of waste and paper board by 5 per cent.

We are looking to industry's response to the producer responsibility challenge to increase the use of recycled materials.

Investment Fund Companies (Insurance Policies)

21. Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to monitor the performance of investment fund companies related to life, pension and endowment policies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department undertakes the prudential supervision of companies providing life, pension and endowment policies in accordance with the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and associated regulations. Responsibility for regulating the marketing of such products rests with the Securities and Investments Board and the relevant self-regulatory organisations under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Interbuild

22. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many officials from the ECGD were in attendance at the overseas trade services stand at Interbuild to advise on export strategy.

Mr. Needham: The Government were represented at this private sector exhibition by officials from DTI's overseas trade services and the Department of the Environment. ECGD was not present. The exhibition was geared primarily to goods and services sold on short terms of payment. These would be covered by private insurers rather than ECGD.

Technology Transfer

23. Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to establish a mechanism for technology transfer to help small and medium-sized enterprises increase their competitiveness.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department operates a number of technology transfer programmes whose main aim is to improve the competitiveness of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Ferranti International

24. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings he has had with the receivers of Ferranti International about the assistance his Department can offer to preserve the high skill and high technological capacity of the company.

Mr. Sainsbury: Officials of my Department have had a number of meetings with the receivers.

Electrical Appliances (Plugs)

26. Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects legislation to be implemented requiring all new electrical appliances to be sold with a plug.

Mr. McLoughlin: The European Commission is still seeking clarification on a number of points which is delaying the progress of the proposed regulations. I am hopeful that these matters will be resolved shortly.

Small Businesses

27. Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on measures he plans to assist small businesses.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government will continue to encourage small businesses by fostering a stable economic climate at home and by encouraging and promoting competition in world markets. Both directly and through the training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies, the Government will continue to make available a wide range of high-quality support and assistance which will be further enhanced by the development of a national network of business links.

38. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of small businesses to discuss their future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade met representatives of the Institute of Directors when he spoke at their annual dinner on 23 November 1993.

My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for small firms has regular meetings with all the major small firms organisations to discuss a range of issues.

Foam Filling

28. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further representations he has received from firms manufacturing foam and foam-filled furniture about the dangers of low-quality imports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Three identifiable businesses responding to the recent consultation on the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, as part of my Department's deregulation initiative review alleged that some imported foam-filled furniture does not comply with the regulations. The regulations apply to all domestic upholstered furniture intended for supply to the United Kingdom market, and, accordingly, local authority trading standards officers, who have a day-to-day responsibility for enforcement of the legislation, have powers to deal with any non-complying furniture, whatever its country of manufacture.

32. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to protect United Kingdom consumers from dangerous foreign foam-filled furniture.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to protect United Kingdom consumers from dangers arising from imported foam-filled furniture.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Furniture and Furnishings Regulations (Fire) (Safety) 1988 ban the use of standard polyurethane foam and cite a series of flammability tests designed to increase the fire resistence of upholstered furniture. These regulations apply to all domestic upholstered furniture intended for supply to the United Kingdom market and, accordingly, local authority trading standards officers, who have day-to-day responsibility for enforcement of the legislation, have powers to deal with any non-complying furniture, whatever its country of manufacture.

Manufacturing

29. Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in manufacturing investment in real terms since 1978-79.

Mr. Heseltine: In the latest financial year—1992-93—manufacturing investment was 8 per cent. lower than in 1978-79 but 23 per cent. higher than in 1981-82, a similar point in the economic cycle.

31. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he intends to introduce to expand the manufacturing base of the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Sainsbury: All the Government's policies are focused on improving the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry, both manufacturing and services.

Chief Scientist

30. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement explaining the circumstances surrounding the departure of the chief scientist on 1 December.

Mr. Heseltine: The DTI's chief adviser on science and technology will be leaving the Department at the end of February 1994 for career reasons. He has done an excellent job, including making a major contribution to the refocusing of the DTI's innovation policy, and to the White Paper on science, engineering and techology published last May.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee

33. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many loans have been made between April and December 1993 under the small firms loan guarantee scheme; what was the total grant involved; and what are the comparable figures for the corresponding period in 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number and value of loans guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in the period April to September 1993 was 1,384 loans to a value of £55·33 million. In the same period in 1992, the figures were 1,266 loans and £27·74 million.

Figures for October to December 1993 are not currently available.

Scientific Research

34. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he proposes to make in his Department's support for scientific research.

Mr. Heseltine: I do not envisage any further changes to my Department's recently refocused science and technology policy. We will be concentrating resources on improving the climate for innovation and facilitating access to technology and best practice while reducing support for technology development. Assistance for research and development in small and medium-sized firms will continue through the small firms merit award for research and technology and the support for products under research programmes, as will support for collaborations between industry and acadamia through the LINK scheme and for European collaborations, including EUREKA.

Telecommunications

35. Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the European Community to deregulate telecommunications.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Telecommunications Council agreed on 16 June 1993 that voice telephony services will be liberalised by 1 January 1998, with an additional derogation period of no more than five years for Spain, Portugal, Greece and Ireland and, if justified, no more than two years for Luxembourg. The Commission will produce, by 1995, a green paper on the liberalisation of network infrastructure. The Commission presented on 7 December its proposals for the liberalisation of telecommunications services provided over satellites.

39. Ms Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken to help the British telecommunications industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government's policies on telecommunications remain as set out in the 1991 White Paper "Competition and Choice: Telecommunications Policy for the 1990s" Cm 1461. These policies have already brought great benefits to domestic and business subscribers, and are already developing a healthy and competitive telecoms industry in Britain able to take on the best in the world.

Latin America

36. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on Government support for exports to Latin America.

Mr. Needham: Latin America offers major trading opportunities for the United Kingdom, as the performance of United Kingdom companies with the support of DTI export services has shown. United Kingdom exports to Latin America have increased by 26 per cent. during the past 12 months. Ministers are reinforcing these efforts by visiting Latin American countries with teams of business men. The President of the Board of Trade, for example, visited Mexico and Argentina in June 1993 with senior businessmen. In addition, export promoters are being appointed to cover each of the key Latin American markets and additional resources have been put into the DTI market branch.

Gas Pipelines

37. Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the proliferation of offshore gas pipelines.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's policy on proliferation of offshore oil and gas pipelines is summarised in paragraph 3.2. of "Guidance Notes on Procedures for Regulating Oil and Gas Field Developments" published last December. I have arranged for a copy of the document to be placed in the Library of the House.

Gas Industry

40. Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will make an announcement on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the gas industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Decisions on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas were announced on 21 December. The two main decisions taken are that:

(i) British Gas should separate fully the operation of its trading and transportation businesses, but will not be required to divest trading;

(ii) British Gas's tariff monopoly will end in April 1996, and competition will be phased in over the two years to April 1998.

A copy of the full text of the announcement has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number and proportion of homes connected to gas mains supply for all standard regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: British Gas has estimated that the number and proportion of households using gas for each British Gas region in 1992 was as follows:

Households using Gas in 1992

Region	Number (thousands)	Percentage of all households
Scotland	1,270	67
Northern	960	81
North Western	2,330	91
North Eastern	1,130	87
East Midlands	1,820	83
West Midlands	1,720	83
Wales	820	74
East Anglia	1,440	74
North Thames	2,020	92
South Eastern	2,090	86
South	1,300	81
South Western	1,080	67
Great Britain	17,980	81
Northern Ireland	[1]—	[1]—

Region	Number (thousands)	Percentage of all households
United Kingdom	17,980	79

[1] No public gas mains supply.

Deregulation Task Forces

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who were the members of his Department's deregulation task forces; and what criteria determined their selection to participate in the deregulation review.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A complete list of deregulation task force members has been placed in the Library of the House. There were no formal selection criteria. The chairmen were invited to participate as people of standing within their sector and they chose members who represented various groups within those sectors.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report and the recommendations of the deregulation task forces will be published.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The recommendations of the deregulation task forces will be published shortly. The task forces will not be publishing a formal report.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of his Department's deregulation task forces investigation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The salaries of the civil servants in the task force support unit and related administrative costs amounted to £165,000.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who advised the deregulation task forces on matters relating to health and safety at work during the course of their investigation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Matters relating to health and safety at work were considered by a cross-sectoral group of task force members which invited and received submissions from a wide range of interested parties including individual companies, trade associations, consultants, voluntary organisations and schools. The group also had extensive discussions with the Health and Safety Executive.

Objective 2 Status

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas included in the Government's application to the EC for objective 2 status.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) on 28 October, Official Report, columns 723-24.

Export Credit Guarantees (Iraq)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what export credit guarantees were made available to Iraq for each year since 1979; and if there were changes of policy covering the export credit guarantees to Iraq over this time period.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom credit facilities for Iraq prior to 1983 were limited to basic credit insurance for cash or short-term credit transactions. From 1983 to 1988, under a series of inter-governmental financial protocols, the Export Credits Guarantee Department also supported the financing of United Kingdom contracts on medium-term credit involving the sale of capital goods, services, pharmaceuticals and humanitarian products. From 1985 onwards, of the overall protocol amounts, a limit of 20 per cent. was applied to medium-term credit for defence-related goods. ECGD came off cover for all types of transaction with Iraq in 1990.

The value of business with Iraq conducted on cash or short credit terms supported by ECGD since 1979 was:

	£ million
1979	113
1980	170
1981	292
1982	589
1983	461
1984	140
1985	161
1986	208
1987	55
1988	48
1989	97
1990	156

The amount of medium-term finance available under the protocol arrangements was:

	£ million
1983	[1]250
1984	[1]250
	[2]25
1985	[2]50
1986	[2]50
1987	[3]100
1988	[3]280
	[2]60

[1] Capital Goods and Projects
[2] Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products
[3] Capital Goods, Services and Projects

The finance available under these protocols was not fully taken up by Iraq. ECGD's actual exposure was therefore less than the figures given above.

Departmental Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a list of the individuals who since 1985 have acted as inspectors for his Department but whose conduct has been criticised by their professional bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As far as I am aware disciplinary proceedings by a professional body have only been brought against two former inspectors, Mr. B. R. Addison, FCA and Mr. B. Worth, FCA. The proceedings, brought by the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, were commenced after the inspectors were appointed. Those against Mr. Worth have not yet been concluded.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the earliest date that the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield can begin stage 5 commissioning.

Mr. Eggar: The authorisations granted pursuant to the decision of my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will come into force on 17 January. Progress in commissioning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant beyond that date is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc, subject to meeting the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take to ensure that the successor body to the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation will receive sufficient funding to continue the protection of the social welfare of miners and ex-miners and their families after privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is consulting British Coal and the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation about the future provision of miners' social welfare services.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of collieries that will be privatised on the restructuring date specified in the Coal Industry Bill.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 January 1994]: It is intended to offer to the private sector all British Coal collieries which are currently operational.

Life Funds

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring his Department undertakes of the life funds of any insurance companies beyond the annual returns made by such companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department has powers, under the Insurance Companies Act 1982, to require insurance companies to furnish it, at specified times and intervals, with information about specified matters. These powers are used, as appropriate, in the light of the circumstances in individual cases. In addition, the Department maintains contact with companies through a programme of visits.

Newspaper Distribution

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect on newsagents of proposals to allow non-traditional outlets to supply and sell national newspapers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In deciding on the appropriate action to take following pubication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission—MMC—report on the supply of national newspapers and the Director General of Fair Trading's advice on the report, I considered carefully the potential impact of my proposed action on existing retailers. I concluded that it was in the overall public interest to increase the level of competition and availability of newspapers, whether from traditional or non-traditional outlets.

I therefore announced on 9 December my intention to lay an order before the House to prohibit certain restrictions on the supply of newspapers which the MMC found to be against the public interest. A notice of my intention to lay this order was published on 21 December. It indicated the nature of the provisions the order is to contain and invited written representations from interested parties likely to be affected by the order. These will include existing newsagents and their representative organisations.

Company Directors

Mr. Loyden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many unfit company directors were disqualified in 1992-93.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: During 1992-93 651 unfit directors were disqualified under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Ministerial Powers

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the powers he has under public legislation to give directions to local authorities or otherwise require them to act in a way which he prescribes, giving in each case the legislative authority under which he may exercise these powers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Post Offices

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices in built-up areas (a) do and (b) do not have collection points for undelivered mail; how many such points have been closed in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that post offices in built up areas do not have collection points for undelivered mail. Such collection points are, however, provided in built-up areas at Royal Mail delivery offices which all have either a morning or an all-day facility for collecting mail which it has not been possible to deliver.

Trade (South-East Asia)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specific steps he is taking to encourage the growth of trade between the United Kingdom and the countries of south-east Asia and the Pacific area.

Mr. Needham: As part of my export initiative, we are recruiting 20 export promoters from industry to spearhead our drive to identify business opportunities in the Asia Pacific region and to work with United Kingdom businesses to follow them up. I expect all to be in place by the end of this financial year; those who have been working with us for several months are already producing business for Britain.

We are developing strategic country market plans for 14 of our main markets in the region. These will help us to focus all of our resources—including the export promoters, additional desk officers in DTI, staff in our posts in the region, and our business advisers—towards those areas where we have identified the most promising opportunities for British firms.

We are undertaking a vigorous, proactive programme of ministerial visits—usually with accompanying businessmen—inward and outward missions, seminars and meetings with individual firms in order to develop our links with Governments and commercial organisations in the Asia Pacific region; identify market opportunities for trade and investment; and bring these to the notice of British industry and commerce.

We have also increased the export credit cover available for exports to the region, and we are providing financial support under the aid and trade provision to help firms bidding for major projects in eligible countries in the region.

The result of this programme of activities in what is probably the most rapidly developing area of the world has been an increase in British exports in the period January to September 1993 of 26 per cent.[1] over the corresponding period in 1992. Nevertheless, much remains to be done to build on this encouraging performance and I am confident that the measures I have introduced will lead to British firms winning still more business in the Asia Pacific region in the future.

[1] United Kingdom exports to Japan, China, Hong Kong, Korea, Taiwan, South-East Asia, Australia and New Zealand.

Konver Grants

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of jobs which will be created by projects supported with Konver grants.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 December 1993]: Konver grants fund feasibility studies to help firms diversify, encourage the development of SMEs, provided for some rehabilitation of military sites and grants for training for people directly affected by changes in defence activity.

It is not possible to give an estimate of the number of jobs which will be created by Konver grants.

Honduras (Armaments Trade)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions are planned on trade in armaments with Honduras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The export of armaments to Honduras is prohibited without a licence issued under the Export of Goods (Order) 1992. I have no plans to alter this restriction. Each application for an export licence is considered on its merits, with particular regard being paid to the criteria for arms exports agreed at the Luxembourg and Lisbon European Councils in June 1991 and June 1992.

Landmines

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the export of landmines.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The Government supported the resolution of the United Nations General Assembly urging a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations. Licences for the export of such mines will not be issued. We do not, however, consider that self-destructing or self-neutralising mines and mines used in accordance with protocol II of the 1981 weaponry convention pose such dangers. Applications for licences to export these forms of mine are subject to close scrutiny.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the Government's responses to European Commission green paper "The Future of Community Initiatives under the Structural Funds".

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 December 1993]: Yes.

Health and Safety

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence there is for the assertion that health and safety consultants are promoting bogus goods and services, in paragraph 44 of the efficiency scrutiny report commissioned by the President of the Board of Trade, "Review of the Implementation and Enforcement of EC Law in the UK: Health and Safety"; and what action he proposes to take to prevent this practice in future.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Consultants may have a role to play where companies are unable to cope from within their existing resources. I have received, however, a number of letters from individuals and organisations indicating that some consultants, for their own commercial reasons, may have misled companies about the complexity of regulations or their requirements. In many such cases, companies could have carried out the work themselves or sought free advice from the HSE or other enforcement agents. Where HSE becomes aware of consultants making misleading claims, it has been raising the matter directly with those concerned.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many letters complaining about the burden of health and safety legislation he received between 1 June and 31 December 1992;

(2) what evidence his Department had prior to setting up the deregulation task forces that health and safety legislation constituted an unnecessary burden on business.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Actual figures are not readily available. But I can confirm that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I received a significant number of representations between July and December 1992, prior to the creation of the task forces. These were from various organisations and individuals complaining about the burdens of specific areas of health and safety legislation on business. Such complaints have increased considerably in recent months.

It is not the Government view that all health and safety legislation constitutes an unnecessary burden on business. The current review of legislation is concerned with examining whether scope exists for improving the efficiency of the existing regulatory regime without impairing necessary safety standards.

EC Industry Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Industry Council of 17 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Industry Council on 17 December agreed a package of six steel state aid proposals in four member states—Germany, Italy, Spain and Portugal—under article 95 of the ECSC treaty. These involve capacity reductions of 4·6 million tonnes and state aid of some 7 becu, and at the United Kingdom's insistence incorporate significant improvements to the original proposals. These include a tightening up of the detailed requirements for four of the cases—EKO Stahl, ILVA, CSI, Sidenor—more rigorous monitoring to ensure that conditions built into the individual cases are met—with a role for the Council as well as the Commission—and that the aid is used solely to facilitate restructuring and not to allow unfair pricing. There is explicit recognition that no further aid will be provided to these companies if viability is not achieved. A number of the proposals agreed involve privatisation of the companies concerned, which should help to ensure that future operations are carried out on a proper commercial basis.

This package of proposals was agreed unanimously as required under article 95 ECSC. This requirement for unanimity enabled us to secure significant improvements to the proposals discussed, but not agreed, at the 18 November Council.

EC Internal Market Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Internal Market Council of 16 December, indicating the voting record of each member state on each item and where no formal votes were taken.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I attended the third Internal Market Council of the Belgian presidency in Brussels on 16 December 1993.

The following were adopted as "A" points: regulations opening and providing for the administration of community tariff quotas; regulations temporarily suspending totally or partially the autonomous duties of the common customs tariff for certain fishery products; a resolution by the Council on young drivers; and an aid to shipbuilding.

There was a debate on the Commission's strategic programme for the internal market. The United Kingdom, France and Germany stressed the importance of deregulation and subsidiarity. The Council agreed brief operational conclusions looking to the Commission to produce practical proposals to be considered by the Internal Market Council in 1994.

No agreement was reached on the proposed pension fund or the insurance winding-up directives. There was a short inconclusive debate on the proposed European company statute.

The Council heard progress reports on negotiations on a proposal for a European co-operative society statute and a proposed regulation on counterfeit goods.

Political agreement was reached on legal protection of biotechnological inventions by qualified majority with Spain, Denmark and Luxembourg voting against. The United Kingdom maintained its parliamentary scrutiny reserve.

A common position was agreed on a recreational craft directive. France voted against. The United Kingdom abstained because of the coverage of second-hand boats imported from third countries.

A common position was agreed on the 14th amendment to the regulations relating to restrictions on the marketing and use of certain dangerous substance and preparations, dealing with nickel. Entry into force will be delayed until six months after agreement on test methods by the European standards organisation, CEN. Nickel spectacle frames and buttons were excluded. Italy voted against.

Political agreement was reached by qualified majority on the food additives other than colours and sweeteners directive. Italy abstained.

There was agreement on a Council decision for the development and promotion of new systems for the interchange of commercial data. The budget for the programme was set at 20 mecu over two years. The legal base was amended to article 235 in accordance with United Kingdom wishes. The United Kingdom abstained considering that a lower budget was more appropriate.

The Commission presented a proposal for a directive on hallmarking, designed to remove barriers to trade and protect consumers. The Council agreed to work towards a common position as quickly as possible.

The next meeting of the Council is planned for 10 March 1994.

LORD CHANCELLOR

Bowbelle-Marchioness Collision

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of witnesses to the collision between the Bowbelle and Marchioness who gave evidence in court or at an inquest together with the nature of each hearing and dates; whether the evidence was oral or in writing; and whether any cross-examination was given together with the name and interest of those conducting the cross-examination.

Mr. John Taylor [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made to ensure that special advisers to Ministers in his Department do not have access to the kind of information, and are not involved in the type of business, that would be likely to create suspicion of impropriety in relation to subsequent employment.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Tuesday 14 December 1993 at column 561.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who, other than Ministers, have individually allocated cars from the Government car service; and at what cost for each person.

Mr. Baldry: The Government car service currently provides some 30 cars which are made available to Departments for first call use by individuals, in addition to the cars on which Ministers have first call. A number of these cars are provided for security reasons, but the majority are used by senior officials of Permanent Secretary or equivalent rank.

The cost per car varies according to the level of service provided. The average annual cost per standard car and driver is some £47,000.

Water Mains

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of water mains are planned to be replaced by each of the water companies in England in 1994 because of poor water quality.

Mr. Atkins: The length of water mains which water companies plan to replace for water quality reasons in England during 1994 is estimated to be 1,100 miles. In addition, companies plan to reline approximately 1,380 miles. Replacement or relining may be carried out for reasons other than improvement in water quality, such as the structural condition of mains and to improve water pressure; replacement for those reasons usually also results in an improvement in water quality.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on local government finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend announced his proposals for the local government finance settlement for 1994-95 on 2 December. During the consultation period on those proposals, which ended on 10 January, we received representations from 134 local authorities and their associations and from 18 hon. Members. In addition, we have met some 30 local authorities to discuss the settlement and will be seeing further authorities this week. My right hon. Friend will present his final decisions shortly.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration was given to the option of permanent monitored dry storage of spent nuclear fuel as a nuclear waste management option in arriving at his judgment on THORP.

Mr. Atkins: The dry storage of spent nuclear fuel was addressed in the waste management section (paragraphs 98-108) of the decision by my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of an application from British Nuclear Fuels for authorisations to discharge radioactive wastes from the Sellafield site. Copies of the decision document are in the House Library.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis for his conclusion set out at paragraph 131 of his decision document on THORP of 15 December that the increase in costs of the Nirex waste repository would not jeopardise the economic viability of THORP.

Mr. Atkins: An estimate of the impact of a 10-year delay to the Nirex repository is given in section 6 of appendix 3 to the BNFL document, "The Economic and Commercial Justification for THORP", which was made available for public consultation. It is evident that such a sum would not jeopardise the commercial gains shown in that appendix.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the advice notes and other information made available to his Department, along with interdepartmental correspondence, by (a) the Department of Transport, (b) the Department of Trade and Industry, (c) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, (d) the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee and (e) the National Radiological Protection Board as part of the consultation process on THORP referred to at paragraph 20 of his decision document on THORP of 15 December.

Mr. Atkins: No, other than copies of the advice from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee and the National Radiological Protection Board which have already been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when British Nuclear Fuels made available to his Department or to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, a full version of the Touche Ross accountants report on the projected profitability of THORP; and what assessment was made of the robustness of the report in coming to the conclusion on the economic prospects for THORP as set out as paragraph 133 of his decision document on THORP of 15 December.

Mr. Atkins: No such report is, or has been, in our possession.

Council Tax

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against council tax valuations in each district council area in North Yorkshire have been (a) received and (b) settled; and of those settled how many resulted in a reduced council tax valuation.

Mr. Baldry: As at 31 December 1993, receipts and settlements of proposals to alter the valuation list for each billing authority in North Yorkshire are as follows:

Billing authority	Received	Settled
Craven	2,621	374
Hambleton	2,724	496
Harrogate	4,745	872
Richmondshire	1,613	210
Ryedale	2,980	509
Scarborough	2,775	488
Selby	2,702	498
York	1,425	484

Statistics relating to settlements which have resulted in a lower council tax banding are not available centrally.

Hedgerows

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will introduce legislation to protect hedgerows.

Mr. Atkins: When parliamentary time permits.

Sweetloves Reservoir

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to investigate whether North West Water Ltd. is acting in accordance with its statutory duties in relation to Sweetloves reservoir.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 Janaury 1994]: North West Water does not consider that its plans for the redevolopment of Sweetloves reservoir are in conflict with its statutory duties in respect of conservation and recreation. I will write to my hon. Friend about the case.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Budget Contributions

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of member states' net contributions to the EC Budget, after the United Kingdom rebate, in respect of the calendar year 1993; and what is his best estimate, in respect of calendar year 1994, of member states' net contributions to the European Union budget for that year, on the basis of the latest draft proposed EU budget, after taking account of the latest estimate of the United Kingdom's rebate for 1994.

Mr. Nelson: EC budgets provide estimates of member states' gross contributions including the abatement of the United Kingdom's contributions. They do not, however, give a breakdown of each member state's expected receipts from that budget: this information becomes available only after the year in question, in the annual Court of Auditors' report on the implementation of the budget. The latest report, covering 1992, was published on 16 November 1993.

Civil Service (Management Functions) Act

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what delegations have been made since the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act received royal assent on 17 December 1992; to whom those delegations were made; and what were the main conditions that were attached to them.

Mr. Dorrell: The table lists delegations made under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992 to date. In some cases, for staff appointed by statutory office holders, Ministers were statutorily required to give consent to terms and conditions of service. For such staff, delegation has been effected by waiving that requirement, subject to the conditions attached to the delegation.

The first five delegations in the list apply generally across the civil service. The delegations relating to pay apply only to particular departments and agencies as shown in the table.

In total, Departments and agencies employing over half of all civil servants will have assumed responsibility for their own pay and grading by April 1994. I expect other such delegations to follow in 1995 as further Government agencies and Departments bring forward proposals for their own pay and grading arrangements.

List of Delegations made under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992

Delegation	Nature of Delegation	Recipients	Main Conditions
1. Delegation of Minimum Recruitment Criteria	Authority to set appropriate eligibility criteria (so far as they relate to knowledge, ability, professional attainment, aptitude or potential) for recruitment to non-scheduled grades in respect of members of the Home Civil Service.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory and certain other office holders.[1]	Managers must: (i) ensure that their recruitment systems consistently deliver recruits who are appropriate to their needs and who are able to do the work required in the grade to which they are appointed; (ii) maintain and make use of adequate records of their recruitment activities and the performance of successful candidates to demonstrate that (i) continues to be met; and (iii) observe Civil Service Management Code rules on age limits.
2. Delegation of Personnel Management: Travel	Authority to determine in respect of Home Civil Servants: (a) the class of travel that may be given to staff travelling on official business in the United Kingdom and overseas, and to staff and members of their household where departments have discretion to offer concessionary travel in the United Kingdom and overseas; and (b) the conditions under which financial assistance with overseas journeys is given in respect of staff and members of their household.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory and certain other office holders.[1]	Departments must ensure that the most efficient and economic means of travel is used, taking into account the cost of travel and the cost of subsistence and savings in official time. All costs arising from the exercise of this delegation must be met from within agreed resources.
3. Overseas Accountable Entertainment Allowance	Authority for determining the hospitality allowances to assist members of the Home Civil Service serving overseas.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory and certain other office holders.[1]	All costs arising from the exercise of this delegation must be found from within existing cash and running costs limits.
4. Delegation of United Kingdom Relocation Expenses.	Authority to determine the rules on the expenses that may be paid to members of the Home Civil Service who permanently transfer to another office (or move on appointment) within the United Kingdom and who move their homes, or who incur additional travelling costs, as a result.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory and certain other office holders.[1]	The terms offered in exercising this delegation must be cost effective compared with the alternatives and the expenditure must be found from within existing running costs and cash limits. The expenses must be based on reimbursement, must not provide for betterment and must not go beyond what is provided by other employers. There are limits on advances of salary and equity loss compensation.
5. Delegation of Rent for key staff who occupy government owned residential properties.	Authority to determine a departmental/agency rent.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory and certain other office holders.[1]	The rent must be consistent with the market rent that the key member of staff and his or her family would reasonably be expected to pay at the same or similar location for accommodation which met their normal requirements. The rent may be adjusted if it is necessary to encourage staff to transfer to a key post, or attract new staff to a key post, or to retain existing staff. Any additional expenditure which results from exercising this delegation must be found from within existing running costs and cash limits.

Delegation	Nature of Delegation	Recipients	Main Conditions
6. Delegation of pay and certain pay-related conditions of service.	Authority to determine pay and certain pay-related conditions of service of civil servants below the Senior Open Structure (with the exception of retirement and redundancy, the reinstatement and re-employment of persons in the service and the redeployment of staff between departments). Agency Chief Executives are also excluded from the scope of the delegations.	Ministers in charge of departments and statutory office holders,[1] as appropriate, for the following organisations: Employment Service Fire Service College Inland Revenue Ordnance Survey Valuation Office Agency	(i) The recipient must continue to comply with certain sections of the Civil Service Management Code. (ii) Changes made to terms and conditions must provide value for money and be made in a way which does not jeopardise essential public expenditure safeguards.

Enterprise Zone Buildings

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about schemes which enable investors to get up-front tax relief on investments in enterprise zone buildings which they can subsequently sell without any clawback of that relief.

Mr. Dorrell: Capital allowances are available to the owners of buildings in enterprise zones and of industrial buildings elsewhere. Where a building is sold within the first twenty-five years of its life, a balancing adjustment is made which brings the tax relief into line with the actual depreciation. In this way any excess tax relief given can be recovered. There is, however, a defect in the capital allowances legislation which enables the owner of a building effectively to dispose of his interest through the granting of a long lease without triggering any recovery of excess allowances. This is a weakness of which some taxpayers are aiming to take advantage.

We propose to bring forward legislation at Committee stage of the Finance Bill which will rectify this defect by imposing a balancing charge when a building on which capital allowances have already been claimed is leased for a capital sum. The new rules will apply to capital sums received by a taxpayer in respect of a relevant interest in a building which he has acquired on or after today.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government guarantees loans received by the private sector from the European investment bank.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 December 1993]: The Government do not operate a guarantee scheme for private sector borrowers from the EIB. However, the Government do have a residual responsibility in respect of guarantees which it provided under a former scheme, which was discontinued in 1985. The residual contingent liability resulting from this scheme is now diminishing, and will ultimately disappear, as the loans guaranteed are progressively repaid.

WALES

District Elections

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in which areas elections will take place during 1994 for those district councils in Wales which hold elections by thirds.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Elections will take place in Swansea, Newport, Port Talbot and Rhondda on Thursday 5 May 1994.

Domestic Gas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the estimated number and proportion of homes in Wales connected to gas mains supply.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information provided by British Gas, Wales, is published in table 5.13 of the Digest of Welsh Statistics No. 39, 1993. The number of domestic customers was estimated as 807,300 at December 1991. This represented 68 per cent. of dwellings in Wales.

Housing Revenue

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make his housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I made the determinations on 12 January and have placed copies in the Library of the House.

I have confirmed an average guideline rent increase of 7·5 per cent. (3·5 per cent. in real terms), with a minimum increase of £1·50 and a maximum of £2·90 per week. I estimate that the average guideline rent increase will be £2·19 per week and the resulting average weekly guideline rent £31·30.

For management and maintenance allowances, I have confirmed an average increase of 4 per cent. per dwelling overall, which will continue to be distributed through a system of targets reflecting authorities' relative need to spend. I estimate that this will raise the average allowance to £824 per dwelling, an increase of £31.

The rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances are the assumptions to be made for subsidy purposes. It is for councils themselves to set their rents and decide how much to spend on management and maintenance within their legal obligations.

I have placed in the Library of the House estimates of the rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowance for each authority.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to include provisions within the prospective legislation on deregulation which would alter the current powers available to local authorities to impose restrictions on the night-time movement of heavy goods vehicles within their area.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Details of the contents of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill will be made available in the usual way when the Bill is introduced later this month. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has been considering whether restrictions on the night-time movement of heavy goods vehicles can be administered in a less bureaucratic way without reducing the environmental protection the restrictions offer.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what basic technical characteristics of the THORP reprocessing line and associated facilities have been submitted to EURATOM; what particular safeguards provisions for the THORP reprocessing line and its asssociated facilities have been agreed with EURATOM; and on what dates in each case (a) information was first provided to EURATOM and (b) those agreements entered into force.

Mr. Eggar: Such documents on safeguards arrangements are confidential to the parties concerned. A general description of the interaction between BNFL and Euratom in agreeing safeguards arrangements for THORP was given in the paper, "THORP: The Route to a Safeguardable Plant", presented at the 15th European Safeguards Research and Development Association (ESARDA) symposium in Rome in May 1993.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the methodology adopted, including reference to any expert sources outside his Department, by which he came to the conclusion to offer the departmental advice on the economics of THORP to the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, referred to at paragraph 128 of the decision document on THORP of 15 December.

Mr. Eggar: The advice given by my Department to my right hon. Friends was prepared by reference to materials contained in the publicly available consultation documents.

Superconductivity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research into superconductivity is currently being sponsored by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is currently supporting four collaborative industrial research projects in high temperature superconductivity. Total costs are £3,215,231 and grant of up to £1,607,615 has been offered.

Structural Funds

Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he is yet able to inform the House of the final outcome of the negotiations with the European Communities on the designation under the structural funds of objective 2 and 5(b) areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Commission announced on 21 December its proposed list of areas for objective 2 and the proposed population ceilings for objective 5(b).

For objective 5(b) areas, the Commission proposes to designate areas with a population coverage of 2·816 million in the United Kingdom. The precise geographical boundaries are expected to be finally determined by the Commission by the end of next week, but will certainly include large parts of South West England, East Anglia, Northern England, Wales and Scotland. Once the Commission's final decision is known I will provide the House with a list of the areas.

For objective 2 areas, the Commission announced a proposed initial list of areas. The United Kingdom area on this list are listed at the end of this answer. The Commission will announce its final decision shortly, but it is unlikely to differ from the initial list. The definitive list will be published in the Official Journal and will give a fully detailed breakdown of the eligible areas, down to ward level where necessary.

The Commission's decisions mean that more areas of the United Kingdom than before will now be eligible for European funding. More than 24 million people live in areas that will be able to claim under objectives 1, 2 and 5(b) of the structural funds and the United Kingdom continues to have the highest population coverage under objective 2. Despite this advance, however, the Government regret the Commission's failure fully to reflect our national priorities in its final decisions for objective 2 areas—in particular, the case for much greater coverage of urban areas.

PRIME MINISTER

GCHQ

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with trade union leaders on 20 December 1993 regarding trade union recognition of GCHQ

The Prime Minister: I met representatives of the civil service unions to discuss trade union membership at GCHQ at their request, following a series of discussions they had held with officials. I explained that the Government's overriding objective remained to ensure the maintenance of continuous operations at GCHQ necessary for the protection of national security. In that context it was necessary also to ensure that the staff were not subject to potential conflicts of loyalty.

Against that background, however, I indicated that the Government were prepared to enable the Government Communications Staff Federation, the registered trade union for GCHQ staff, to affiliate to the Council of Civil Service Unions, subject to conditions to guarantee its continuing independence. This would have allowed the staff of GCHQ to be represented in discussions between the Government and the unions on matters affecting the civil service generally in a way in which they are not at present. The national trade unions have indicated that they do not regard this as acceptable. There are no plans for further meetings, but the Government remain willing to discuss any further proposals that the unions may wish to put forward.

Engagements

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what were his official engagements for Wednesday 12 January.

The Prime Minister: I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, in addition to my duties in this House.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 13 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Petitions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of responses to parliamentary petitions; and if he will review current practice.

The Prime Minister: Individual Departments respond as they see fit to parliamentary petitions. I have no plans to review current practice.

TRANSPORT

Worcester Parkway Station

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail or Railtrack about the possibility of establishing a Worcester Parkway station in the light of the decision to run additional Birmingham to Cardiff trains without stopping at Worcester, Shrub Hill.

Mr. Freeman: I am aware of the idea of a Parkway station for Worcester but I have had no direct discussions with British Rail or Railtrack on the subject. This is a matter for those organisations to consider and any detailed proposals should be sent direct to them.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the information provided to the Secretary of State for the Environment assessing the criticisms made of the safety of nuclear transport, indicated at paragraph 135 of the decision document on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, published on 15 December.

Mr. Key: It is not Government practice to publish such inter-departmental correspondence.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he proposes that British Rail's accumulated debt due to the construction of Waterloo international station and the other infrastructure works carried out to provide for the operation of international rail services through the channel tunnel should be paid off.

Mr. Freeman: We are at present considering how British Rail's existing debt liabilities should be allocated to the successor bodies which are to be created in the restructuring of the railway.

MOT Test

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the date on which he intends to re-introduce the smoke emission test as part of the annual MOT test for motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement on the ways in which the new test differs from the previous one.

Mr. Key: The metered check of smoke is to be reintroduced into the MOT test on 1 February 1994. The procedure has been revised slightly to reduce the number of test cycles to which each engine is subject, and to reduce the amount of time that an engine spends at maximum revolutions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Exhibitions

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what consideration he has given to an application relating to an exhibition on "A Voice For Laryngectomees," to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 7 March to Friday 11 March.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Globe theatre to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall, during the week commencing 7 February.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 7 February to Friday 11 February.

HEALTH

Referrals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances it is permissible for a trust hospital to give general practitioner fundholders a discount on NHS prices in return for private patient referrals.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the target percentage for registered disabled employees within the Department of Health and NHS management executive; and what is the actual percentage of registered disabled employees.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service, in common with other employers, is subject to the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts of 1944 and 1958. No specific target has been imposed on NHS employers supplementary to the provisions of these acts.

The latest figures, relating to June 1992, are in the April 1993 edition of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

NHS Communications Network

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to establish a new NHS national communications network service; and what costings have been made.

Mr. Sackville: In March 1993 the national health service management executive and regional general managers agreed a strategy for implementing NHS-wide electronic networking facilities. Up to 1996 this comprises a common policy for the management of data exchange between computers, telecommunications in the NHS and the rationalisation of mobile radio communications, principally those used by the ambulance services. From 1996 it is expected there will be increasing technical integration of all apsects of NHS-wide electronic communications.

The business case for implementing a national spine to connect regional data networks has been approved. Work is in hand to connect all regionwide data networks by late 1994.

Agreements have been made with Mercury Communications and British Telecom which will provide immediate multi-million pound savings to their NHS customers. Further analysis of telephone usage and requirements locally in the NHS is planned for 1994. Preliminary work indicates this should lead to additional significant savings.

A study examining the business case for the provision of mobile communications in the NHS is planned to report in April 1994.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the schemes of water fluoridation that have resulted from Government encouragement; and what forms that encouragement took in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Since 1985 the Government have provided financial assistance for fluoridation schemes to the regions shown in the table.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those water companies that have no fluoridated potable water supplies within their geographical boundary.

Dr. Mawhinney: All water supplies contain some natural fluoride.

Air Pollution

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received the report of the departmental advisory group on the medical aspects of air pollution episodes; when and how she expects it to be published; what requests for it have been declined; and if she will place a copy of it in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Islington South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 15 December 1993 at column 720. No requests for the report have been declined.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Injuries at Work

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reconsider the rules on repayments to his Department by workers in receipt of injuries at work awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The compensation recovery scheme will be amended to take account of the statutory sick pay changes announced on 1 December. No other amendments to the scheme are planned.

Occupational Diseases

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the Government propose to respond to the European Commission recommendation of 22 May 1990 concerning the adoption of a European schedule of occupational diseases.

Mr. Scott: The Government's response to the recommendation was sent to the Commission recently.

Copies have been placed in the Library. We are pleased to take the opportunity to explain arrangements for compensating, reporting and preventing occupational disease.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce how housing benefit transitional payments will be treated in April.

Mr. Burt: We have always made it clear that housing benefit transitional payments, which were introduced in 1988, will be reduced as increases in other benefits make them less necessary. We have therefore decided on a flat rate reduction of £1·00 per week in these payments for the year from April 1994. As a result, the vast majority of recipients will still gain overall in cash terms from the April uprating of other social security benefits.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional amounts payable in housing benefit resulting from the reductions in planned spending under the heading "DOE Housing" in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95".

Mr. Burt [holding answer 17 December 1993]: Expenditure on housing benefit is influenced by a wide range of factors not all in the control of the Government. Owing to this, no estimate has been made of the effect on housing benefit expenditure arising specifically from the changes in planned spending under the heading "DOE Housing" in tale 5B.3 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95, although there is expected to be an overall reduction in housing provision of £250 million and £100 million in the years 1994, 1995 and 1996.

SCOTLAND

Perinatal Mortality

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of perinatal mortality in each of the last 10 years; and what plans he has to commission research into reasons for variations.

Mr. Stewart: Perinatal mortality figures for the years 1983-1992 are as follows:

	Number	Rate per 1,000 births (live and still)
1983	696	10·6
1984	718	11·0
1985	656	9·8
1986	673	10·2
1987	594	8·9
1988	594	8·9
1989	553	8·7
1990	574	8·7
1992	597	9·0

The introduction of the Stillbirth (Definition) Act 1992 on 1 October 1992 reduced from 28 to 24 weeks the gestational age at which a baby is officially recognised as stillborn. Early terminations of pregnancy between 24 and 28 weeks, which were formerly treated as "miscarriages" for statistical purposes, are now being classed as stillbirths and have been included in the statistics for 1992.

Compiled on the same basis as the figures for 1983 to 1991 the number of stillbirths in 1992 would have been 562, representing a rate of 8·5 per 1,000 births and demonstrating a continuing downward trend.

Research into the causes of perinatal deaths has been continuous since 1977 when the Scottish perinatal mortality survey was set up. In 1982 the Scottish perinatal mortality review advisory group was established to look into the causes of perinatal deaths on an ongoing basis and to offer advice on ways in which the incidence might be reduced further. Its work will be enhanced shortly with the appointment of a professional co-ordinator.

Patients

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland of the in-patients discharged in 1992-93, how many went straight into (a) nursing homes, (b) supervised residential accommodation, or (c) were looked after by a member of their family.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not centrally held. During the period between April 1992 and March 1993 there were 788,857 discharges from NHS care in Scotland. Of that number 644,105 were home discharges. This figure includes transfers to sheltered housing, eventide homes, residential and nursing homes for which no separate figures are available.

Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much from (a) grant, (b) consent to borrow and (c) capital receipts, will be devoted next financial year to the eradication of dampness and condensation in (i) council housing stock, (ii) owner-occupied stock and (iii) housing association/Scottish Homes stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the housing plan system introduced earlier this year central resource planning assumptions totalling £400 million on the housing revenue account and £123 million on the non-HRA were advised to local housing authorities to assist them in planning their capital programmes for investment in public and private sector housing in 1994-95. Authorities were asked to give priority to tackling condensation and dampness, as well as below tolerable standard housing and homelessness, within their capital programmes. These capital programmes are currently under consideration. Scottish Homes is also giving priority to tackling condensation and dampness in both housing association and their own stock. It is for local authorities and Scottish Homes to determine how to allocate the resources made available to them.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how long it will take at the current rate of funding of district councils' housing revenue account and non-housing revenue account of capital programmes to (a) eradicate dampness and condensation and (b) refurbish to modern standards housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All local housing authorities have been asked in preparing their housing plans and housing capital programmes for 1994-95 and beyond, to develop a strategy for tackling damp housing in their areas, including setting quantified targets which can be used as a basis for assessing progress. The resource planning assumptions advised to local authorities provide them with a framework within which to plan for tackling dampness, condensation and refurbishment.

However, housing capital allocations are generally not earmarked for specific purposes and it is for local authorities themselves to decide how best to deploy the resources available to them to meet local housing needs, including the need to deal with dampness and condensation and to refurbish houses to modern standards.

Acute Services Strategy, Tayside

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has completed his consideration of Tayside health board's acute services strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Like other health boards in Scotland, Tayside has had to review its long-term requirements and pattern of future service provision in the light of new developments in clinical techniques and technology and of improvements in efficiency.

An estimated £30 million will be needed to achieve the changes proposed by the board for the extension of Ninewells, new community hospitals in Forfar on the Whitehills site to replace the outdated facilities at Forfar infirmary, and Montrose to replace Montrose infirmary.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has considered the proposed changes for services in Tayside and has approved the health board's proposals in total.

In Dundee, trauma services are currently split between the Ninewells and Dundee Royal infirmary sites and people are transferred between the sites. By extending Ninewells hospital it will be possible to accommodate all services on one site and replace the functionally unsuitable accommodation at Dundee Royal infirmary. The transfer of services to Ninewells and the subsequent closure of Dundee Royal infirmary is supported by all medical staff, and is an opportunity to allow all trauma services to be provided on one site, alongside the support specialty and diagnostic services that are required by trauma patients, therefore avoiding the need for individuals to be transferred between the two hospitals to receive appropriate care. The Dundee General Hospital Trust is currently examining the level of capital investment which will be required to effect this change. My right hon. Friend expects to be able to approve the required capital investment in the near future.

In Perth and Kinross, Tayside health board has sought approval to close Meigle cottage hospital. In this case my right hon. Friend has listened carefully to the arguments put forward by Tayside health board and others who have commented. The board has argued that by concentrating resources in this area at Blairgowrie, which has a larger site and wider range of facilities, it will be able to offer an enhanced level of patient care than it can at present. Local concerns focus on accessibility and loss of a valued local service.

It will, however, be possible to maintain local services and improve their integration by transferring services from Meigle cottage hospital to the Blairgowrie site. Moreover the transfer of services from Meigle to Blairgowrie will allow the health board to apply resources more effectively to enhance patient care.

The boards proposals for Angus focus on the establishment of new community hospitals in Forfar and Montrose. In Forfar the proposed hospital is on the Whitehills site and would allow the centralisation of services in Forfar on one site. Services currently at Forfar infirmary and the Fyfe Jamieson maternity home would transfer to Whitehills and these hospitals would close. In Montrose the new hospital would replace services currently at Montrose infirmary.

My right hon. Friend supports these proposals and has therefore asked the health board and Angus Trust to prepare proposals for a community hospital at Whitehills to replace the outdated facilities at Forfar infirmary; together with proposals for a new Montrose infirmary. In the meantime Tayside health board has sought approval to transfer maternity services from Fyfe Jamieson maternity home to Whitehills with immediate effect; and to close Fyfe Jamieson. The service available to women will be the same as that available currently at Fyfe Jamieson. It will however operate from fewer beds because current occupancy rates are lower and will be staffed mainly by community rather than hospital midwives; 24-hour midwife care will continue to be available when required.

My right hon. Friend will announce his final decisions on the proposed new hospitals at Forfar and Montrose, and on the capital investment to be made at Ninewells, once detailed costings are available. Taken together these developments represent a major investment in health care in Tayside and an opportunity to ensure that the future pattern of care is appropriate to new developments in clinical techniques and technology.

Quangos

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of all former hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 January 1994]: No former Members of Parliament who ceased to be Members of the House in 1987 and 1992 currently hold appointments on bodies for which my Department has responsibility. The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether appointees were Members of this House during earlier Parliaments.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of all former British representative members in the European Parliament who since 1979 have been appointed to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether appointees were former Members of the European Parliament.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of all individuals who are or were members of the House of Lords who since 1979 have been appointed to any quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, excluding appointments as justices of the peace, giving in each case the title of the post, any salary payable and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The information covers the Scottish Office bodies listed in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies". The information is at 1 September 1993 and does not include appointments as justices of the peace, appointments to children's panels or appointments which expired before that date, details of which are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information covers appointments held by present Members of the House of Lords. The following members of the House of Lords hold appointments on Scottish Office bodies: Lord Macfarlane of Bearsden is a member of the board of trustees of the National Galleries of Scotland; his appointment runs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1994. The right hon. the Lord Cameron of Lochbroom is the Chairman of the Edinburgh New Town Conservation Committee; his appointment runs from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1996. Lord Goold is a member of the Scottish Hospital Endowments Research Trust; his appointment runs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1996. Viscount Thurso is a member of the Central Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace (Scotland); his appointment runs from 30 May 1991 to 15 May 1995. The Earl of Crawford and Balcarres is chairman of the board of trustees of the National Library of Scotland. The appointment runs from 14 November 1990. All these appointments are unsalaried.

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, on how many occasions the solicitor to the Secretary of State for Scotland was present at meetings involving Greater Glasgow health board or its chairman and the NHS Scottish Executive when the subject of Mr. Laurence Peterken was discussed.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The solicitor to the Secretary of State for Scotland or a representative from his office was present at three such meetings.

EMPLOYMENT

Access to Work

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the estimated first year budget set aside by his Department for authorising the new access to work scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The 1994-95 budget allocated to the first year of access to work is £12,600,000.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the proportions of full-time male manual workers, full-time male non-manual workers and all full-time male workers with earnings, excluding overtime, of less than £203·07 per week in (i) the West Midlands metropolitan county, (ii) Hereford and Worcester, (iii) Shropshire, (iv) Staffordshire and (v) Warwickshire for 1993;

(2) if he will list the proportions of full-time adult manual workers, full-time adult non-manual workers and all full-time adult workers with earnings, including overtime, of less than £203·07 per week in (i) the West Midlands metropolitan county, (ii) Hereford and Worcester, (iii) Shropshire, (iv) Staffordshire and (v) Warwickshire for 1993;

(3) if he will list the proportions of full-time male manual workers, full-time male non-manual workers and all full-time male workers with earnings, including overtime, of less than £203·07 per week in (i) the West Midlands metropolitan county, (ii) Hereford and Worcester, (iii) Shropshire, (iv) Staffordshire and (v) Warwickshire for 1993;

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will list for the United Kingdom and by standard region, including Greater London, the number of households and the proportion of all households claiming unemployment benefit for each year since 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: It is individuals who claim unemployment benefits. Estimates from the Labour Force Survey of the number and proportion of households where the head of household or their spouse is claiming unemployment related benefits are given in the table, for each spring since 1989. Those claiming unemployment-related benefits consist of those claiming unemployment benefit, income support on account of being unemployed, or national insurance credits.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will list for each London borough the number of households and the proportion of all households claiming unemployment benefit for each year since 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available since, the only source able to provide this information at household level would be the Labour Force Survey, and this is unable to provide estimates for London boroughs due to its sample size.

Start-up Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of entrants to the business start-up scheme who were receiving income support immediately previous to entry remained in business for at least 18 months.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 16 December at column 858.

Retail Staff (Violence)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive guidance on violence to staff in the retail sector will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The expected date of publication is June 1994. This date is dependent on the result of an external consultation exercise which is shortly to be undertaken.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for the Health and Safety Executive's failure to produce guidance on risk assessment and other publications on electricity at work in hotels, violence to staff in the retail sector and the cost to the British economy of work accidents and work-related ill health.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Health and Safety Executive has produced considerable guidance on the principles and practice of risk assessment. General guidance on testing of portable electrical equipment has been available for some time and specific guidance for the hotel industry is due to be published shortly. Guidance on violence to staff in the retail sector is due to be published in June and a detailed report on "The Costs to the British Economy of Work Accidents and Work Related Ill-health" will be published in February 1994.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated total cost to the Health and Safety Executive of the review of health and safety regulations being conducted by the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Estimates of the total cost could only be provided at disproportionate cost, but the costs are being met from within the Health and Safety Executive's overall resources within the context of the Health and Safety Commission's role in rationalising and modernising health and safety legislation.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many letters have been received from businesses complaining about the cost of complying with health and safety legislation, in response to the open invitation issued by the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission on 28 October.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Health and Safety Commission has issued an open invitation, primarily through the trade press, for evidence on both the benefits and costs of health and safety regulations to be submitted by the end of January 1994. The Commission had by 11 January 1994, received 70 contacts from businesses. Businesses and other organisations are also playing an active role in the review of regulation by taking part in case studies and surveys.

Workstart

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of how positive outcomes under the workstart pilot schemes compare with those achieved by TECs.

Miss Widdecombe: Evaluation of the workstart pilot schemes is continuing. It is however already clear that those pilots run by training and enterprise councils need to work closely with the local employment service to maximise positive outcomes under workstart.

DEFENCE

Reserve Forces

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to begin a survey of the ethnic origins of members of the reserve forces.

Mr. Hanley: There are no firm plans, at present, to survey the ethnic origins of members of the reserve forces. In the light of experience gained from the present survey of members of the regular forces, the possibility of extending ethnic monitoring to members of the volunteer reserve forces will be considered.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints of racial discrimination have been made by armed services personnel in respect of service in the armed forces in each year since 1976; and how many of those complaints were upheld.

Mr. Hanley: Information about complaints of racial discrimination by Army and Royal Air Force personnel is available from central records only from 1988 and is given in the table. Complaints of racial discrimination by naval personnel are not recorded centrally at present, but the Royal Navy plans to introduce a recording system early this year.

Equipment Contracts

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take to cancel contracts with Gebrüder Junghans of Germany, AS Raufoss of Norway and Fratelli Borletti of Italy, following the evidence given at the trial of Mr. Gordon Foxley.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 24 November 1993]: As I announced on 23 November at column 309-10, no new contracts will be placed with the companies implicated in the Foxley case until all the facts have been investigated. The scope for recovering money paid by the firms to Foxley is also under investigation. We do not propose to terminate the small number of existing contracts with the companies, which were all placed some years after Foxley's retirement from the Ministry of Defence.

Orders

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of orders placed by his Department in the last 10 years with (a) the firm Fratelli Borletti, (b) the firm Gebrüder Junghans and (c) the firm AS Raufoss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 26 November 1993]: The value of orders placed by MOD in the last 10 years with the companies concerned is:

Fratelli Borletti	2·1
Gebrüder Junghans	16·7
AS Raufoss	15·0

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Support

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the EC plans to spend in the current financial year on its agricultural policy; and by what percentage this has changed over the past five and 10 years.

Mr. Jack: The 1994 budget for the common agricultural policy (EAGGF guarantee) has been set at 36,465 mecu (£27,703 million), some 53 per cent. of the EC budget as a whole. This represents increases of 41 per cent. and 99 per cent. over expenditure in 1989 and 1984, respectively. As a proportion of total EC expenditure in 1989 and 1984, the CAP (EAGGF guarantee) represented 63 per cent. and 67 per cent. respectively.

Allergic Reactions

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the operation of the regulations for the labelling of food products containing peanuts and other foodstuffs known to be capable of causing fatal allergic reactions.

Mr. Soames: I am, of course, aware of the tragic circumstances that lie behind my hon. Friend's question and would like to express my sympathies to the family concerned in his constituency and to all other families who have suffered accidents of a similar nature.

People who are affected by allergies or are intolerant to certain foods know what to avoid and generally do so successfully. In this, the food labelling rules help them since pre-packed foodstuffs have to carry a list of ingredients on the label which they can consult. But for very real practical reasons the detailed labelling rules do not apply in catering outlets. A simple tightening of the application of the labelling rules is therefore not the real solution to this problem and we must seek other answers.

I have therefore today written to the chairmen of the principal trade associations involved in the manufacture and retailing of foodstuffs containing nuts, including the caterers, to ask them to meet urgently with my officials to discuss practical ways of ensuring that all involved are aware of the significance for some consumers of the use of nut ingredients in products and to establish a system whereby information about the use of such ingredients flows down the food chain so that it can be made available to consumers especially at catering outlets.

I will keep my hon. Friend in touch with the progress and results of these discussions.

Days at Sea

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for a new decommissioning scheme following the judicial decision in respect of the days at sea restrictions.

Mr. Jack: I would refer the hon. Member to the written reply that I gave on 14 December at column 596 to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South- East (Mr. Hicks). As I explained then, decommissioning formed part of a package of fisheries conservation measures upon which, following our decision to suspend implementation of controls on days at sea, we are having to review the way forward. I am not yet able to announce the outcome of the review.

Sheep Dips

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received on the health risks of organophosphate sheep dips.

Mr. Soames: I have received a number of representations on this subject. On 1 December my right hon. Friend the Minister announced the steps that would be taken by the Government, following recommendations from the veterinary products committee.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to announce her decision on organophosphate sheep dips.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 1 December the Government response to advice from the veterinary products committee on the use of organophosphate sheep dips. This reponse identified a number of recommendations from the committee which would be followed up. Further announcements will be made in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Witnesses

4. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the intimidation of witnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have received a number of representations on this issue. I am determined that witnesses should be properly protected. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill will add to the remedies provided in the existing law by creating a new offence of witness intimidation with a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment.

Crown Prosecution Service

19. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with police organisations and police authorities the present policies and arrangements in regard to the work of the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the Attorney-General and I have accepted the proposal of the recent study on administrative burdens on the police that a joint performance management mechanism should be established to monitor the performance of the police and the Crown Prosecution Service, so far as they are related. Discussions have recently taken place on how best to implement the proposal. The police and the Crown Prosecution Service will participate in this work.

Illegal Drugs

20. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department is undertaking to ascertain the link between illegal drug use and crime.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently examining the results of a number of recent studies. These include the 1992 British Crime Survey which contained questions on drug misuse and a separate study of the lifestyles and economic behaviour of drug misusers. Further research on drug misuse and crime is planned for later this year.

23. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made by the Metropolitan police in the war against drugs.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Metropolitan police give a very high priority to the fight against drugs and it has had a number of notable operational successes. For example, operaton Welwyn in the King's Cross area and operation Tean, in the Stoke Newington area, specifically targeted at some of the worst affected areas of London, have resulted in the arrest of more than 300 drug dealers to date.

Magistrates

21. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from magistrates on his proposed changes to the criminal justice system.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no formal representations from the Magistrates Association following the announcement that he made on 6 October, but some magistrates have written to me as individuals indicating their support for that package or particular elements in it.

Jury-nobbling

22. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plan to deal with jury-nobbling.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman).

Wheel Clamping

24. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on wheel clamping on private land.

Mr. Maclean: In considering what, if any, action it may be appropriate to take our aim is to ensure that any measure introduced to prevent or deter irresponsible and heavy-handed wheelclamping on private land does not prevent sensible measures being taken to control genuine parking problems.

Police

25. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the changes in police establishment levels since April 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is contained in the replies given to questions from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 24 November 1993 at cols. 54-56 and from the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 16 December 1993 at col. 788.

Sheehy Report

26. Mr. Ottoway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding his response to the Sheehy report on police pay and responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given at column 152 on 25 November to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown).

Car Thefts

27. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of car thefts recorded (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1979 there were 309,245 recorded thefts of motor vehicles in England and Wales.

In the latest 12-month period for which figures are available—July 1992 to June 1993—the number of thefts was 614,560.

Bail (Crime)

28. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to deal with those who commit crimes while on bail.

Mr. Maclean: In last year's Criminal Justice Act we required the courts to consider the fact that an offence had been committed on bail as an aggravating factor when passing sentence. The current Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains a range of measures to reduce the risk that such offences will be committed, including the removal of the presumption in favour of bail in all cases where a person is charged with an offence triable on indictment which was allegedly committed on bail.

Juvenile Offenders

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of Government policy in relation to juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: The legislation necessary to implement our policies for juvenile offenders is before the House in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Political Parties (Funding)

30. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he is considering for changes in the law concerning the funding of political parties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such proposals.

Lenient Sentences

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to lay an order concerning the Attorney-General's right of appeal against lenient sentences.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer given to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) earlier today.

Young Criminals

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the custodial arrangements for children under the age of 12 years who are convicted of murder or other criminal offences.

Mr. Maclean: Children under the age of 12 who have been convicted of murder are subject to the mandatory sentence of detention at Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. Children of this age convicted of manslaughter may also be detained under section 53. My right hon. and learned Friend, who has responsibility for the placement of all children detained under section 53, makes the decision about where such children should be placed. In practice, children of this age are invariably held in secure establishments within the child care system.

Justice and Home Affairs Co-operation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, by what means and to whom he has made proposals for future parliamentary oversights of matters discussed at an inter-governmental level arising from title VI and articles K.1 to 9 of the treaty on European Union; and if he will publish them as a Command document.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's proposals for parliamentary oversight of work carried out under title VI of the treaty on European union are set out in memoranda in similar terms submitted to the Home Affairs Committee and to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities in February and March 1993 respectively. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) gave oral evidence on this subject to the Home Affairs Committee on 21 April 1993, and I gave oral evidence to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities on 15 June 1993. The memorandum to the Home Affairs Committee was placed in the Library of the House by the Committee on receipt. The House of Lords Committee has now published its report and the memorandum which I submitted to it.

Life Sentences

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been released for each year since 1969 after serving sentences of life imprisonment for murder; and how many have reoffended.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is drawn from the offenders index and is shown in the following table.

Table: Persons first released on life Licence[1] after a conviction of murder, 1972-1991, and the number of these who have been reconvicted of a 'standard list'[2] offence by the end of 1991

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which persons sentenced to life imprisonment for murder have themselves been murdered either in prison or after release since 1969.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Dr. Robert Spink, dated 13 January 1994:

INMATES SENTENCED TO LIFE IMPRISONMENT WHO HAVE THEMSELVES BEEN MURDERED

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about which persons sentenced to life imprisonment for murder have themselves been murdered either in prison or after release since 1969.

The information available from centrally held records relates only to deaths in custody from 1988 to date. One such death in 1993 was found at the coroner's court to be an unlawful killing and is still under investigation. There were no others during the period 1988 to 1992.

Prisoner Escorts

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) prisoner officers will be freed from escort duties in the Metropolitan police district as a result of the service being contracted out to Securicor Custodial Services Ltd.; and how the time of the officers so released will be used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Approximately 335 full-time equivalent prisoner officer posts are engaged on court escort and custody duties in the Metropolitan police district. The phased loss of a total of 250 prison officer posts is planned during the first year of the court escort and custody service in the Metropolitan police district. These posts will be those currently employed on court or escort duties at the prison establishments affected. The aim is that posts will be lost through natural wastage and transfer and that there will be no redundancies.

The remaining 85 posts will be retained at London prisons where they should enable regime improvements to take place. The Metropolitan police will similarly have a phased reduction in staffing of 271 police officer posts and 47 civilian staff posts by 1996-97. It is for the Metropolitan police to decide on the use of the time of its officers freed from this responsibility.

Deported Jamaicans

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute a full inquiry into the events surrounding the detention of passengers from Kingston, Jamaica, at Gatwick airport on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No, but I have written to the hon. Member and placed a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the means of redress available for those refused temporary entry as visitors, following the abolition of the right of appeal against visitor's refusals in the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A passenger who holds a current entry clearance at the time of refusal of leave to enter the United Kingdom as a visitor has a right of appeal before removal. It is open to a passenger without such an entry clearance to seek judicial review of the decision to refuse him leave to enter.

Notes to the table

1. Figures are in outturn prices and are derived from local education authorities' returns of their net institutional expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education.

2. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

3. "N/A" indicates that a return has not been received from the LEA. Corporation of London LEA has no secondary schools. Figures are rounded to the nearest £5.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers in state-maintained schools receive a gross salary of £30,000 per year.

Mr. Robin Squire: On the basis of departmental projections of teacher numbers and data from the recent pay survey conducted by the School Teachers Review Body we estimate that in England and Wales approximately 9,700 full-time teachers in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sectors, including 5,900 heads and 3,100 deputies, were being paid salaries of £30,000 per annum or more on 1 September 1993.

Pupil Transfers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure that pupils who transfer from grant-maintained schools to local authority-maintained schools take a proportion of funds with them.

Mr. Robin Squire: The predominantly pupil-led funding arrangements for both grant-maintained and local authority maintained schools allow movements of pupils between the two sectors, in either direction, to be reflected in school budgets on an annual basis.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assumption he makes within the standard spending assessment for appropriate expenditure on education for each local education authority for their expenditure on optional nursery education; and to what extent this varies between authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: The local government finance settlement takes account of the broad range of pressures on local authorities, including the projected number of pupils aged under five in maintained schools, as published in the Department's annual report. The component of standard spending assessments which is notionally attributed to under-fives is allocated according to the population aged under five in each local authority area. This is adjusted by the additional educational need allowance which reflects the additional costs of providing a standard level of service in areas of relative deprivation, and by the area cost adjustment which reflects higher labour costs in the south-east.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimates he has made of the additional costs for training those qualified nursery teachers to the standards now in force for each additional 100 nursery school pupils receiving half-time nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: On the basis of current recommended staffing ratios and assuming that two half-time classes could be accommodated within a normal school week and with the same staff, 100 half-time nursery school pupils would require 2·5 full-time equivalent teachers. The average cost of initial training of a qualified early years teacher is approximately £6,350 per year, inclusive of student maintenance payments. The majority of early years teachers are at present trained on four-year BEd courses. These figures take no account of any requirement for nursery assistants in addition to teachers.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what formal statements he expects to make concerning the policies of Her Majesty's Government for nursery education which have been indicated informally; and when, and by what means, he plans to make them;

(2) what consultations he has had, or expects to make, prior to further announcements or distribution of circulars or advice concerning his plans for expanding nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: As my right hon. Friend indicated in his speech to the North of England conference on 7 January, the Government's policy is to promote choice, diversity, quality and cost-effectiveness in the provision of pre-school education, and to extend the amount of such education available. Over half of three and four-year-olds already attend maintained nursery and primary schools, and more than 90 per cent. receive some form of pre-school provision. We are exploring ways of adding still further, as resources allow, to the choice already available to parents from all sources—public, private and voluntary. When we have any proposals to make, we will announce them in the usual way. There will then be an opportunity for those concerned to express their views.

Teacher Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what have been the costs incurred in training teachers in relation to assessing those areas which have now been dropped as a result of the Dearing review.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is impossible to isolate and cost the elements of initial and in-service teacher training relating solely to those aspects of assessment that will change following the Dearing review. Such training generally has wider objectives that will remain relevant regardless of the changes that will be made.

Parents Charter

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total cost of production and distribution of the leaflet to be issued about the parents charter; how much of this cost is attributable to distribution; and how many of the leaflets will go to homes with children of school age.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost of distributing the revised parents charter to every household in England is estimated at £500,000. The total cost of producing and distributing the charter is expected to be some £2 million. Raising standards in schools, and supporting what has already been achieved, are matters of national importance. The charter will therefore be relevant to all citizens, and not simply to the estimated 6·75 million households with children under the school leaving age.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of his Department's grant-maintained schools folder, containing the fifth edition of "How to become a grant-maintained school", "Questions parents ask", "Questions staff ask", "Experiences during the first year", and a copy of circular 18/93, have been distributed; and what was the cost of (i) the folders, (ii) each of the booklets, (iii) the circulars, (iv) the padded bags in which they were sent and (v) the distribution itself.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some 22,500 copies of the Department's grant-maintained schools folder were distributed to chairmen of governors of maintained schools in England to ensure that they had publications reflecting the relevant provisions in the Education Act 1993 which came into effect from 1 January. Further copies are being distributed in response to requests. The unit costs for printing and design were as follows:

	Pence
(i) folders	31
(ii) booklets:
How to Become a Grant-Maintained School	63
Questions Parents Ask	8
Questions Staff Ask	22
Experiences during the First year	9
(iii) circular 18/93	23

For the initial distribution to all schools, the cost of packaging was £8,178, and the cost of postage was £20,106.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of new grant-maintained schools received an allocation for expenditure on named capital projects in the financial years (i) 1993-94 and (ii) 1994-95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Ninety-five per cent. of schools which entered the grant-maintained sector in 1992-93 and bid for capital grant on named projects received an allocation for the financial year 1993-94.

Seventy per cent. of schools which joined the sector between April and September last year and bid for funding have so far received allocations for 1994-95. The allocations are either to carry out a named project or for extra design work to place them in a priority position for support in 1995-96. In addition, grant-maintained schools which have entered the sector since September 1993 have been invited to submit their named project bids for 1994-95 by 28 January.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many cases the interval between his approval of grant-maintained status for a school and its incorporation date has been less than (a) five working days, (b) 10 working days, (c) 15 working days and (d) 20 working days; and, in category, whether he will list the schools and give the relevant dates.

Mr. Robin Squire: The interval between the approval of grant-maintained status for a school and its incorporation date has been less than five working days in seven cases, less than 10 working days in 47 cases, less than 15 working days in 75 cases and less than 20 working days in 128 cases. The schools and relevant dates are listed by category in the table.

National Curriculum

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of the printing, publishing and distribution of Sir Ron Dearing's interim report; and what are the estimated costs in respect of the final report.

Mr. Robin Squire: The printing and distribution costs of the interim report were £200,000. Comparable costs for the final report are estimated at £460,000.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for each key stage and curriculum area, what are the pilot and development costs; and if he will identify those items of expenditure incurred in respect of those aspects now withdrawn as a result of the Dearing review.

Mr. Robin Squire: Most of these costs were incurred by the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council and date from the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988. Both councils have now been dissolved and it is not possible to identify the items of expenditure requested from their published accounts. Further work to identify the expenditure would incur disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost, since the enactment of the Education Reform Act 1988, of the development and implementation of the national curriculum and of the associated assessment of children.

Mr. Robin Squire: Expenditure by the Department on the development and implementation of the national curriculum and the associated assessment of children for the years 1988-89 to 1992-93 inclusive was £469 million. This mainly comprises grant in aid to the National Curriculum Council, the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, and funding under the grants for education support and training programme.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what have been the costs of external assessors in evaluating the various stages of the national curriculum and its assessment.

Mr. Robin Squire: There has been a variety of external evaluations of the national curriculum and its assessment, carried out under the auspices of the National Curriculum Council, the School Examinations and Assessment Council, and its successor, the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority. The Office for Standards in Education has also evaluated various aspects of the national curriculum. Information on the expenditure incurred is not held centrally by the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Schools Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the total operating costs of (a) the National Curriculum Council and (b) the School Examinations and Assessment Council from their inception until their winding up.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total operating costs of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council, as recorded in their published accounts, from their inception on 15 August 1988 to 31 March 1993 were £36·3 million and £69·6 million respectively. Their final accounts for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Dearing Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the operating and staffing costs to date of the Dearing inquiry.

Mr. Robin Squire: The operating and staffing costs of the Dearing review of the national curriculum are estimated at £95,000, excluding the cost of printing and distributing the interim and final reports, which is estimated at £660,000.

Grant-maintained Status

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on which dates copies of circular 18/93 were dispatched to (i) chairs of governors of schools and (ii) chief education officers.

Mr. Robin Squire: Distribution of circular 18/93 to schools and to local education authorities and others was handled by two separate contractors. I understand that the former distribution was completed by 31 December 1993 and the latter by 12 January 1994.

Fitzherbert School, Brighton

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the value placed on the former Fitzherbert school site in Brighton, prior to the City Technology Colleges Trust selling it to the Nuffield Nursing Homes Trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: This site was owned by the CTC Trust which was responsible for its valuation and disposal. The site was sold in November 1993 for a price which is commercially confidential.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Supply

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to introduce competition into the provision of electricity supply in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland has responsibility for the development of competition in the supply of electricity. He reported on his plans for this on 16 December and a copy of his report can be obtained from the Office of Electricity Regulation, Northern Ireland.

Community Employment Schemes

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total number of claims for injury compensation on Action for Community Employment schemes in each year since 1988;

(2) what were the yearly global sums paid by way of compensation to those injured on Action for Community Employment schemes since 1988;

(3) how many injury claims were (a) contested in court and (b) settled out of court arising from Action for Community Employment schemes in each year since 1988.

Mr. Tim Smith: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 13 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Agency to reply to your questions about claims for injury compensation arising within Action for Community Employment (ACE) Schemes in each year from 1988.

In responding to this enquiry I have to point out that ACE sponsors are independent employers subject to all the normal legal obligations of an employer including adherence to Health & Safety legislation. Sponsors are also required to arrange appropriate employer's and employee's public liability insurance for their projects.

Any injury compensation claims arising within projects do not therefore involve the Agency and are the subject of settlement between the employer, their insurers and the claimant. Consequently the Agency does not hold information about the incidence of claims, the nature of settlement, or the value of compensation awarded.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to provide a Union flag for the premises of the Department of Agriculture at Newry road, Armagh; what arrangements have been made to fly the Union flag at these Government premises on the designated dates; why it was not flown on 1 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: A Union flag is available at the premises of the Department of Agriculture at 2 Newry road, Armagh, for use on designated dates.

The Union flag is normally flown at the premises on designated dates, although I regret that it was not flown on Saturday 1 January 1994 as no staff were available on that day to carry out the task.

In future, when the designated date falls on a weekend or a public holiday the Union flag will be raised on the afternoon of the last working day prior to the designated date and lowered on the morning of the next working day.

Negative Equity

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the number of households with negative equity for the third quarter of 1993; and what this figure represents as a proportion of total owner-occupied households.

Mr. Tim Smith: I am unaware of any households in Northern Ireland with negative equity resulting from fluctuations in the housing market.

PRIME MINISTER

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

The Prime Minister: My office has not placed any contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by my office.

Civil List

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what is the annual financial value of the inflation-proofing built into the civil list; and by what amounts that has exceeded the sum required for annual indexation based on the actual cost of living in each year since the new civil list was introduced.

The Prime Minister: There is no inflation-proofing built into the civil list. While the £7·9 million fixed annual payment took account of the average rate of inflation for the years 1979-1989, if actual inflation falls below this level the household is not in a position to spend the surplus but is expected to carry it forward to the end of the 10-year period. This was made quite clear in paragraph 12 of the 1990 report of the Royal Trustees—HC 629—which reads:

"If cost inflation is lower in overall terms than the rate assumed in paragraph 11, the Royal Trustees would expect the Royal Household to carry forward a surplus at the end of the decade, for use in the next period."

Civil list expenditure to date under the new arrangements has fallen well below the actual rate of inflation.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what account is taken of the inflation-proofing element in the annual refund of civil list money relating to those who have been removed from the civil list.

The Prime Minister: As set out in the report of the Royal Trustees—paragraphs 21 to 23 of HC464, 11 February 1993—Her Majesty the Queen now reimburses the Consolidated Fund for the full cost of all the parliamentary annuities paid to members of the royal family except the Queen Mother and the Duke of Edinburgh. The reimbursement for 1993 has already been received. The annuities are fixed sums and the question of inflation does not arise.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether he has provided Lord Justice Scott with all documents requested for use by the inquiry;

(2) what documents he has submitted to Lord Justice Scott in advance of his appearance before the inquiry.

The Prime Minister: The only request I have received is for a written statement, which I submitted on 12 January.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines he has issued to Ministers in regard to which questions on the involvement of the United Kingdom in arms and military equipment exports to Iraq since 1985 may be substantively answered while the Scott inquiry is still sitting.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 7 June 1993, Official Report, column 14.

Mr. Frank Machon

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what record he has of telephone calls made by Mr. Frank Machon of Glasgow to officials at 10 Downing street between September and the end of December 1993.

The Prime Minister: None.

Radio Broadcast

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a transcript of his interview with "The World this Weekend" broadcast on Radio 4 on 2 January.

The Prime Minister: No, it is not my policy to do so.

The Union

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to make it his policy that the county of Cambridgeshire, or any other similar area in England, Scotland or Wales, will be permitted to secede from the Union should the majority of the residents of that county agree freely and concurrently with a majority of the residents of any other foreign country that they wish to do so; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1993]: For my own part, I whole-heartedly support the continuation of the Union in its present form. The question of secession arises only in the context of nations rather than areas within the different jurisdictions. The majority of people in each of the constituent parts of the United Kingdom wish to maintain the Union.

TRANSPORT

BR Employees

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing how many York-based British Rail employees were employed by each division of British Rail at the latest date for which figures are available and at the same date in each of the previous three years.

Mr. Freeman: As at 1 January 1994, the number of York-based British Rail employees by division was as follows:

	Number
Central Services	532
British Rail Property Board	45
Trainload Freight	69
Inter City	988
British Transport Police	10
Regional Railways	601
British Rail Telecom	71
Group HQ	38
Total	2,354

Information for the previous three years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hasquad Study

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Hasquad study.

Mr. Norris: I announced on 4 January my decision not to pursue further the proposals for new road and rail infrastructure put forward by the consultants in their report on the Hasquad study.

The consultants' proposals would be very costly, amounting to more than £800 million in total. At a time when public spending is under severe pressure, there has to be a very strong case for taking these proposals forward. When there is an overriding need for a transport scheme, whether road or rail, difficult decisions cannot be avoided. But in this case the consultants were concerned with problems within the study area, and proposed options mainly to benefit local residents and town centres. In these circumstances, we would want to take the proposals forward only if they had been strongly supported by the community. If the proposals are unwelcome in the area, I see no reason for the Government to adopt them.

Of the large number of comments we have received from local residents since publication of the Hasquad report, the overwhelming majority have been opposed to the proposals. These have caused anxiety about the possible effects on property in the area and I therefore decided to end the uncertainty now rather than wait until the end of the consultation period.

The problems of travel and traffic congestion in the area identified by the consultants do, however, remain and are likely to get worse. My Department will therefore be ready to consider a package of more limited measures which the local authorities may wish to bring forward, in consultation with transport operators, with proposals for funding them.

Marchioness Disaster

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps were taken by the Metropolitan police, his maritime accident investigation branch, or any other body or person respectively to (a) obtain statements from and (b) provide information concerning their opportunity to give voluntary evidence to the maritime accident investigation branch inquiry, to Simon Hook and Dino Pereira, surviving passengers from the last cruise of the Marchioness.

Mr. Norris: Statements from both Mr. Hook and Mr. Pereira were taken by the Metropolitan police and copies were given to the inquiry. By means of press advertisement, anyone who wished to contribute to the inquiry was invited to do so; neither of the two gentleman named responded.

WALES

Negative Equity

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of households with negative equity for the third quarter of 1993; and what this figure represents as a proportion of total owner-occupied households.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on households with negative equity is not available for Wales as the samples in relevant surveys are too small to produce reliable estimates.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

7 Millbank

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee on how many occasions during 1993 the electricity supply to 7 Millbank was interrupted; on how many of these occasions the House authorities were warned of the interruption; and when he expects a reliable supply to be available.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is a matter for the Director of Works and I shall ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each London borough the number of households and the proportion of all households claiming income support for each year since 1989.

Mr. Burt: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each London borough the number of households and the proportion of all households claiming family credit for each year since 1989.

Mr. Burt: This information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the United Kingdom and by standard region, including Greater London, the number of households and the proportion of all households claiming family credit for each year since 1989.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a regional breakdown of the figures published in "Personal Pensions 1993" by his Department.

Mr. Hague: A regional breakdown of all the tables in "Personal Pension Statistics 1991-92" could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

However, summary regional analyses are available and are in the tables.

Single Parents

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single-parent families there were to which the father made no contribution before the establishment of the Child Support Agency; and how many of such families there were at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: In 1991 there were 1·27 million[1] lone parents in the United Kingdom. Research conducted at the time indicated that just over 70 per cent. or about 900,000 of these families received no regular maintenance. These are the latest figures available.

Marginal Deduction Rates

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide the latest estimates for the numbers of people with marginal net income deduction rates at or above 50 per cent., 60 per cent., 70 per cent., 80 per cent., 90 per cent. and 100 per cent. in 1992-93, 1993-94 or 1994-95, on the same basis as figure 19 on page 11 of the social security departmental report, February 1993.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table. Estimates for 1994-95 are not available.

The main reason for the increase in the numbers facing high marginal deduction rates is the effect of a reduction in the number of hours worked per week required to qualify for family credit from 24 to 16 which was introduced in April 1992. This has widened the scope of the analysis to include people working 16 to 24 hours per week who would have previously been in receipt of income support and faced deduction rates of 100 per cent.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been made against decisions that a recipient of invalidity benefit is fit for work for the last three quarters for which figures are available; and how many of those appeals have been successful.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table.

[1] Figures show all invalidity benefit appeals, including those against decisions that the claimant is capable of work.

[2] Includes appeals lodged in an earlier quarter.

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the salary to be paid to the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency; and what will be the total cost to the exchequer of this agency.

Mr. Hague: The post of chief executive of the War Pensions Agency is defined as civil service unified grade 5 level. Accordingly, Peter Mathison, chief executive-designate, will be paid within the grade 5 range of £36,019 to £53,740.

The agency's administration budget for 1994-95 is currently set at £55·8 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 29 November 1993 concerning a constituent's concern over the Child Support Agency of Ref. 3644/52; and what is the reason for the delay.

(2) when the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) will receive a reply to his letter of 9 December regarding a constituent's letter on the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: I have replied to the hon. Member's letters today. I regret that increased levels of correspondence on child support have meant that replies are in some instances taking longer than usual.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the membership of the group considering the criteria for eligibility for the proposed incapacity benefit.

Mr. Scott: As part of the consultation exercise on the proposed new objective medical test for incapacity benefit, we have convened a group of 80 experts to consider the details of the test. These experts are disabled people, representatives of disability organisations, doctors from the fields of general practice, occupational medicine, rheumatology, spinal disorders, public health, rehabilitation medicine, psychiatry and clinical psychology, chest and heart disease, diabetes and endocrinology, pain management, medical oncology and surgery, occupational speech therapists, physiotherapists and academics and researchers in the field of disability.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are unemployed but ineligible for state unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: Information held relates to the numbers of unemployed people claiming benefit or national insurance credits. The table provides a breakdown of the position of unemployed claimants at 12 August 1993, although a proportion of those not in receipt of unemployment benefit would have been awaiting a decision on their claim.

	Thousands
Total claimants	2,821
Unemployment benefit in payment	532
Unemployment benefit with income support	108
Income support only in payment	1,817
Neither unemployment benefit nor income support in payment	364

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Grant Write-offs

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what amount paid to Unicorn Heritage plc has been written off; on what date that decision was made; by whose authority the decision was taken and how it was communicated to the company.

Mr. Sproat: Unicorn Heritage plc went into liquidation on 25 June 1990. On 13 August 1992, the English tourist board recommended to my Department that a debt of £200,000 owed to the board by Unicorn Heritage should be written off as irrecoverable. The board took this step following a letter from the company's liquidators, which stated that there was no prospect of this debt being paid.

Treasury approval for the write-off was given on 14 May 1993, and the loss was noted in my Department's 1992-93 appropriation accounts on 30 September 1993. There was no need for further communication with the company, which in any case had ceased to exist. Unicorn Heritage plc was not treated differently in any way from that in which any other company in similar circumstances would be treated.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Council Boards

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice he has given to training and enterprise councils over the granting of financial assistance to aid the declaration of interest of directors of TEC boards.

Miss Widdecombe: The contract between training and enterprise councils and the Department requires that TEC directors and employees declare any direct or material interest that may arise in respect of any matter to which the TEC is party. Where an interest has been declared, the prior approval of the directors is required before any contract may be made or funding given to any person or company. A director who has declared a conflict of interest may not be involved in such a decision.

Pit Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial assistance has been made available through training and enterprise councils to help collieries which have been closed since the publication of "Prospects for Coal" to reopen under private ownership.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has made available £75 million to training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service to implement business plans to help communities affected by pit closures.

Plans include provision for job search activities and training and business start-up programmes.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amount of finance has been made available for each closed colliery through training and enterprise councils to aid regeneration and redeployment activities.

Miss Widdecombe: The amount of finance being made available through training and enterprise councils to the areas affected by each colliery closure is given in the table:

£5 million has been made available to the Employment Service for assessment, guidance and job search activities.

£2·6 million allocated to Wales.

Youth Training

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide an up-to-date table showing for Greater London and for England as a whole, and for each year from 1989, the number of places on youth training schemes and the number of people who have been waiting for over eight weeks for a place.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of young people on youth training or youth credits for each year since 1989 was as follows:

	London	England
1989	20,300	306,200
1990	19,900	279,200
1991	12,200	260,700
1992	19,900	233,200
1993	21,100	231,800

Source: Management information provided by training providers and training and enterprise councils).

Information on the number of young people covered by the youth training guarantee has been collected only since autumn 1992. On 9 December 1993, the most recent date for which information is available, the number of young registered with the careers service and waiting for a youth training place for eight or more weeks was 264 in London and 1,111 in England.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide an up-to-date table showing for each training and enterprise council in Greater London, the figures for youth training cost per output point, employment training cost per output point, national vocational qualifications—NVQs—per 100 youth training leavers, positive outcomes per 100 employment training leavers, NVQs per 100 employment training leavers, youth training guarantee and investors in people.

Miss Widdecombe: Inter-TEC comparison tables for 1992-93 were published on 13 September 1993. A copy is available in the Library. We intend to publish full-year comparisons for 1993-94 this summer. We do not plan to publish in-year tables, because uneven flows of information during the year can distort comparisons of performance.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide an up-to-date table showing for TECs in England and Wales the amount of funding (a) allocated and (b) paid to them under each block of expenditure, for each year since 1990-91 and the amounts allocated for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The budgets allocated and paid to training and enterprise councils in England in 1992-93, and the allocations for 1993-94 are shown in the table.

Information on funding to TECs in England for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is not available. Funding in these transitional years was made through both area offices and TECs, and included Scotland.

From 1992-93, funding blocks were replaced by individual budgets for each programme to be delivered. The table is therefore shown by programme.

Funding for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what activities currently carried out by the Health and Safety Commission and Executive will be curtailed as a result of the reduction in its grant in aid provision in 1994-95.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Information about financial provision for the Health and Safety Executive will be published in the departmental report. Further detail will be provided in the 1994-95 estimates. The Health and Safety Commission's planned future activities will be set out in its plan of work for 1994-95 and beyond which is scheduled for publication in June.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Land Mines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the recent request by the United States Government for a global ban on the export of anti-personnel land mines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The request of the United States Government was tabled at the United Nations General Assembly, as a resolution calling for a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations. The United Kingdom supported this resolution; however, in doing so, we stated our view that anti-personnel land mines directed at military targets are legitimate defensive weapons when used in compliance with the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention. If they are used in accordance with protocol II of the convention, and particularly if they are fitted with a self-destructing or self-neutralising mechanism, they do not pose grave dangers to civilian populations. We therefore think it would be wrong if the possession of self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel mines were restricted to countries with the capacity to manufacture them.

Lockerbie

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his South African counterpart in relation to the bombing of Pan-Am flight 103 over Lockerbie in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Diplomatic Fines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by country the fines paid in 1993 by British embassies or consulates incurred by illegally parked official vehicles.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Macedonian Embassy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish an embassy in the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia following its diplomatic recognition by the EU Foreign Affairs Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been British Government representation in Skopje since May 1993. Following the establishment of diplomatic relations with the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia on 16 December, formalities were completed to enable our mission to become a full embassy on 23 December. Her Majesty's ambassador in Skopje presented his credentials to President Gligorov on the same day.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the visit of the United Nations Secretary-General to North Korea over the Christmas period with regard to implementation of nuclear inspection.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary-General of the United Nations visited North Korea over Christmas on a mission of goodwill in the framework of preventive diplomacy. One purpose of the visit was to convey to North Korea international concern at her continued failure to comply fully with International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and her equivocal attitude to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Somalia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the appeal by the representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Somalia for assistance with dismantling of unstable ground to air missiles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not received a request for assistance from the UNHCR on this matter. The UNHCR headquarters in Geneva has confirmed that no such appeal has been launched.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he raised the case of the continued imprisonment of Mordechai Vanunu during his recent visit to Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have raised with the Israelis our concerns over humanitarian aspects of this case. The Israelis assured us in 1993 that the conditions under which Mr. Vanunu is detained have improved. We have no formal standing to intervene and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did not therefore do so when he was in Israel earlier this month.

East Timor

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has initiated at the United Nations over Indonesia's occupation of East Timor and treatment of its people.

Mr. Goodlad: East Timor and human rights issues there are regularly addressed at the United Nations in New York and at the annual session of the UN Commission for Human Rights in Geneva. We work with our European Union partners as appropriate in these bodies. We have encouraged Fortugal and Indonesia to work together under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General to find a solution to the East Timor problem.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise with (a) the United Nations and (b) member states of the European Union the case for a ban on arms sales to Indonesia on account of its occupation of East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: None. We do not believe that a ban on arms sales to Indonesia would be appropriate.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion or other contact he has had with the United States Government over their imposition of a ban on arms sales to Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: We are aware through Her Majesty's Embassy in Washington of recent United States action on defence sales to Indonesia, but we have our own clear policy and have no plans to change it.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about their occupation of East Timor; and what response he has received.

Mr. Goodlad: We have encouraged Indonesia and Portugal to work together under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General to find a solution to the East Timor problem.

European Council

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following meeting is planned:

24 and 25 January: Agriculture Council

1. The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

Agriculture Council—24 and 25 January

—GATT
—Beef Quotas (possible)
—Forestry Monitoring Scheme (possible)
—Compensation Rules (possible)
—Pesticides (uniform principles) (possible)

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he uses to distinguish between those matters that are considered to be commercially confidential with reference to BNFL and those considered to be of public interest and importance.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 7 July 1992, Official Report, column 138 and on 24 March 1993, Official Report, column 612.

Biodiversity

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the activities of his Department he has so far identified which threaten biodiversity abroad.

Mr. McLoughlin: The principles of sustainable development are taken into account in the development of my Department's policies. In international trade for example, the United Kingdom complies with the convention on international trade in endangered species and is participating fully in the trade and environment debate in both the general agreement on tariffs and trade and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

So far as United Kingdom bilateral aid support for infrastructural projects in developing countries is concerned, the Overseas Development Administration guidelines on aid procedures are taken into consideration. The industrial and commercial aspects and the environmental impacts of the project are assessed.

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom international trade he has so far identified where his Department has a role to play to further the objectives of the United Kingdom biodiversity national action plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

International trade, finance and aid issues will be covered in the biodiversity United Kingdom action plan and the sustainable development strategy as appropriate, both of which are due to be published very soon.

Cardigan Bay Licenses

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he made to the request by the campaign for a cleaner Cardigan bay for reasons for his Department's decisions on the issuance of oil and gas exploration licenses under the 14th round.

Mr. Eggar: I wrote to the Friends of Cardigan Bay regarding their "Campaign for a Cleaner Cardigan Bay" on 18 November 1992 and 29 January last year to explain the reasons for the Government's decision to offer blocks for oil and gas licensing in the 14th round. Since then, my officials have reiterated the points I made, both in general terms and with specific reference to those licences issued following the 14th round for blocks in Cardigan bay, through a number of letters and a recent meeting at which a member of the Friends of Cardigan Bay was present.

Nuclear Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received from the United States Energy Secretary with regard to her policy on the shipment of US-origin nuclear fuel from Switzerland to Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Plutonium (Japan)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the dates of dispatch and arrival of the plutonium returned to Japan since 1979; and what quantities of plutonium were involved.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 25 May 1993, Official Report, column 487.

Nuclear Safety

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the publication date for the nuclear installations inspectorate examination of generic safety issues in Magnox reactors in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 11 January, Official Report, column 185.

Vehicle Maufacturers

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the numbers of motor cars and commercial vehicles manufactured in the United Kingdom and in South Korea since 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The numbers of cars and commercial vehicles manufactured in the United Kingdom and in South Korea since 1987 are given in the table.

Number of motor cars and commercial vehicles produced in the United Kingdom and in South Korea

	United Kingdom		South Korea
	Cars	Commercial vehicles	Cars	Commercial vehicles

Swan Hunter

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the European Commission has agreed to allow Swan Hunter to have access to the shipbuilding intervention fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following protracted negotations, the European Commission agreed on 21 December to allow Swan Hunter to have limited access to the shipbuilding intervention fund. The sum agreed is £7 million for up to three contracts to be offered during 1994 and 1995. This concession should enable Swan Hunter to compete more effectively for merchant contracts and so make them more attractive to potential buyers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of direct and indirect tax paid by each quartile income group for each year since 1977; and what amounts are estimated for the next three years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available.

1993 Budgets

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average cost of the March and November 1993 Budgets to businesses with a turnover of less than £30,000 per annum and to businesses with a turnover greater than £500,000 per annum in terms of a percentage of turnover.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to provide the information requested. The net cost or benefit to individual businesses from the 1993 Budget measures will depend on a wide variety of factors including many not dependent on turnover, such as number of employees and rates of pay, level of profits, level of dividends and liability for non-domestic rates.

Private Medical Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many over 60-year-olds claim tax relief on private medical insurance in each year since relief was granted.

Mr. Dorrell: About 350,000 people have received tax relief on private medical insurance for contracts covering about 500,000 individuals, in each year since 1990-91.

Private Health Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much revenue is generated from individuals paying tax on the benefit of private health care provided by an employer;

(2) what is the Treasury estimate of the loss of revenue caused by making the company provision of private health care able to be set against tax.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that in 1993-94 the tax due on the benefit of private medical, dental, etcetera, attention and treatment or insurance against the cost of such treatment provided by an employer will be about £190 million. Employers generally are able to obtain business tax relief for the expenses incurred in providing any benefits in kind in the same way as for wages and salaries. It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the effects on tax paid by employers.

Statistical Inquiry Work

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make available the results of the consultation exercise on contracting out statistical inquiry work announced by the Central Statistical Office on 22 September 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The consultation exercise was carried out by independent market researchers, and a copy of their report has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons. The results will be taken into account when any market testing of statistical activities is undertaken.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the implications for the import and export of toxic waste to and from the United Kingdom of the entering into force of the European Economic Area agreement on 1 January.

Mr. Atkins: Shipments of toxic waste will continue to be regulated as before.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total housing subsidy paid to (a) local authorities in England and Wales and (b) the City of Manchester for (i) the lastest 12-month period for which figures are available and (ii) the comparable 12-month period for 1979-80.

Mr. Baldry: The figures are set out in the table.

Year	England and Wales £ million	City of Manchester £
1979-80	1,333	30,063,403
1993-94	4,229	172,142,731

Since 1 April 1990, housing revenue account subsidy has included a contribution to rent rebate expenditure by local authorities. A rent rebate element of subsidy is therefore included in the above figures for 1993-94, but not in the figures for 1979-80.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost to date of the Ordnance Survey market-testing programme.

Mr. Atkins: The total cost to date of the market-testing programme which commenced in April 1992 is £342,500 including full staff costs and consultants' fees. The management and staff costs incurred before April 1992 were not specifically attributed to market-testing.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected total cost of the Ordnance Survey market-testing programme.

Mr. Atkins: The total cost of the existing market-testing programme which commenced in April 1992 and is planned to end in March 1994 is expected to be £413,250; this comprises both management costs and consultancy fees.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what management consultants have been used to advise on market-testing in connection with Ordnance Survey; for what purposes; and at what cost.

Mr. Atkins: The following management consultants have been engaged in assisting Ordnance Survey with its market-testing programme at a total cost of £113,750:

Coopers and Lybrand
CSL Group Ltd.
Grosvenor Consulting Ltd.
Tricon FoodService Consultants

Consultants provided scoping advice, advised on the preparation of service specifications and assisted in the assessment of potential bidders, preparing in-house bids and analysing tenders.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total management and staff costs for the project board teams associated with the Ordnance Survey market-testing programme.

Mr. Atkins: The total management and staff costs to date for market-testing project teams in Ordnance Survey are £249,000.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what savings have been made as a result of the Ordnance Survey market-testing programme.

Mr. Atkins: Projected annual savings resulting from the market-testing programme which commenced in April 1992 are £1,554,580. Further benefits include the acceleration of the development and production of base data for new products.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost in 1992-93 of the Ordnance Survey market-testing programme.

Mr. Atkins: The total cost in the financial year 1992-93 was £230,000.

Biodiversity Action Plan

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas of export finance and aid he has so far identified where he believes his Department can help to further the objectives of the United Kingdom biodiversity national action plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today to his question to the President of the Board of Trade, Official Report, column 306.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage increase in the standard spending assessment provided for the Wychavon district council.

Mr. Baldry: Within the proposals for revenue support grant for 1994-95 announced on 2 December 1993, the provisional increase in the SSA for Wychavon district council between 1993-94 and 1994-95 is 11·9 per cent.

Yorkshire Water

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what agreements the National Rivers Authority has made with Yorkshire Water (a) on levels of pollution entering the Yorkshire Ouse system from sewage treatment works and (b) on increasing abstraction of water from the Ouse system; and how these two sets of agreements are linked.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority and Yorkshire Water.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was Yorkshire Water's 1992 estimate of the cost of transferring water from Kielder reservoir via the River Tees to Elvington on the River Derwent.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for Yorkshire Water.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the National Rivers Authority's 1993 estimate of the cost of transferring Kielder water into the Yorkshire grid system.

Mr. Atkins: My Department does not have this information.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much the National Rivers Authority paid to Sir William Halcrow and Partners for its study of water resources in the Yorkshire region, published in October 1993;

(2) what advice the National Rivers Authority's fisheries scientists have given to the National Rivers Authority's water resources division about the consequences of transferring Kielder water via the Rivers Whisk, Swale and Ouse.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters of day-to-day management for the National Rivers Authority.

Corby District Council

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum paid to Corby district council in each year of operation in lieu of rate revenue forgone in enterprise zones.

Mr. Baldry: The sums paid to Corby District Council in lieu of rate revenue forgone in enterprise zones were:

Year	£000's
1981-82	126
1982-83	434
1983-84	1,146
1984-85	1,688
1985-86	2,155
1986-87	2,896
1987-88	3,464
1988-89	4,344
1989-90	4,711

The figures are in own year prices.

Following the introduction of the national non-domestic rates in April 1990, the lost yield from business rates on enterprise zones is taken into account in setting the national poundage and it is no longer necessary to compensate councils individually for rate revenue forgone.

Council House Sales

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district authority in Northamptonshire the total discounted value of houses and flats sold by them for each year since 1980-81.

Sir George Young: The total discounted values of dwellings sold by local authorities in Northamptonshire in the years 1980-81 to 1992-93 are given in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy towards council tenants purchasing the property they live in with the assistance of a loan from a private individual to whom they are not related.

Sir George Young: Council tenants have the same freedom as other home buyers to finance the purchase of their homes under the right to buy from whatever source they choose. The Department's advisory booklet "Your Right to Buy Your Home" encourages tenants to take independent legal advice before proceeding with their purchase.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the funding for the North Peckham task force in 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to my letter of 6 December 1993 setting out the arrangements for funding of the North Peckham task force up to and beyond its closure on 31 March 1994. Detailed allocations of funding for 1994-95 have not yet been agreed, but there will be sufficient cover to honour all continuing contractual commitment.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member of Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 11 November regarding market franchise rights of G/BA/150/28931/93; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Baldry: We are considering the issue of market franchise rights in the light of the responses received to our consultation document of 16 August 1993 on this subject. Ministers will be replying as soon as possible to the hon. Gentleman and to other hon. Members who have corresponded with them on this subject.

Single Regeneration Budget

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish for consultation the draft bidding guidance on the single regeneration budget.

Sir George Young: We are today issuing for consultation the draft bidding guidance on the single regeneration budget. The guidance is being circulated to a wide range of national and local organisations. Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Commission

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the budget of the Local Government Commission and the costs incurred by the commission so far.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission incurred expenditure of £2·056 million in 1992-93. We are making available £5·124 million to fund the commission's activities in 1993-94.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all land owned by the Forestry Commission in Gloucestershire.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission manages 10,376 hectares of land in Gloucestershire. The commission is preparing a list of the individual woods and I shall send a copy to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the Forestry Commission's holdings in Gloucestershire are earmarked for sale.

Mr. Jack: None of the Forestry Commission's woodlands in Gloucestershire is currently being considered for sale.

Biodiversity Convention

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussion she has had with the Fisheries Ministers in Denmark on initiatives to meet joint commitments under the biodiversity convention signed at Rio, including the application of the conservation and sustainable use of fisheries resources to the North sea.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 14 December 1993, Official Report, columns 541-42.

Latero Flora

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of whether labelling on the American imported product Latero Flora and its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus complies with current food labelling requirements.

Mr. Soames: The responsibility for determining whether labelling of foodstuffs complies with the food labelling regulations lies with local authority trading standards departments. I will ensure that the hon. Gentleman's concerns about this product are brought to the attention of the co-ordinating body for enforcement authorities.

HEALTH

NHS Administration

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many managers and administrators have been employed in NHS hospitals in each year since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table. The figures provide the total number of managers and administrative and clerical staff in national health service regions including those in regional and district headquarters units. The general and senior manager class was introduced in phases from 1986 in recognition of the fact that the NHS was clearly undermanaged. The figures should be treated with caution because the increase is largely due to the reclassification of other professional and administrative staff as general and senior managers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health recently announced proposals for the future management of the NHS. These proposals will bear down on management numbers and maximise the amount spent on patient care. However, general and senior managers still account for only 2 per cent. of the total NHS work force.

General and senior managers and administrative and clerical staff as at 30 September, England

Whole-time equivalents

	1990	1991	1992
General and Senior Managers	8,990	12,420	14,980
Administrative and Clerical	111,730	118,900	122,990

Notes:

1. It is not possible to give a figure for "NHS hospitals" as numbers of staff in HQ units cannot be disaggregated.
2. General and senior manager figures include regional, district and hospital managers plus a small number of family health services authority managers within the RHA/DHA/trust structure.
3. Apart from the small number mentioned in 2 above, the figures exlude managerial and administrative staff in FHSAs and Other Statutory Authorities, but include those in Ambulance Services.
4. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Computer Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide, by health authority and trust in England, the revenue and capital expenditure on computer systems in each of the financial years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library. Part of the goal of the national health service management executive is to pursue a strategy of making the best possible use of the four key resources of money, staff, estates and information. High-quality information is essential for improved patient care and regular upgrading or replacement of information management and technology systems gives rise to higher capital expenditure at intervals.

Mrs. Elsie Westron

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the report on the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Elsie Westron in Greenwich district hospital on 1 September 1993, due to be delivered by the national health service management executive and the Greenwich healthcare trust on 10 January.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report has yet to be presented to the trust board and publication is a matter for it.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which English health authorities will not be providing infertility treatment for 1993-94;

(2) what plans she has to make the provision of infertility treatment by all health authorities obligatory.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service provides a wide range of treatments for subfertility. Decisions about the resources to be made available for these services must be left to individual health authorities as they are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances. Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in two recent publications:

The Effective Health Care Bulletin on management of Subfertility, published for the NHS Management Executive by a consortium of Leeds and York Universities and the Research Unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines for Practice".

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if primary legislation is necessary to require water companies to fluoridate water.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

NHS Staff

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the extent to which NHS staff may talk to hon. Members about their concerns on health matters without fear of disciplinary action.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service staff have a right to seek the advice and guidance of their Member of Parliament on any issue at any time.

Dentists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of dentists took NHS patients in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. However, there are now more dentists in contract with family health services authorities than ever before.

Nurses

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will tabulate the number of students enrolling and qualifying for each of the grades of qualified nurses for each year from 1982 to 1992, together with the approximate numbers for those years leaving national health service employment for all reasons.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the format requested.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors her Department has taken into account over the last 10 years in assessing the need for nurse training places; and what were the estimates of the number of trained nurses under the age of 60 years who were (a) no longer nursing in the public sector, (b) nursing in the private sector and (c) not nursing at all in each year from 1982.

Mr. Sackville: The arrangements for education and training of nurses in the national health service are designed to carry forward Government policy that training should be employer led and that it is for employers to determine the work force they require and the training staff need. Regional health authorities calculate the overall demand for training places in consultation with provider units, family health service authorities and the private and voluntary sectors.

Total number of trained nursing staff (excluding registered midwives and nursing auxiliaries/assistants) in private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984 England

Information is not available in the format requested on training nurses no longer nursing in the public sector. Information on the number of trained nurses under the age of 60 who were not nursing at all is not available centrally.

Speech Therapists

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of speech therapists employed by each health authority in England and Wales indicating in each case any shortfall against establishment.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available figures for speech therapists employed in the national health service in England, by region and by district health authority, are shown in the table. Information on shortfall against establishment is provided for regional health authorities, but not by district health authority and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prescriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received about people not being able to use their prescriptions because they cannot afford to pay the charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: Nine in the past year.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department undertakes of the affordability of prescription charges in order to inform annual decisions over uprating.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. There are extensive arrangements for charge exemption and remission which ensure that no one need forgo necessary medication for financial reasons.

Corporate Governance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to announce the findings of the working party on corporate governance.

Dr. Mawhinney: Copies of the report of the corporate governance task force will be placed in the Library. We are now consulting a wide range of interested bodies on draft codes of accountability, and of conduct for national health service boards and their members.

Departmental Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the time scale and scope of the review of her Department's staffing and functions.

Mr. Sackville: We announced a review of the Department of Health, excluding the national health service management executive and the Department's agencies, on 6 January. The terms of reference of the review, giving details of its time scale and scope, are as follows.

TERMS OF REFERENCE

TAKING INTO ACCOUNT:

decisions and on-going work on the NHS Functions and Manpower Review;
the requirements of Ministers and the demands made on them by Parliament and the public;
the importance of reducing running costs as far as possible while maintaining an effective service to Ministers; continuing guidance from the Steering Group appointed to oversee this and related work.

1. To identify the core functions, responsibilities and accountabilities of the Department of Health, excluding the Management Executive, the agencies, the Medical Devices Directorate and the Youth Treatment Service.
2. To examine the manpower resources used to do that work including in particular the Senior Open Structure posts and the way they are organised and deployed.
3. To identify the borderline between the work of the wider Department and the Management Executive and to examine the way they work together.
4. To make recommendations by the end of May about:
work that should no longer be done;
what work, if any, should be transferred between the wider Department and the Management Executive;
the management structures and the use of manpower best suited to deliver effectively the work that remains;
the level of staffing in general;
the number, grading and responsibilities of the Senior Open Structure posts in particular;
the elimination of any duplication of work between the wider Department and the Management Executive.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the membership of the review team investigating her Department's staffing and functions.

Mr. Sackville: The review will be conducted by Mrs. Terri Banks, formerly Registrar General for England and Wales. She will be supported by management consultants, who have yet to be appointed, and by a grade 7 and an HEO(D) civil servant, from the Department of Health and the Treasury respectively.

The review will be conducted under the oversight of a steering group, which will also be responsible for ensuring that this exercise is co-ordinated with the implementation of changes to national health service central management arising from the functions and manpower review. The steering group's membership is as follows:

Graham Hart, Permanent Secretary, Department of Health (Chairman).
Sir Duncan Nichol, Chief Executive, NHSME.
Dr. Kenneth Calman, Chief Medical Officer.
Andrew Edwards, Grade 2, Treasury.
Brian Edwards, Regional General Manager, West Midlands RHA.
Alan Langlands, Chief Executive Designate, NHSME.
Joe Pilling, Grade 2, Department of Health.
Strachan Heppell, Grade 2, Department of Health.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the review of her Department's staffing and functions will cover the work of her Department in answering parliamentary questions and dealing with correspondence and inquiries from hon. Members.

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

Single Mothers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to announce details of her plan to assist single mothers to return to the work force.

Mr. Bowis: The changes to the rules governing disregards and the entitlement to family credit, announced in the Budget by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will stimulate expansion of child care services. These changes have effect in October this year. We shall announce measures in the Department's field to support these important changes before then.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the criteria to be applied for including a person on the proposed register of the serious mentally ill living in the community.

Mr. Bowis: We will shortly be issuing guidance to national health service purchasers and provider units which will set out the criteria for including a mentally ill person on the register.

Patients (Information)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the patient information leaflets proposed by her Department will include information relating to appropriate and inappropriate techniques for administering the medicine concerned;

(2) what steps she intends to take to ensure awareness of, and access to, patient information leaflets relating to medicines used within the national health service;

(3) what is the planned time scale for the introduction of patient information leaflets about medicines used within the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Unless all the required information is on the product label, an approved patient information leaflet is required for a new product granted a marketing authorisation on or after 1 January 1994 and for an existing medicine where its marketing authorisation is renewed.

The patient leaflet is to be supplied with the medicine when it is dispensed to the patient. Patient information leaflets provide information on how the medicine should be used including the indication, dose instructions, precautions, warnings and side-effects. Doctors and pharmacists have been informed about the introduction of patient information leaflets in the November issue of "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance".

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount devoted to research into HIV and AIDS by her Department for each financial year since 1986-87.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support research into HIV and AIDS is the Medical Research Council—MRC—which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The table shows the level of research funded by the Department of Health either directly or, since 1988-89, via the MRC for its epidemiological research and its AIDS programme.

Year	Direct DH funding (£000)	DH contribution to MRC research (£000)	Total (£000)
1986-87	111	—	111
1987-88	239	—	239
1988-89	464	400	864
1989-90	500	650	1,150
1990-91	593	1,233	1,826
1991-92	786	2,000	2,786
1992-93	789	1,708	2,497
1993-94	789	1,838	2,627

The figures quoted for 1993-94 are current estimates.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his best estimate of the percentage incidence of AIDS in each EC country.

Mr. Sackville: This table shows for each European Community country the number of AIDS cases reported to the World Health Organisation in 1992 and the estimated incidence rate per 100,000 population.

Country	AIDS Cases Reported to WHO in 1992	Rate per 100,000 population.
Belgium	118	1.1
Denmark	196	3.8
Germany	1286	2.1
France	4151	7.3
Greece	162	1.6
Ireland	75	1.9
Italy	3812	6.6
Luxembourg	12	3.2
Netherlands	468	3.1
Portugal	265	2.5
Spain	3469	8.7
United Kingdom	1268	2.2

The table indicates that the United Kingdom is in a relatively favourable position compared with for example France, Italy and Spain. This underlines the importance of the prompt and decisive action taken to limit the impact of HIV on the United Kingdom population and of more recent campaigns to alert the public to the risks of HIV infection when travelling to countries with higher prevalence.

Press and Communications

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed in the press and communications office at Richmond house, including clerical and administrative staff in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The number of staff employed in the main press office for each year since 1990 is as follows:

Year	Number
1990-91	15
1991-92	14
1992-93	15
1993-94	14

There is a separate press support section which has five administrative staff.

Press Conferences

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press conferences the Department held in each year since 1990; and what was the cost of the conferences for each year.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1991 the expenditure by family health services authorities on administration.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 3 December 1993 at columns 799-800, which gave expenditure on administration by family health services authorities. Expenditure on administration by contractors providing family health services is not available centrally.

GP Surgeries (Closures)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline the rights which exist for patients, in the patients charter or other official documents, to appeal against a family health services authority's decision to close a general practice surgery.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no rights of appeal against decisions to close general practice surgeries.

Latero Flora

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will order an investigation into whether the American imported product Latero Flora and its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus meets the requirements of a novel food;

(2) what was the result of the independent assay carried out by the Government chemist on the product Latero Flora in relation to its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus;

(3) what approval under the Food Safety Act 1990 has been given for the American imported product Latero Flora and its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus;

(4) what recent tests her Department has carried out into the product Latero Flora and its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus; and with what results.

Mr. Sackville: Latero Flora was the subject of a recent, voluntary, application for approval as a novel food product. The independent, expert, Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes agreed that it should be classed as a novel food, but concluded that additional information was required before a decision could be reached; the manufacturer has been asked to provide that additional data.

The Department has neither carried out nor commissioned tests or analyses of Latero Flora. It is understood, however, that an analysis was recently commissioned, by a private organisation, from the Laboratory of the Government Chemist; neither the Department nor the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has seen a report of that analysis.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order an investigation into the promotional literature for the imported American product Latero Flora and its active ingredient bacillus laterosporus.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency investigates all reports of unlicensed medicines and their advertising, labelling and sales and takes appropriate action to stop illegal activity as soon as possible. Following a reference in October 1993, the agency secured assurances the following month from the suppliers of Latero Flora in the United Kingdom that the promotional literature complained of would no longer be used. The agency's wider investigation continues.

Counsellors

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued to family health service authorities, regarding criteria for deciding whether to reimburse general practices for the employment of staff designated as counsellors.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidelines on how the general practitioner practice staff reimbursement scheme should be administered are contained in the "Statement of Fees and Allowances", copies of which are available in the Library.

Patients

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory procedures exist for consulting patients about the closure of, or changes to, the general practice surgery with which they are registered.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no specific statutory procedures for consulting patients in such cases. Family health services authorities are, however, required by the Community Health Council Regulations 1985 to consult the local community health council on any proposals to make any substantial variation in the provision of general medical services in their area.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the development of medical priority dispatch systems within national health service ambulance services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: A number of ambulance services are evaluating the use of priority dispatch systems. No central decisions will be made on a future role for these systems until the safety of their use and the benefits to patients have been fully assessed.

Spectacles

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received about the adequacy of the voucher to cover the cost of spectacles; and how the estimate of the value of the voucher is reached.

Dr. Mawhinney: Departmental officials have met and exchanged correspondence about the value of optical vouchers with the Optical Voucher Consultative Committee, which is composed of representatives from the Association of British Dispensing Opticians, the Association of Optometrists and the Federation of Ophthalmic and Dispensing Opticians. The value of optical vouchers is determined by the patients' optical prescription; the more complex the prescription, the higher the value of the voucher. Values currently range from £24·40 to £113.

Private Health Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics she has on the availability of private health care (a) by region and (b) by district in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Independent hospitals, nursing homes and clinics are required to register with the national health service under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984. Annual statistics are provided which show the provision of beds and other facilities, together with staffing information. Summarised information at national, regional and district level is published in "Private Hospitals, Homes and Clinics Registered under Section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984", copies of which are available in the Library.

Private Medicine

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the membership of the Welsh Office/Department of Health joint working party, set up to review rules on practising private medicine on national health service premises.

Mr. Sackville: There is no such joint working party. The Department of Health and the Welsh Office are revising the handbook "Management of Private Practice in Health Service Hospitals in England and Wales" and officials are liaising in the normal way.

Depo medrone

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she expects to produce a patient information leaflet for the drug Depo medrone.

Mr. Sackville: Patient information leaflets are produced by pharmaceutical companies which market medicinal products and are authorised by the licensing authority. Under a European Community directive on the labelling of human medicines and leaflets—EC 92/27—copies of which are available in the Library, a package leaflet containing specified information for the patient has to be provided unless that information is on the product label. United Kingdom regulations implementing these provisions have been made and the new requirement came into force from 1 January 1994. Products already on the market, such as Depo medrone, have to meet the new requirements at the time of the five-yearly renewal of their licence.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff, whole-time equivalents, are employed at Richmond house.

Mr. Sackville: There are 441 staff who work for the Department of Health and 190 who work for the Department of Social Security. We are unable to provide these figures as whole-time equivalents.

Press Releases

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much it cost to redesign the Department's press release paper.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of redesigning the Department's paper was £993.

Car Parks

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region, for each year since 1990, the income from car parking charges implemented by hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the net income received from car parking charges in 1991-92, provided by the 57 national health service trusts which then existed and by region for other hospitals, is shown in the table. Information for other years is not available centrally.

Fundraisers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals and trusts employ a fundraiser; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We welcome a close working partnership between the health service and local voluntary and community groups including fund-raising activities. Detailed information about the number of fundraisers employed is not available centrally.

Corticosteroids

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when and how she intends to publish the findings and recommendations of the Medicine Control Agency's investigation into corticosteroids; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency has investigated the issue of immunosuppression in patients taking corticosteroids and in particular the association with disseminated chickenpox. Advice has been sought from the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its findings and recommendations will be published in the next issue of the bulletin "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance". This will be circulated to all doctors and pharmacists next month.

Health Care Purchasing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 557, if she will provide a breakdown of the purchase of health care from non-NHS bodies for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville: We do not collect expenditure figures broken down by type of health care purchased from non-national health service bodies.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her Department's latest estimates for levels of mesothelioma over the next 30 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the level of mesothelioma is not separately identified at present in Office of Population Censuses and Surveys figures. A review of the OPCS data collection is currently under way with a view to enabling separate identification.

Clothier Inquiry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to announce the findings of the Clothier inquiry.

Dr. Mawhinney: Shortly.

Private Medical Insurance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to arrange that future general household surveys provide details of private medical insurance in British households.

Mr. Sackville: The schedule of questions for the 1994 general household survey—GHS—was finalised some months ago. It is not possible to say at this time whether questions on private medical insurance are likely to be included in the 1995 GHS.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each district health authority (a) the current annual budget and (b) the current number of managerial staff.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 November 1993]: Information will be placed in the Library giving details of revenue expenditure for each district health authority in 1992-93. Information on current budgets and numbers of managerial staff is not available centrally.

Travelling and Subsistence

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for 1991-92 and 1992-93 the expenditure on travelling and subsistence for (a) health regions, (b) health districts and (c) trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The information is shown in the table.

Expenditure on travelling and subsistence

£ thousands

	1991-92	1992-93
Regional health authorities	18,165	18,879
District health authorities	145,094	122,410
NHS trusts	17,987	55,827

Note: Figures for 1992-93 are provisional.

Source: Financial returns for regional health authorities, district health authorities and NHS trusts.

Expenditure in real terms has fallen since 1990-91 due to good management of the national health service. The increased expenditure by NHS trusts reflects the increase in their numbers.

Office Equipment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for 1992-93 and 1991-92 the expenditure on office equipment by (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 14 December 1993]: Information on revenue expenditure is shown in the table.

Revenue expenditure on office equipment

Source: The financial returns of regional health authorities, district health authorities and NHS trusts.

Costs have remained roughly static in real terms since 1990-91. The increase in expenditure by National Health Service trusts reflects the increase in their numbers.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances public money is made available to assist in drawing up a proposal for trust status; on how many such occasions applications for trust status have failed or not been proceeded with; which potential trusts were involved; and what was the cost of drawing up the proposals.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 December 1993]: When expressions of interest in national health service trust status are approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health funds are made available to regional health authorities to assist those units in drawing up their applications. The table lists those applications which were withdrawn or deferred after the expression of interest was approved. Information about the cost of drawing up individual applications is not available centrally.

NHS Leavers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees who have left the NHS have required permission to join firms of management consultants in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 December 1993]: This information is not available centrally. Employment issues such as this are the responsibility of local national health service employers. The Department of Health does not require employers to include any restrictive clause in employment contracts preventing employees from immediately taking up employment as a consultant after resigning from the NHS.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 478, what amount of the fundholding allocation was retained by general practitioner fundholders in 1991-92 (a) in total and (b) in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 December 1993]: The final audited savings for 1991-92 are now available and are shown in the table. Overall general practitioner fundholders retained £14·5 million efficiency savings which will be spent on further improving services for patients. This represents 3·6 per cent. of budgets set and is a considerable achievement by fundholders in the first year of the scheme.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of Forestry Commission land the Government requires the commission to sell by the end of the century; and what area it has sold in the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government asked the Forestry Commission in 1989 to dispose of 100,000 hectares of forestry land and properties during the period up to the end of the century. The commission has sold 32,000 hectares to date.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all Forestry Commission woods in the Hamilton constituency; (2) what plans he has to sell off any of the woods in the Hamilton constituency under the current disposals programme of the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Lang: There are no Forestry Commission woodlands in the Hamilton constituency.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a copy of the information contained in the Forestry Commission's sub-compartment data base in the Library.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 January 1994]: A print of the Forestry Commission's sub-compartment database would cover about 12,000 pages and form a pile of paper about 3.5 ft high. It would be impractical to place this in the Library, although I would arrange for a copy to be delivered to the hon. Member if he wished.

The Forestry Commission is, however, preparing a list of all its woodlands and I shall send a copy to the hon. Member. I shall also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

British Rail Order

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will have completed consideration of the British Railways (No. 3) Provisional Order.

Mr. Lang: In line with the procedures laid down in the general orders under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act 1936 which apply to this draft provisional order, discussions on the content of the order are taking place between my officials and the partlamentary agents acting on behalf of the promoters, British Rail. There is outstanding a petition against the draft order and if that petition is not withdrawn, an inquiry will require to be held before parliamentary commissioners. If the petition is withdrawn, I shall make arrangements for the order confirmation Bill to be introduced into Parliament as soon as possible after completion of these discussions and the necessary statutory procedures. It is hoped that the Bill will be in a position to receive Royal Assent before the Easter recess.

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his views were sought on 5 November 1993 on the appointment of Mr. Laurence Peterken to the post of special projects director with the national health service management executive; whether he had already been informed of the adverse comments made about Mr. Peterken, and the comments made in the letter of 6 August referred to at the Select Committee hearing on Wednesday 1 December; and on what date those comments were drawn to his attention.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend's views were sought on the possibility of Mr. Peterken being offered a post at national level on the afternoon of 5 November. He first became aware of the contents of the letter of 6 August on 23 November. He first became aware of some comments about Mr. Peterken's performance, both favourable and adverse, in February 1993 and of the content of Mr. Peterken's performance appraisal on 30 November.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 15 December 1993, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, if he will list the areas identified by the new NHS chief executive as requiring a short managerial review which will be undertaken by Mr. Laurence Peterken.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State did not write to the hon. Member on 15 December 1993. Pursuant to the Minister of State's letter of that date, Mr. Peterken's first task is to review the organisation of the Common Services Agency, which employs 5,000 people and provides services worth £125 million. Thereafter, he will review the arrangements within the NHS for information services and management development.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his answer, 16 December 1993, c. 884-85]: Expenditure by my Department on advertising for each of the last 12 months has been:

January	51,000
February	47,000
March	362,000
April	38,000
May	51,000
June	68,000

August	102,000
September	60,000
October	367,000

December	243,000

HOME DEPARTMENT

Road Accidents

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the number of road accidents (a) per police officer and (b) per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 for the South Wales, Thames Valley, Kent, Lancashire, Avon and Somerset and Hampshire police authority areas; and what were the comparable totals for all non-metropolitan and Welsh non-metropolitan police authority areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on ratios of police officers to population levels are contained in the appendices to the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, copies of which are in the Library.

Videos

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate the availability of videos for home viewing which contain gratuitously violent material.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 780.

Immigration Controls

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes were made in 1993 to the United Kingdom immigration control arrangements vis-à-vis other member states of the European Community; and what proposals he has to change those arrangements in 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No such changes to our immigration control arrangements were made in 1993. The possible changes outlined in my reply of 9 July 1993 to the hon. Member, at column 298, are still under consideration. However, as indicated in my reply of 15 December 1993, Official Report, column 655, to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), certain changes to embarkation checks will be introduced on 1 February 1994.

Bryn Melyn

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations he has made into the background to professional qualifications and success record of the Bryn Melyn centre for young offenders prior to his comments to the media on the centre's use of away-from-base treatment on 29 December 1993.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend's comments on 29 December 1993 were concerned with the relative powers under existing law of courts and social services departments to make decisions on how to deal with young offenders, and with the changes in the balance of these powers proposed in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which is currently before Parliament.

European Economic Area

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provisions of the European Economic Area agreement to extend the free movement provisions of the EC's single market which came into effect on 1 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 956.

Refugees

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people had their refugee status withdrawn in the last 12 months for which figures are available, and one year and two years earlier.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available indications are that the number of such cases is small.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the guidelines laying down the personal circumstances he takes into account in deciding whether it is appropriate in a particular case to remove the grant of exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no set guidelines, but it might be appropriate not to renew exceptional leave to remain where, for instance, the particular circumstances which had led to its grant had ceased to apply.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many dogs have been destroyed as a result of action taken under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991;

(2) what plans he has to amend or review the operation of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991;

(3) what has been the annual cost to public funds of legal proceedings brought under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of dogs destroyed, and on the cost of legal proceedings in connection with action taken under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, is not collected centrally. However, information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and cautions under the Act during 1992, the first full year of its operation, is given in the tables.

The Act is kept under continuing review. We shall shortly be issuing a further Home Office circular on aspects of the operation of the legislation, but I have no plans to amend the Act.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) designated scientific procedure establishments, (b) procedures carried out by these establishments and (c) project licence holders carrying out these procedures there were in the most recent year for which figures are available;

(2) how many (a) Home Office inspectors by rank and (b) support staff dealt with experiments on live animals at designated establishments in the most recent year for which figures are available;

(3) how many (a) new project licences and (b) new personal licences for scientific procedures on animals were issued in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information about the number of designated establishments, procedures, project licence holders and inspectors is published annually in "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals: Great Britain", 1992: Cm 2356.

Information about licences issued in 1992 is given in the report of the Animal Procedures Committee for 1992, Cm 2301.

The inspectors are given administrative support by 19 staff who are also responsible for the processing of the licensing arrangements under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present cost of (a) a personal licence under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, (b) a certificate designating a scientific procedure establishment and (c) a certificate designating a breeding and supplying establishment; and how much these fees raised in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The fees to be charged in respect of 1993 are:

(a) £108
(b) £120
(c) £545

It is estimated that these fees will raise £2·4 million.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the cost of the Animal Procedures Committee in the most recent year for which figures are available;

(2) how many full and part-time staff are presently working for the Animal Procedures Committee;

(3) if he will list the members of the Animal Procedures Committee showing what organisation or interest they represent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For 1993-94, the estimated cost of the Animal Procedures Committee is £16,663.

The committee is served by two part-time members of staff.

The membership of the Animal Procedures Committee as at 1 January 1994 is as follows:

Professor Margaret Brazier, LLB (Chairman), Professor of Law, University of Manchester.

Deportations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been deported under escort in 1991, 1992 and 1993; how many of these were arrested and/or deported under any kind of physical restraint; how many cases involved private security guards; how many had been previously found guilty of a criminal offence; and what was the cost of these operations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of deportation orders enforced and the numbers of those enforced following a court recommendation on conviction of a criminal offence were as follows:

	1991	1992	1993[1][2]
Total	641	873	544
Following a court recommendation	385	474	259

[1] Provisional

Race Relations Act 1976

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider proposing the removal from the Race Relations Act 1976 of the exemption of immigration law and practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No; the existing complaints system —monitored by the new complaints audit committee—and disciplinary procedures provide adequate safeguards.

Exceptional Leave to Remain

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases of removal of exceptional leave to remain, in the last 12 months for which figures are available, were because of the cancellation of policies towards individual countries and how many arose from individual circumstances;

(2) how many people granted exceptional leave to remain have had such leave (a) revoked and (b) not renewed in the past 12 months for which figures are available, and one year and two years earlier.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Complete information on the number of persons with exceptional leave whose leave was revoked is not available, but the available indications are that the number is small. The available information for 1992 suggests that the number of persons refused an extension of exceptional leave does not exceed a figure of the order of 15.

UN Human Rights Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 December 1993, Official Report, columns 680-81, if he will list those non-governmental organisations, hon. Members and others who will be consulted in the formation of the policies to be recorded in the United Kingdom's fourth periodic report to the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations in August.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The report will record the numerous existing Government policies, which fulfil the United Kingdom's obligations under the United Nations international covenant on civil and political rights. Information about the organisations and individuals who have been consulted in the formation of these policies is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration Complaints Body

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the full address and telephone numbers of the new immigration complaints body; and if he will make it available to all those wishing to lodge a formal complaint about their treatment at Gatwick airport on 21 December 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Anyone who feels aggrieved by his or her treatment by the immigration and nationality department should write to:

Immigration and Nationality Department
Complaints Unit
Room 1213
Lunar House
40 Wellesley Road Croydon CR9 2BY Fax: 081-759 7215

The independent complaints audit committee—CAC—recently appointed to monitor the complaints system, is not responsible for the investigation of individual complaints.

General correspondence for the CAC should be marked "Complaints Audit Committee" and sent to the above address at Lunar house.

Card Phones

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the difference in cost to the user between card phones situated in prisons and those situated elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 14 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the cost to the user of calls from card phones situated in prisons, and those situated elsewhere.

Calls from card phones situated in prisons are charged on exactly the same basis as calls from BT card phones situated elsewhere.

Anti-terrorist Measures

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have been granted an increase in their capital budget for (a) closed circuit television schemes and (b) other anti-terrorist measures in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to allow the author Salman Rushdie to achieve a degree of anonymity which will reduce the risk to him in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Arrangements for protecting Mr. Rushdie are an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. It would be inappropriate to comment further on these arrangements.

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a detailed breakdown of the costs involved in preparing the building in Millbank to be used by the Security Service; if he will give the final figure involved; what authorisation was given for all the art, decoration and fittings for the use of the Security Service; and by whom that authorisation was given.

Mr. Howard: The projected outturn cost of the work on Thames house is £227 million. Part of the cost relates to the specialist nature of Security Service requirements on which I am not prepared to comment further. As Thames house is a listed building, some work is being carried out as a result of the requirements of English Heritage.

Burglars

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he holds on the reconviction rates of imprisoned burglars, on a comparable basis to the figures he has quoted on domestic burglars given community service orders in 1987.

Mr. Maclean: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Deported Jamaicans

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers on flight KT 311 from Kingston, Jamaica, were refused entry at Gatwick airport on 15 December 1993; and what were the reasons for the refusals.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Thirty-eight people who arrived on flight BA 1262—KT 311 from Kingston—on 15 December 1993 were refused leave to enter of whom 33 have been removed. The reason for refusal in each case was that the immigration officer was not satisfied that the passenger was genuinely seeking entry for the period of the visit as stated by him.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors from Jamaica were held at (a) Campsfield detention centre, Oxfordshire, and (b)

Newhaven detention centre, East Sussex, over the period 21 to 23 December 1993; and what were the reasons for their detention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of passengers who had arrived at Gatwick airport on flight JQ 001 from Jamaica who were held at Campsfield house or the Newhaven detention centre for the period 21 to 23 December 1993 was as follows:

Date	Detention Centre	Number of Detainees
Night of 21-22 December 1993	Campsfield House	49
	Newhaven	4
Night of 22-23 December 1993	Campsfield House	22
	Newhaven	4
Night of 23-24 December 1993	Campsfield House	22
	Newhaven	4

Each case was considered on its merits and detention was authorised only when the immigration service considered that the person concerned was not likely to comply with the terms of temporary admission.

In addition, one other Jamaican national was detained at Campsfield house during this period.

Immigration

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in relation to immigration issues concerning passengers from Jamaica on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: About 80 letters have been received about individual cases or wider issues.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library the correspondence and any other documents relating to the immigration issues concerning the flight from Jamaica on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about immigration issues in respect of passengers from Jamaica on 21 December 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have arranged for a copy of my reply today, to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), about the arrival of flight JQ 001 from Kingston, to be placed in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he had prior discussions with the airline or the travel agents about immigration issues for passengers flying from Jamaica on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 16 December the immigration service was telephoned by the airline and the charterer. They inquired about the desirability of the passengers obtaining prior entry clearance; about the possibility of incurring carriers' liability charges; and whether it would be possible to send an immigration officer to Kingston to examine the passengers before embarkation.

They were advised by the immigration service that carriers' liability was unlikely to be a problem provided that the passengers held a valid passport; and that prior entry clearance was not required for Jamaican citizens, although they were encouraged to apply if in any doubt about their eligibility for admission. They were also informed that pre-clearance in Kingston would not be possible. There are no standing arrangements for the immigration service to operate controls overseas, and even if such an arrangement had been thought desirable it would not have been possible to conclude the necessary agreements with the Jamaican authorities in the short time available.

The immigration service subsequently confirmed with the airline the expected time of arrival, aircraft type and the expected number of passengers, and logistical arrangements for disembarkation were discussed with the airline's handling agents. The airline also provided the immigration service with a passenger manifest three and a half hours prior to the aircraft's arrival at Gatwick.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers from Jamaica on 21 December 1993 were (a) allowed to remain and (b) deported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 326 passengers on flight JQ 001 from Kingston. On 12 January 1994, 67 passengers had been refused leave to enter of whom 33 had been removed. Five cases have still to be resolved.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what immigration procedures are applied to passengers travelling from Jamaica on (a) scheduled and (b) charter flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All passengers who seek leave to enter the United Kingdom are examined by an immigration officer and must satisfy him that they quality for entry under the immigration rules.

Vladimir Zhirinovsky

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the policy of the Government to refuse permission of the Russian citizen, Vladimir Zhirinovsky, to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is open to the Home Secretary to direct personally that entry be refused to a foreign national whose exclusion would be conducive to the public good. Consideration is given to the individual merits of any case, and account taken of the purpose of any proposed visit and all the relevant circumstances.

Joy Gardner

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Police Complaints Authority's investigation into the death of Joy Gardner to report.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The police investigation into the death of Mrs. Gardner is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority and it is a matter for the authority itself to decide when the investigation has been completed to its satisfaction.

Charitable Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hospitals and trusts have within them a registered charitable body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Charity Commissioners are currently conducting a review of such bodies for the purpose of updating the register of charities and precise figures are not available at present.

The great majority of NHS trusts are trustees of charitable funds which have been transferred to them from health authorities. There are also 26 groups of special trustees responsible for funds attached to teaching hospitals. In some cases, a single NHS trust may administer as many as 100 different charitable funds.

DEFENCE

Defence Costs Study

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 631, if he is now prepared to state (a) the number of study teams and (b) each of the different areas of support businesses they will be examining;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 631, whether he is now prepared to list each of the aspects of support that he will be looking at as part of the defence costs study; and if he is now prepared to provide detailed information on their current functions and costs.

Mr. Aitken: The defence costs study is looking at all aspects of support to the front line. So far 16 individual studies have been set in hand to examine particular areas. These are the MOD's organisation and function; service HQs, command and top-level budget struetures; MOD police; research and development; procurement projects and practices; the function and organisation of the Procurement Executive; a review of the market-testing programme; financial management; defence estate and property; repair, spares, storage, distribution and infrastructure; military training; recruiting and manning; medical support; non-operational information technology; security; and naval support infrastructure. I am arranging for a short note explaining more about each of these studies to be placed in the Library of the House. A number of other areas are under consideration, and additional studies will continue to be added to this list. The function and costs of support organisations will be analysed as part of the study.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to his defence costs study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence outlined the purpose and scope of the defence costs study to his NATO counterparts at a Defence Planning Committee meeting held in Brussels on 8 and 9 December 1993.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 632, if he will provide details of the rank or civil service grade of the members of the secretariat established to co-ordinate work on the defence costs study.

Mr. Aitken: The full-time secretariat team established to co-ordinate the defence costs study comprises an air vice marshall, a grade 5, a captain RN, a colonel, a grade 7, a higher executive officer (development), an administrative officer and a personal assistant. In addition, a grade 3 is also working on the study as part of his existing responsibility.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communication took place between his officials and members of the media on the subject of the defence costs study on 20 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Selected journalists were given a background briefing on the defence costs study on 20 December 1993 by a senior Ministry of Defence official.

Married Quarters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes will result in the arrangements for financing capital expenditure on married quarters as a result of his plans to transfer the administration of married quarters to a housing trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: After the transfer of the Ministry of Defence married quarter estate to a housing trust, responsibility for capital expenditure on the estate will be assumed by the trust. The Ministry of Defence will pay rent on those properties required to meet the accommodation requirements of service personnel.

Joint Training Exercises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider the deployment of battalion-sized groups for joint training exercises with former Warsaw pact forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The prospect of joint military activities, and peacekeeping field exercises within the framework of "Partnership for Peace", was unveiled at the NATO summit meeting in Brussels earlier this week. In addition, the MOD is currently considering the specific possibilities for British land forces, initially at company level, to conduct joint training and exercises with some of our North Atlantic Co-operation Council partners.

General Cordy-Simpson

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that the recent experiences of General Cordy-Simpson have been incorporated into (a) training procedures and (b) the development of new doctrine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A formal and institutionalised mechanism already exists for debriefing commanders at all levels on return from all operations; United Nations operations are no exception. Their observations and lessons are used to provide ongoing assessment and validation of both doctrine and training.

United Nations Military Operations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to assist the United Nations in improving its contingency planning arrangements for military operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: In his report "An Agenda for Peace", the United Nations Secretary-General identified the need to strengthen the United Nation's capacity to conduct peace support operations and invited member states to make proposals in this regard. The United Kingdom's reply included suggestions for reinforcing the United Nation's planning mechanisms. The Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office continue to be actively involved in discussions aimed at taking these suggestions forward. In addition, the United Kingdom is co-operating fully with the United Nations standby forces planning team. Five military personnel are attached to the United Nations secretariat and agreement has been given in principle to a request for two more officers to be made available.

United Nations Military Intelligence

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is prepared to assist in the development of a United Nations military intelligence capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A considerable volume of information is already available to the United Nations from a variety of sources and there is scope for enhancement of its ability to marshall and analyse this. The United Kingdom is ready to consider requests for assistance in this area. It would, however, be prohibitively expensive and unnecessary for the United Nations to develop its own military information capability.

Royal Ordnance

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the commercial relationship between Royal Ordnance and Heckler and Koch (a) prior to 1987 and (b) since 1987.

Mr. Aitken: A licence agreement between Heckler and Koch GmbH and the Secretary of State for Defence was signed in April 1970, with amendments completed in February 1972 and December 1977. Under the terms of the licence, royal small arms factory Enfield built various Heckler and Koch weapons and sold these to Heckler and Koch (UK). The licence transferred to RO plc on incorporation of the latter on 2 January 1985. The Secretary of State for Defence has had no responsibility for the affairs of RO plc since its sale to British Aerospace plc.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how export control legislation was applied to the activities of Royal Ordnance (a) before and (b) after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Prior to 2 January 1985, when the royal ordnance factories became a plc, any sales made directly through the defence exports sales supply division had Crown status, and were therefore not subject to licensing. All other exports of ROF equipment were subject to the normal licensing requirements. From 2 January 1985, all exports by RO were subject to licensing.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning (a) the sale of rocket propellant to Iraq by Royal Ordnance and (b) assistance provided by Royal Ordnance to Iran for the construction of a weapons plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Matters relating to the export of United Kingdom defence equipment and dual use goods to Iraq are being investigated by Lord Justice Scott, and it would be inappropriate to comment on them before the publication of his final report. My Department holds no information to support the suggestion that Royal Ordnance provided assistance to Iran in the construction of a weapons plant.

HMS Intrepid

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 918, what communications he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the operational status of HMS Intrepid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Details of the operational status of all forces declared to NATO, which include HMS Intrepid, are made available to NATO, and to all NATO partners, on an annual basis.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 918, what plans he has to return HMS Intrepid to operational status.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Intrepid is at present held in a state of extended readiness at Portsmouth. On current plans, she would be returned to operational status only in the event of an emergency.

Defence Research Agency

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he will publish copies of the customer satisfaction surveys carried out by the Defence Research Agency in the last three years;

(2) what measures are used to assess the quality of service provided by the Defence Research Agency other than the customer satisfaction survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 January 1994:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your two questions about the quality of service provided by the DRA and the customer satisfaction survey.

I will deal with the customer satisfaction survey first. As I said in my answer of 16 December the survey is very extensive and is undertaken each year by an independent contractor experienced in this sort of work. The detailed results of the analysis are presented to me in a report by the contractor. Since this report includes information which has been collected in confidence it would not be right for me to put it into the public domain.

What I can say, however, is that the first two surveys showed a consistent picture and that our customers recognise that we are making good progress in achieving better performance. As I said in my last answer we analyse our performance against eight criteria: overall customer satisfaction, technical quality, facilities, staff reputation, understanding our customers' needs, project management and formal quality. The surveys showed the DRA scoring well on the first five criteria particularly technical quality and understanding of customers' needs. The 1992 survey showed a real improvement in responsiveness over the 1991 survey. Both surveys showed we had work to do in project management and formal quality. This is not surprising as the DRA has only had a formal customer/supplier relationship since becoming a Trading Fund in April 1993. Before this the organisation did not operate on a project basis and had no requirement for formal quality certification. I shall be looking with interest at the results of the 1993 survey (which I will receive shortly) to see if the benefits of the initiatives we have launched to correct those weaknesses have yet been detected by our customers.

You also asked what other measures we use beside the survey to gauge the quality of the service we offer. The major measure which is also one of my key performance targets, is achievement of customer programme "milestones". This means achieving a specific technical goal on time and to cost. We started from a low base level of only 50% in 1991/92 and our target is to reach 85% by 1997/98. But in fact we are already this year likely to achieve in excess of 80% which reflects very well on the enthusiasm of the organisation to turn itself into an efficient customer oriented business. Additionally we have some indication of the underlying scientific quality of our work through the peer group assessments of the quality of our strategic research proposals. These too show a steady improvement over the last three years.

Royal Anglian Regiment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training the 2nd Battalion, Royal Anglian Regiment, has received in the last six months in (a) route clearing, (b) anti-ambush drills, (c) convoy control, (d) driving techniques and (e) basic language skills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The 2nd Battalion, Royal Anglian Regiment, has been identified as the possible replacement for 1st Battalion, Coldstream Guards, if a further six months deployment were to be undertaken, and will undertake formal Operation Grapple training in February and March this year. The battalion already has considerable experience in route clearing, anti-ambush drills and driving techniques. Liaison officers with training in Serbo-Croat would be attached to the battalion if it deployed. No decisions have been taken about a further roulement of British forces in Bosnia in April/May this year.

10 Squadron

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 909, what assessment he has made as to whether the repayments provided to his Department as a result of the non-defence tasks carried out by 10 Squadron are at an appropriate level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Repayment charges for non-defence tasks carried out by 10 Squadron are at an appropriate level. The criteria used for determining repayment charges accords with the rules and regulations set out in Government accounting and departmental guidelines.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 909, what were the numbers and types of (a) non-defence specific tasks and (b) defence specific tasks carried out by 10 Squadron in 1992-93.

Mr. Hanley: In 1992-93, there were 17 repayment flights in respect of non-defence specific tasks, comprising nine for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and eight for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

The repayment flights in respect of defence-specific flights are as follows:

48 Operational flights in support of UN operations in the former Republic of Yugoslavia;
192 Weekly scheduled flights to Washington, Belize and Decimomannu;
195 Flights in support of exercises (Tri-service requirement);
105 Special flights, including medical evacuations;
and some 360 hours of Squadron training flights.

Heckler and Koch

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the use of Heckler and Koch weapons during the recent conflict in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no firm information concerning the use of Heckler and Koch weapons during the recent Cambodian conflict.

Royal Yacht

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 916, what was the cost of the refit of the royal yacht in 1991 and the nature of the work undertaken.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of the refit of the royal yacht in 1991 was some £7·2 million. The work involved fitting new sewage treatment plants; major repairs to the hull; refurbishment of steam and electric generators, main boilers and condensers and a complete repaint.

RAF Support Command

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 907, whether he will publish the reports of efficiency savings at the stations and units within the RAF Support Command maintenance group.

Mr. Hanley: In the financial year—FY—1992-93, the RAF Support Command maintenance group achieved efficiency savings of £12,900,000. In FY 1993-94, the group is forecasting efficiency savings of £16,200,000. Details of efficiency savings are published in the Maintenance Group Defence Agency's annual report and accounts, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

War Crimes, Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 290, if he will provide details of the number of occasions on which information on alleged war crimes in Bosnia has been passed to the relevant United Nation authorities by British forces.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Departmental Objectives

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 423, if he will provide details of the types of quantitive data used in his assessment of performance aganist departmental standing objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The quantitative aspect of performance review in the Department is based, first, on indicators of military capability and readiness for forces and headquarters; these include manning levels, the availability of equipment, and levels of collective training. In addition, a significant amount of data is available to assess progress with management initiatives such as the efficiency programme, market testing and next steps reviews. The performance of the Procurement Executive is monitored by indicators of the health of major projects. Budgetary data are also employed.

RAF Carlisle

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the full study report and costings which formed the basis of the decision to close 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: It would not be appropriate to release the full study report and costings. A consultation document covering the factors involved has been issued to all interested parties, and further detailed information will be provided where appropriate.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining the impact on other MOD establishments within the area of closing 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of all refurbishment work carried out at 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle over the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Over the last five years, £31 million has been spent on minor new build and refurbishment at RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the decision to close 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle is compatible with his announcement on "front line first".

Mr. Hanley: The defence cost study will be taking a new and radical look at all aspects of support, with the aim of identifying further areas where we can reduce costs. The proposals to rationalise the support provided to the RAF at the equipment supply depots by reducing to a single depot, which originated before the "front line first" programme was instituted, are entirely consistent with that aim.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make more time available for the consultation process on the decision to close 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: At the request of the local trade unions at our meeting last month, I agreed that the consultation period should be extended by one month to 18 March 1994.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the transfer of posts to go from 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle to 16 maintenance unit, RAF with an estimate of people and grades required for transfer.

Mr. Hanley: As indicated in the consultative document, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, it is estimated that some 332 civilian posts would be relocated. It is not possible at this stage to be specific about the numbers and grades of personnel required for transfer.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make an official visit to 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle to discuss plans to close the unit by 1997.

Mr. Hanley: I have already indicated to local representatives my intention to visit RAF Carlisle to discuss our proposals during the period of consultation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the alternative plan to make savings submitted by the trade unions involved in 14 maintenance unit, RAF Carlisle.

Mr. Hanley: We have not yet received the trade union plan; when we do, we shall, of course, give it due consideration.

RAF Equipment Supply Depots

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available to the trade union representatives at RAF Carlisle, RAF Quedgeley and RAF Stafford the review report into the equipment supply depots of the RAF.

Mr. Hanley: It would not be appropriate to release the full study report and costings. A consultation document covering the factors involved has been issued to all interested parties, and further information will be provided where appropriate.

Written Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government car service—GCS—provides cars for Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers. Increases in GCS charges since 1990-91 are due to the following factors:

(i) GCS prices for its standard service were increased by 12 per cent. from 1 July 1990 and again by 10 per cent. from 1 January 1991;

(ii) the basis for provision of a protected car was also changed. Prior to 1 April 1992, GCS purchased the base car while the user Department funded the one-off cost of protection. From 1 April 1992, GCS charges for a protected vehicle were increased by 54 per cent. to take account of the full cost of providing a protected car, amortised over its five-year lifespan;

(iii) Value added tax on GCS bills increased from 15 to 17·5 per cent. on 1 April 1991.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Sudan

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sudanese Government on the question of human rights violations in southern Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We take every suitable opportunity, both bilaterally and in concert with our European Union partners, to express our concern to the Sudanese authorities at reported abuses of human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout Sudan, including the south. We have also raised our concerns with the leaders of the SPLA factions. We were active earlier this year in securing the appointment of a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in Sudan. At the United Nations General Assembly, we co-sponsored a hard-hitting resolution, commending the work of the special rapporteur, which was passed in plenary by 111 votes to 13.

False Imprisonment

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consider taking steps to ensure that British citizens wrongly imprisoned abroad receive adequate compensation from the Governments responsible.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Claims for compensation against foreign Governments must be pursued through their courts. Under international law, a Government will not consider espousing a claim on behalf of an individual while other legal channels remain open. Even after the claimant has exhausted all available legal channels, we would need to consider all the circumstances of each case before taking such a course.

Land Mines

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he proposes to implement the land mines protocol and ban the export of anti-personnel land mines by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has always adhered to the United Nations weaponry convention, protocol II of which lays down rules for the responsible use of land mines. We signed the convention in 1981 and hope to ratify it later this year.

We are not contemplating additional measures to cover the export of anti-personnel land mines from the United Kingdom. We have not produced or exported anti-personnel mines for some time; and we believe that our current stringent controls on the export of defence equipment, which includes controls on all mines, are sufficient to stop the sale of these weapons to countries which may use them irresponsibly.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with his German counterpart and at the next EU Foreign Affairs Council the implications for EU export control and non-proliferation policy of the recent conviction of the owners of RO-SCH Technology GmbH of Kaufbevren of exporting carbon fibre centrifuge rotor tubes for uranium enrichment in contravention of the Federal German Foreign Trade Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I do not intend to raise this issue. The action of the German authorities is a matter for that sovereign state.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals Her Majesty's Government intend to put to the second preparatory committee meeting of the fifth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to be held in New York from 17 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the second preparatory committee meeting, we shall be working to ensure that decisions are reached on outstanding procedural and administrative matters relating to the 1995 non-proliferation treaty extension and review conference. Our policy is to secure the unconditional and indefinite extension of the treaty in 1995.

EC Social Development Fund

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent changes in the organisation of the Council of Europe's social development fund; and if he proposes, in the light of these reforms, that the United Kingdom should now participate in the fund.

Mr. Goodlad: Following allegations of irregularities in the operation of the social development fund, a number of measures were agreed on by the member states, designed to ensure greater rigour and transparency in the management of the organisation and the proper care of public funds.

There are no plans for United Kingdom participation in the fund.

Hong Kong

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what terms will be offered to expatriate civil servants currently based in Hong Kong on the resumption of sovereignty by China; and what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of these arrangements.

Mr. Goodlad: Two White Papers of 1954 and 1960 set out our obligation to Her Majesty's overseas civil service —HMOCS—employed in overseas territories upon the ending of British sovereignty. These obligations include provision of a compensation scheme and a sterling pension protection scheme. Draft schemes have been prepared for consultation with the Hong Kong HMOCS association. The cost of these schemes will be known when they have been finalised.

Immigration

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his submission to the European Commission and the Council of Ministers concerning the rights to enter the United Kingdom of citizens of Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, Dominica, The Gambia, Grenada, Guyana, Kiribati, Lesotho, the Maldives, Mauritius, Namibia, Nauru, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, St. Lucia, the Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Tanzania, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has made no submission to the European Commission or the Council of Ministers about the rights of the citizens of the countries listed to enter the United Kingdom.

The European Commission has, however, made proposals to determine the list of countries whose nationals must be in possession of a visa when crossing the external frontiers of member states. When these proposals have been received formally from the Council secretariat they will be made available to Parliament in accordance with normal scrutiny arrangements.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Dominica, Gambia, Grenada, Guyana, Kiribati, Lesotho, the Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Namibia, Nauru, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, St. Lucia, the Seychelles, Sierra Leone, the Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Tanzania, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa, Zambia and Zimbabwe on changing the status of their citizens with regard to entering the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had no consultations with the Governments of the countries listed about changing the status of their citizens with regards to entering the United Kingdom. Entry into the United Kingdom for these nationalities, and others, will continue to be governed by the immigration rules.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertakings he has given to the Governments of each of Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Dominica, The Gambia, Grenada, Guyana, Kiribati, Lesotho, the Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Namibia, Nauru, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, St. Lucia, the Seychelles, Sierra Leone, the Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Tanzania, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa, Zambia and Zimbabwe about the continuing rights of their citizens to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwelth Affairs has given no undertakings to the Governments of the countries listed about the continuing rights of their citizens to enter the United Kingdom. Entry into the United Kingdom for these nationalities, and others, will continue to be governed by the immigration rules.

Council of Europe

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those Council of Europe conventions and agreements which the United Kingdom has not signed or ratified; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for not doing so.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has neither signed nor ratified the conventions or agreements set out in the table. The reasons for not signing or ratifying vary. The information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on negotiations with North Korea for the access of nuclear inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency to its nuclear facilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: North Korea's refusal to comply fully with its IAEA safeguards agreement is a cause for great concern. We hope that the problem can be resolved through dialogue between North Korea, the United States, South Korea and the IAEA. Any solution must reaffirm the IAEA's right to inspect all North Korean nuclear sites to the agency's satisfaction.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he now plans to follow up his signature of the chemical weapons convention in Paris in 1993; what legislation is necessary to implement the United Kingdom's commitments under the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to ratify the chemical weapons convention—CWC—as soon as the necessary implementing legislation is in place. The legislation's main elements will be rights of entry and immunity for Organisation in the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons inspectors, requirements for industry declarations and creation of offences in respect of non-compliance with the CWC. We will introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time becomes available.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Goodlad: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Allowances

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the numbers of additional income tax payers in 1994-95 compared to 1992-93 as a result of freezing the rate of personal allowance in two years; and how much extra income tax will be raised as a result.

Mr. Dorrell: Compared with indexing the 1992-93 personal allowance to 1994-95 levels by reference to the statutory formula, the revenue yield from the measures in the last two Budgets is £1·1 billion and about 400,000 more people will pay tax.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the loss to the Treasury of tax revenue as a result of the exemption from inheritance tax of gifts to political parties for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of insider dealing were reported by the authorities in each year since 1980.

Mr. Nelson: Alleged cases of insider dealing are generally detected by the stock exchange through its monitoring of share dealing. Following a preliminary investigation the stock exchange informs the Department of Trade and Industry when it believes there is a prima facie case. That Department has powers to investigate and to bring prosecutions where appropriate. The cases referred to the DTI in this way since 1980 are set out in the table.

Alleged cases of insider dealing reported to the DTI by the stock exchange between 1980 and 1993-94[1]

	Cases reported
1980	7
1981	18
1982	23

1989-90	21
1990-91	8
1991-92	11
1992-93	5
1993-94	7

[1]The data for the period 1980-85 relate to calendar years whereas thereafter the figures are on a financial year basis. The information for 1993-94 relates to cases which were reported to the DTI between April and the end of December 1993. A case may have led to more than one person being prosecuted.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of insider dealing have been prosecuted in each year since 1980; and how many prosecutions resulted in (a) conviction and (b) acquittal.

Mr. Nelson: The information is given in the table.

Insider dealing prosecutions between 1980-81 and 1993-94[1]

Year	Cases	Prosecutions	Convictions	Acquittals

1992-93	3	7	5	2
1993-94[3]	3	6	0	5
Total	32	50	22	26

[1] The figures reflect the number of individual defendants who were prosecuted in the thirty-two insider dealing cases which have been concluded since 1980. They do not include a case which is still in progress.
[2] The figures for 1989-90 include one prosecution which was subsequently withdrawn.
[3] The figures for 1993-94 include one case which was not proven.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Nelson: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate can be made of the number of people who would have an income tax liability from April 1995 whose sole income was incapacity benefit; and what would be the yield in a full year of taxing incapacity benefit.

Mr. Dorrell: Only a very small number of people whose sole income was incapacity benefit would have any income tax liability in 1995-96 on the basis of the announced rules for the taxation of incapacity benefit for 1995-96 and the changes to income tax allowances announced for that year, assuming indexation of benefits and the personal allowance. The revenue yield in respect of these people would be negligible.

Charities (VAT)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether previous VAT zero-rated non-domestic charitable institutions will be liable for VAT from 1 April.

Sir John Cope: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the existing VAT zero rate for fuel and power used by a charity otherwise than in the course or furtherance of a business. I confirm that the relief will not apply from 1 April 1994.

Household Debt

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of debt per household for every £100 of disposable income in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for the level of household debt outstanding are not available. The level of debt of the personal sector, which includes apart from households, all unincorporated private businesses, sole traders, partnerships, non-profit making bodies serving persons and private trusts, per £100 of disposable income in 1992 was £112. Figures for 1993 have not yet been published but the latest Treasury estimate is shown in chart 3.9 of the Red Book.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has no IT service contracts that involve the use of personal data held by the Department.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will detail the statistical sources for the information given by the Paymaster General in answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) of 24 November, Official Report, columns 66-70.

Sir John Cope: The sources of this information were:

1. The document produced by the Commission of the European Communities entitled "The Evolution of VAT Rates applicable in the Member States of the Community" and numbered XXI/158/93-EN, which was deposited in the House of Commons Library in reply to a Parliamentary Question tabled by the hon. Member for Newham South, of 18 October 1993, Official Report, columns 7-8;
2. VAT in Europe;
3. International VAT Monitor; and
4. Tax News Service.

Items 2 to 4 are produced by the International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation.

American Depositary Receipts

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue gathered from stamp duty reserve tax on American depositary receipts issued on behalf of United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Nelson: The 1·5 per cent. rate of stamp duty and stamp duty reserve tax applies to transfers of shares either into a depositary receipt scheme or into a clearance service system. The total yield from the 1·5 per cent. rate is estimated at around £20 million. Precise information is not available about the proportion attributable to transfers into American depositary receipt schemes, as distinct from other depositary receipt schemes or clearance services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racially Motivated Crimes

32. Mr. Miller: To ask the Attorney-General if he will discuss with the Director of Public Prosecutions the procedure for the Crown Prosecution Service drawing to the attention of the courts the fact that a crime appears to be racially motivated; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: It is the duty of all those who prosecute on behalf of the Crown to put all the relevant facts before the court.

Serious Fraud Office

33. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the future of the Serious Fraud Office.

The Solicitor-General: The review of the handling of serious fraud by the Serious Fraud Office and the fraud divisions of the Crown Prosecution Service, which the Attorney-General announced last October in the light of the recommendations of the royal commission, is expected to report by the end of February.

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General what recent consideration has been given by the Serious Fraud Office regarding City crime and sentencing.

Prosecutions (Public Interest)

35. Mr. Sims: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria are used by the Director of Public Prosecutions in assessing the public interest when deciding whether to proceed with a prosecution.

The Solicitor-General: The general principles used when assessing the public interest are set out in the "Code for Crown Prosecutors" which is published and laid before Parliament each year in the annual report of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Extradition (Cyprus)

36. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Attorney-General when he next plans to visit Cyprus to discuss extradition.

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General has no such plans.

Fiats for Cases to Proceed

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General in how many instances in each of the last five years he has (a) granted his fiat and (b) refused his fiat for a case to proceed; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The information sought by my hon. Friend is recorded only on the files relating to individual defendants in relation to a wide variety of different offences and is not collected or collated centrally. The information requested could therefore be collected only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Corby District Council

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1980-81 the money paid to Corby district council under the derelict land scheme.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available in the precise form requested. However, since 1980-81, Corby district council has incurred the following expenditure on land reclamation which has been eligible for derelict land grant. Grant is payable on this expenditure at a rate of 100 per cent.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been made available to the district and borough of Corby under the estate action scheme in each year since 1985.

Sir George Young: The following amounts of estate action resources have been made available to Corby since 1985:

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take to encourage local authorities to become debt free.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities which have repaid all their long-term debts have recently been given general freedom to spend amounts already set aside for debt redemption. They are also generally relieved of the obligation to make further provision for debt redemption, either from capital receipts or revenue.

Local Authorities (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total of usable receipts held by each local authority in Northamptonshire at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Baldry: The information is as follows:

Authority	Usable receipts at 1 April 1993 £'000
Northamptonshire County Council	220
Corby	749

East Northamptonshire	2,628
Kettering	1,481
Northampton	3,634
South Northamptonshire	Nil
Wellingborough	11,840

Homelessness

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the representations he has received from the British Medical Association about the accuracy of his Department's estimates of the extent of homelessness in London in the light of their research findings using capture-recapture analysis techniques.

Sir George Young: This Department has received no such representations from the British Medical Association. The methodology used by the voluntary sector to count the number of people sleeping rough in central London, which has informed the rough sleepers initiative, was developed independently to provide a series of accurate, directly comparable counts. This methodology is now being adapted to undertake local counts in some other towns and cities.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce incentives to strengthen and increase the private rented sector; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We are very keen to expand the private rented sector. The package of deregulation measures in the Housing Act 1988, which introduced assured and assured shorthold tenancies at market rents for most new lettings, was designed to encourage landlords to bring their property on to the market. In addition, we have already launched a number of specific initiatives to encourage private landlords to let their property. We are keen to explore all avenues to encourage further growth in the sector.

Press Office

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed in his Department's press/communications office including clerical and administrative staff in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: There are currently 46 staff employed by the Department of the Environment's information directorate.

Figures for prior years on the composition of the information directorate are published each year within the management information system for Ministers dating back to 1979 which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his Department's press releases in date order since 1 June 1992.

Mr. Gummer: Monthly summaries of this Department's press releases for the period 1 June 1992 to 31 December 1993 have been placed in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each service that has been market-tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Gummer: The Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the Efficiency Unit in the Cabinet Office. Some points of detail have yet to be finalised, but, once this has been completed, much of the information requested in the question will be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Rent Assessment Committees

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his review of the role of the rent assessment committees.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Mr. Fishburn) on 30 November, Official Report, column 507.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make public the conclusions of his review of the homeless persons legislation.

Sir George Young: I intend to publish before the end of this month a consultation paper about reforming the homelessness legislation and improving access to local authority and housing association tenancies. I look forward to a constructive debate about the Government's proposals for reform.

Superstores

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will ensure that superstores (a) have more than one entrance and exit and (b) are sited at sufficient distance from petrol stations such that it would be impossible for a fire in a superstore to spread to a petrol station.

Mr. Baldry: Whether a single entrance and exit is adequate for escape in fire is dependent on the size of the building and the distances that persons would need to travel. A superstore would almost certainly be large enough for more than one escape route to have to be provided to satisfy the Building Regulations.

If the petrol station was outside the boundary of the superstore site compliance with the Building Regulations would ensure that the superstore was located at a safe distance from the boundary if a fire were to take place therein. If the petrol station was within the confines of the superstore site boundary guidance issued by the Health and Safety Executive would need to be followed with regard to its location. If this guidance were not followed, a petroleum licence would not be issued. The relative locations of different land uses may also be material considerations to be taken into account in deciding whether to grant planning permission, whether in response to an application or by the Secretary of State on appeal.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the cost of advertising by his Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 16 December 1993]: In the financial year 1991-92, my Department spent £815,118·06 on advertising; in the financial year 1992-93, it spent £6,929,637·89 on advertising. However, before the financial year 1991-92, figures are not available for advertising alone. In addition, information relating to the financial years before 1979-80 and 1984-85 cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. The total publicity expenditure for each financial year from 1985-86 to 1992-93 was:

	£ million
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	4·2
1987-88	4·8
1988-89	6·9
1989-90	[1]31·5
1990-91	7·5
1991-92	2·7
1992-93	[2]13·4

[1] The figure for 1989-90 includes publicity costs associated with water privatisation and community charge.
[2] The figure for 1992-93 includes publicity costs associated with the CO_2 reduction campaign "Helping the Earth" and the introduction of the council tax.

For the financial years 1985-86 to 1990-91 inclusive, the figures also include associated staff costs for my Department, including agencies. Before 1991-92, expenditure was not broken down between different publicity media.

The cost of publicity advertising per month for the past 12 months has been:

December 1992	nil
January 1993	3,311·74
February 1993	3,120,031·18
March 1993	3,236,235·92
April 1993	475,506·00
May 1993	1,394·00
June 1993	1,128·00
July 1993	780,047·00
August 1993	nil
September 1993	257·33
October 1993	3,493,327·30
November 1993	347,246·71

These costs include creative and production charges, value added tax, and other levies as paid.

The costs given for the months above relate to the month in which the invoice was processed for payment; in some cases the advertising may have appeared some time previously.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local education authorities in England who in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 have spent or are expected to spend less than their allocated standard spending assessment for education in each of those years, together with the respective figures for each year, the totals of all such spending assessments for that authority, the standard spending assessment figure in respect of interest on capital expenditure approved by Her Majesty's Government, the amount paid or expected to be paid and the contribution to any consequential deficit that must be made, pro rata, by transfer from the respective standard assessments for educational expenditure made by Her Majesty's Government for the relevant years.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 January 1994]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. It is for each local authority to determine its spending priorities between services in the light of local circumstances.

Negative Equity

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 7–8, if he will disaggregate the table on households with negative equity into the normal planning regions.

Sir George Young [holding answer 14 January 1994]: No. The sample sizes from which changes in house prices and distributions of mortgage advance to price ratios are estimated are not large enough to produce sufficiently reliable figures for all regions.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the site or sites of proposed enterprise zones in north Nottinghamshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction intends to announce very shortly proposals for four sites in the east midlands to be designated, subject to the agreement of the European Commission, as enterprise zones.

Council Tax

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to whom in each district council area in North Yorkshire for carrying out council tax valuations; and what was the cost of managing and administering the valuation process.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to disclose payments to individual contractors, on the grounds of commercial confidence. The cost of managing and administering the valuation process in North Yorkshire was £98,517.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against council tax valuations in each district council area in North Yorkshire have been settled in the last six months; and what was the average cost of settling each appeal.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Receipts and settlements of appeals against council tax for each billing authority in North Yorkshire are as follows:

Billing authority	Appeals settled
Craven	374
Hambleton	496
Harrogate	872
Richmondshire	210
Ryedale	509
Scarborough	488
Selby	498
York	484

The estimated average cost of processing a council tax appeal in the current financial year in England is £115. This estimate includes Valuation Office agency and valuation tribunal costs.

PRIME MINISTER

Severance Payment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what ministerial severance payment has been offered to the hon. Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) and what amount is to be paid to the hon. Member.

The Prime Minister: The hon. Member is entitled to a severance payment under the provisions of the Ministerial and other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991.

Iraq and Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister whether the policy on Iraq and Iran set out by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 450, remains that of Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: No. An embargo on trade with Iraq was imposed by the Iraq and Kuwait (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1990 (SI 90/1651). This put into effect the sanctions on Iraq imposed by United Nations resolution 661. Current policy on exports to Iran was set out by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 1 March 1993, Official Report, column 8.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister when he or his predecessor last met his counterpart or the President of Iraq; and what was the purpose of the meeting.

The Prime Minister: I have not met my Iraqi counterpart or the President of Iraq; neither did my predecessor.

Question Time

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in total (a) he, (b) Lady Thatcher or (c) Lord Callaghan was absent from the House at Prime Minister's Question Time while serving as Prime Minister; and what that figure represents in each case and as a percentage of the total number of Prime Minister's Question Times for which he or she was responsible.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what records held at 10 Downing street prior to December 1990 have been passed to the Scott inquiry on request.

The Prime Minister: My office has passed to the Scott inquiry those records held at 10 Downing street prior to December 1990 which fall within the terms of the inquiry's requests.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each occasion since the 1992 Edinburgh European Council that cameras have been admitted to meetings of European Community Council of Ministers.

(2) if he will give the precise terms of clarification of the joint declaration sought by Mr. Gerry Adams, president of Sinn Fein, in communications with him since the joint declaration was published; what were the precise terms of his responses to such communications; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I received an unsigned letter on Mr. Adams's headed notepaper, dated 7 January 1994, last week. It is being considered and no response has yet been made.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of the public appointments that he is able to make, excluding Cabinet and ministerial appointments and those covered by "Questions of Procedure for Ministers"; and which appointments he has made since 1991.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 December 1993]: As Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury I am able to appoint to the following public bodies. 1 Trustee has been appointed from 1991

As Prime Minister, I am also responsible for advising Her Majesty the Queen on Crown appointments.

Sinn Fein

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the value served by the ban on Sinn Fein voices being heard and of the practice of using an actor to dub the person's voice.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage is reviewing the relevant restrictions, in consultation with other Government Departments concerned.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Political Advisers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether political advisers receive redundancy payment when they resume the same responsibilities (a) when the appointing Minister leaves his post and the appointment is renewed by his successor and (b) when the same Government are returned after a general election; and since 1986, how many political advisers have resumed their same responsibilities after a change of appointing Minister and after a general election.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although each Minister's appointment of a special adviser is formally a new appointment, no severance payments are made if there is no break in the special adviser's service. Since 1986, special advisers have remained in post after a change of appointing Minister on eight occasions, including, in one case, following the 1992 general election.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. David Davis: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will hold discussions with independent television company representatives on the proposals that the Council of Europe approve a special study of the value of co-production at the regional level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I believe that the hon. Gentleman refers to the resolution, published in March 1993 by the Council of Europe standing conference of local and regional authorities of Europe, on the regional dimension of the European audiovisual area. This resolution proposed a study of regional television co-production. I understand that the project is still in its early stages, and I have not seen any detailed proposals. In these circumstances, a meeting with industry representatives would be premature.

Theatre in Education

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps his Department is taking to maintain and develop the educational and artistic methodology of theatre in education as a vehicle for educating children in social responsiveness and community responsibility.

Mr. Brooke: The methodology of theatre in education raises questions of educational and artistic judgment in which my Department does not become involved. The value, use and development of theatre in education are issues that need to be addressed by those agencies with a direct interest—local authorities and individual schools, and the arts councils and regional arts boards.

Arts Venues

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how the advent of unitary authorities will affect the funding of venues with fewer than 400 seats.

Mr. Brooke: I maintain a close interest in the work of the Local Government Commission, although ministerial responsibility rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The funding of local authority controlled arts venues is a matter for the local authorities concerned.

European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he plans to put forward to enhance European cultural activities during the Greek presidency of the European Union.

Mr. Brooke: It is for the Greek presidency of the European Union to indicate what areas it wishes to give priority to during its presidency. The United Kingdom will participate fully in carrying forward the work of the Culture Council as a whole.

London Orchestras

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent information he has about the Arts Council's policy towards funding the leading London orchestras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Having undertaken a review of its support for the London orchestras, the Arts Council has decided that, in the immediate future, it will continue to concentrate funding on the London Symphony, Philharmonia and London Philharmonic orchestras. In addition, the Council has welcomed the emerging regional strategy of the Royal Philharmonic orchestra, for which it will also provide financial support.

The Council will be discussing this approach, and its longer-term policies with the Philharmonia and London Philharmonic orchestras, and with the Royal Philharmonic orchestra. In formulating its policies, the Council will take account of the general review of orchestral provision now being undertaken jointly with the BBC, and of the timing of decisions to be taken by the South Bank Board on the future of the orchestral residency at the royal festival hall.

Television (Children)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what evidence he has on the numbers of children watching after the 9 pm watershed.

Mr. Brooke: Statistics on the make-up of television audiences are not collected by my Department, but the table sets out data, compiled by the Broadcasters' Audience Research Board and interpreted by the BBC, on television viewing by children during a recent period.

Estimated average numbers of children aged 4 to 15 years, watching TV channels (including satellite) after 9 pm in period 5 to 10 December 1993

HOME DEPARTMENT

Joy Gardner

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the outcome of his internal review of deportation policies and procedures following the death of Joy Gardner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 12 January, Official Report, columns 212–13.

Vehicle Theft

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange to publish statistics showing separate figures for reported thefts of (a) cars and motorcycles, (b) light commercial vehicles and vans and (c) heavy commercial vehicles.

Mr. Maclean: The information collected centrally relates to the total number of offences of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle recorded by the police. It is not possible to identify the type of vehicle stolen and there are no plans to collect such information.

Football (Arrests and Ejections)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Carling premiership and Endsleigh Insurance league clubs together with the total season's attendance at (a) matches played in the Carling premiership and Endsleigh Insurance leagues and (b) matches played in the FA cup, Coca-Cola cup and Autoglass trophy with the total numbers of (i) arrests, (ii) ejections and (iii) arrests plus ejections as a percentage of the total attendance at each category of such matches, accurate to four decimal places, for the seasons 1991–92 and 1992–93; and if he will make a statement on attendance rates and arrest rates at each category of such matches.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants were issued under section 2 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 in each year since 1986; and how many such warrants are still in operation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of warrants issued by the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland and of those remaining in force at the end of each year are published in the annual reports of the commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Road Accidents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has on the level of involvement in serious road accidents of persons found to be under the influence of alcohol while being below the legal limit of intoxification for driving a car in each year from 1980.

Mr. Maclean: The only available information relates to the years 1987 to 1991 and was published in Home Office statistical bulletins "Breath Test Statistics". This suggests that the following percentages of persons were found to be below the legal limit in England and Wales when required to submit to an evidential test following a positive roadside screening breath test after a road accident:

Homosexual Offences

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions and convictions there have been involving homosexual offences committed by consenting persons in private over the past five years where any person involved was aged between 16 and 21 years of age.

Mr. Maclean: The table gives information on consensual acts of buggery or attempted buggery of a male of, or over 21, with another male under the age of 21, with consent—Sexual Offences Act 1956, section 12 as amended by the Sexual Offences Act 1967, section 3(1).

Game Shooters

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to ensure that all game bird shooters have a licence to shoot;

(2) how many prosecutions of game bird shooters have taken place under the Game Licence Act 1860 in each of the last five years; and what plans he has to more rigorously enforce the Act;

(3) how many game licences have been issued in each of the last five years; and what proportion this represents of the number of game bird shooters.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

Game Licences issued, 1988-89 to 1992-93

	Number
1988-89	40,600
1989-90	43,600

Enforcement of the law is a matter for the police.

We are currently consulting interested groups to see how far the game licences continue to meet their original objectives of combatting poaching and enforcing the statutory close seasons, or whether there may be better means of achieving the same object.

Murder

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children have been murdered or are suspected to have been murdered by members of their immediate families or by those with whom they have been placed in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The table shows the number of offences currently recorded as homicide in England and Wales where the victims were persons under the age of 16 years and the suspect was the parent, other relative or a child minder or nurse:

Children at Risk

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that local police officers are informed of the names and addresses of all children recorded as being at risk; and if he will advise all police forces and local authority social services departments that it is essential for relevant information to be passed both organisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Detailed guidance on liaison arrangements between the police, social services departments, and other agencies concerned with child protection is contained in "Working Together: A guide to arrangements for inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse" which was published by the Government in October 1991. Copies were distributed to all police forces. This document emphasises the importance of sharing information between agencies and the requirements of confidentiality. The detailed arrangements are a matter for local operational decision.

Mr. Stefan Kiszko

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Lancashire police commenced their investigation into the conviction of Stefan Kiszko; when he expects it to be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The investigation started on 10 May 1991. A report was submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service on 3 June 1993, and is now under consideration.

Organised Crime

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into organised crime and protection racketeering in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have no plans to do so. However, the hon. Member may be aware of an inquiry into organised crime currently being undertaken by the Home Affairs Committee to examine the threat from organised crime and to consider the most effective ways of responding to that threat.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has been given by the chief constable of Northumbria regarding the prevalence of protection rackets and organised crime in his region.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The chief constable is aware of media reports about organised crime in his force area. He acknowledges that protection rackets do exist in some parts of Tyne and Wear. Concerted efforts are being made by Northumbria police to tackle this type of crime. These are operational matters for which the chief constable is responsible.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to deal with protection rackets in the leisure industry in major cities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The investigation of alleged criminal offences is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Mr. Tony Bland

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make available in the Library the post-mortem report and any specialised pathology reports relating to the case of the late Mr. Tony Bland;

(2) whether it is his usual policy to publish post-mortem and pathology reports relating to inquests which are held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the normal period which elapses between the death of a patient in accidental or unnatural circumstances and the holding of an inquest into that death.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Coroners always endeavour to open inquests into deaths reported to them as soon as is reasonably possible.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long elapsed between the death of Mr. Tony Bland and the completion of the inquest into his death; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the West Yorkshire (West) coroner that Mr. Bland died on 3 March 1993. The inquest into his death was opened the following day and adjourned to await the outcome of relevant legal proceedings. The inquest was resumed on 21 December 1993 and concluded on the same day. Coroners are independent judicial officers and Ministers have no authority to intervene in or comment on the way in which a coroner carries out his duties in any individual case.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his Departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Howard: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Police Authorities

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to select the five members of each police authority whom he will be required to appoint under the provisions of the Police and Magistrates Court Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Members of the public will be able to put themselves forward for appointment as independent members of a police authority. To assist people to decide whether they have the qualities to undertake the duties of a police authority member, I am publishing today a job description and personal profile against which candidates' suitability for appointment will be considered.

Job Description

The main tasks of a police authority will be:

To establish the local priorities for policing in consultation with the Chief Constable.

To ensure that there are effective arrangements for consulting local communities about policing and for reflecting those views in local policing priorities.

To set the total budget for policing for the year.

To approve and publish a costed plan for policing. The police authority will need to ensure that the plan is designed to deliver both the Government's key objectives and those which are set locally.

To monitor the financial and other performance of the police force during the year in terms of key and local objectives and targets.

To maintain a dialogue with the Home Office about the achievement of key and local objectives for policing.

To publish annual performance results in a standard form to allow comparison of performance against other forces.

To participate in the selection of senior police officers.

To participate in the selection of senior civilian staff, both for the force and the authority itself.

Members of a police authority will be expected to:

Act on behalf of local people as the "customer" of the service which the police force provides.

Consult the public about the work of the police force.

Help to build a partnership between the police and the local community.

In achieving these aims, members of the authority will be expected to:

Attend all meetings of the police authority.

Attend meetings of any sub-committees of the authority as appropriate.

Prepare for these meetings by reading papers, reports and background information in advance and by keeping abreast of developments both locally and nationally in the policing sphere.

Represent the policy authority in discussions with:

- other police authorities
- staff associations
- local government
- central government
- any other groups with an interest in policing matters.

Attend local police consultative groups as appropriate.

Consult with representatives of the local community about issues relating to policing.

It is envisaged that the above duties will require a minimum commitment of 18 days a year. Most commitments will be on weekdays, on some occasions during the evenings.

There is a statutory obligation on police authority members to set a lawful budget each year. Failure to do so may lead to a member being surcharged if auditors consider that the authority suffered a financial loss as a consequence.

Appointments will be made for a period not exceeding four years.

Police Authority Members are not paid but are entitled to receive an allowance and expenses relating to the work they undertake on the Authority's business.

Personal Profile

Potential candidates should be at least 21 years old, be under 70 years of age at the expiration of their term of appointment and be of good character. They should also meet the following criteria:

They should live or work in the area for which the authority is responsible.

They should possess good communication skills.

They should have good financial skills.

They should be able to demonstrate the ability to challenge accepted views in a constructive way.

They should have an understanding of the needs of the community with regard to policing and of the pressures and challenges which face the police themselves.

They should have the skills and experience which would broaden the expertise available to the authority.

Police Authorities should include members from a wide range of backgrounds and experience and should reflect the composition of the society they serve.

All applications received will be considered in the first instance by one of six regional short-listing panels. Each regional panel will consist of a professional recruitment consultant and two people independent of Government.

I shall select those I wish to appoint as members of police authorities from the short-list for each authority submitted by the regional panels.

The involvement of people independent of Government in the short-listing procedure, and the publication of the selection criteria for these appointments emphasise the Government's aim that the five independent members of each police authority should be truly independent, and bring to their authorities a broader range of skills and experience.

We are consulting the Association of Lord-Lieutenants about their possible involvement in the short-listing procedure.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the powers of the courts to direct that juveniles who are remanded to local authority accommodation should be held in secure conditions.

Mr. Howard: I intend shortly to introduce an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill 1993, which would allow the courts to exercise such a power in relation to all juveniles who are at least 12 but not more than 16 years old, in accordance with the existing statutory criteria for its use in relation to 15 and 16-year-olds.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sustainable Energy Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss its recent paper on a sustainable energy policy, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Eggar: The association will discuss its paper with my officials in February.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he had with the Secretary of State for Defence and the Lord Chancellor, or their deputies or officials of their Departments, in regard to the withholding of departmental records inherited from the former Ministry of Power and Ministry of Fuel and Power, on Anglo-American arrangements for the import and export of nuclear materials to and from the United States, under the provisions of section 3(4) of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967, in preparation for the most recent release of official papers from the Public Records Office.

Mr. Eggar: The decision to approve the retention of records or to prescribe a closure period of longer than 30 years, in accordance with the criteria established under the Public Records Acts, is made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor on the advice of the Advisory Council on Public Records and of his officials in the Public Record Office. Applications are made by the relevant departmental officials in consultation with colleagues in other Departments as appropriate.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with his counterparts on the EC Council of Ministers in regard to communicating to the American nuclear industrial trade organisations the European Community's policy on obtaining a one-time waiver comprising prior consent for a programme of approval for reprocessing US nuclear fuel in European reprocessing plants after 1995.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Corby Development Area

Mr. William Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been paid by his Department under the Industry Act 1972 and subsequent related legislation in each year to companies in the Corby development area.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of payments to companies in the Corby travel-to-work area under the original and revised regional development grants scheme; regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants, are as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	0·3
1981-82	3·4

Indonesia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what export licences were granted in 1993 for arms or arms-related equipment to Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: In 1993, 51 licences were issued for goods listed in schedule 1 part III group 1 of the Export of Goods Control Order 1992.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of imports and exports with Indonesia in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the table:

Jetstream

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the outcome of his meeting, and the meetings between officers of his Department, with the management of Jetstream; what representations he is making to the European Commission as a result of these meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The managing director of Jetstream has had meetings with myself and my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade. As a result, discussions are taking place on whether DTI can further help promote Jetstream's export campaigns, while the European Commission has been asked to look at possible examples of unfair competition.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Eggar: The effect on my Department's budget of the abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate is likely to be more than offset by the reduction in employers' national insurance contributions.

Departmental Organisation

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to consolidate the organisation of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today announced further changes to consolidate the DTI's organisation along the lines initiated in July 1992, to take effect on 1 March 1994. The changes mark another step in restructuring the Department to ensure that it is best placed to fulfil my principal objective of helping United Kingdom business to win in world markets.

The principal changes are:

The main division sponsoring industrial sectors will be grouped under one Deputy Secretary.

In recognition of the vital importance of innovation and the policies in the recent White Paper on science, engineering and technology, DTI's work on technology development will be integrated more closely with its promotion of industrial competitiveness; its work on technology transfer and the spreading of management best practice will be brought together with the work to assist small and medium-sized enterprises and develop the business link network.

The divisions dealing with export promotion will be grouped under the director general, export promotion.

The Invest in Britain Bureau's successful efforts are to be reinforced by establishing it as a separate division of the DTI under a new chief executive.

The Offshore Supplies Office will become the new Oil and Gas Projects and Supplies Office. It will have a wider remit covering oil and gas market opportunities at home and abroad both upstream and downstream including petrochemicals. It will continue its existing work to ensure that United Kingdom suppliers take full advantage of North sea market opportunities, working closely with the DTI's energy divisions, under the Minister for Energy. It will, in addition, have a new task of exploiting opportunities for major overseas projects as well as other export opportunities working as part of the DTI's export promotion effort, under the Minister for Trade.

Science and Technology Adviser

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to maintain a post of chief adviser on science and technology; and to which official he intends the Innovation Unit to report.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to the reply, 14 December, c. 612]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns). Following the reorganisation of the work of the Department on innovation, I shall not be appointing a successor to Dr. Robinson when he returns to the private sector in March. Within the new structure, the innovation unit will report direct to the head of the industry command.

Local Authority Enforcement Functions

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for a review of overlapping local authority enforcement functions; and what the terms of reference for such a review will be.

Mr. Heseltine: In response to concerns of business, and following the announcement after the Prime Minister's last progress meeting on deregulation, that ways of eliminating duplication between enforcement agencies should be reviewed, the Government have decided that there should be a review of the enforcement functions of local authorities. This review has started today with the following terms of reference:

To investigate the organisational arrangements for the enforcement functions of local authorities, except insofar as they relate to fire safety, and to report on the scope for minimising business compliance costs and enforcement costs, as well as reducing inconsistencies in enforcement by removing any duplication and improving co-ordination within and between enforcement functions. The study should:

(a) review experience of co-ordination of enforcement, particularly within existing unitary authorities and also within and between other authorities;

(b) assess the scope for wider-coordination of regulatory functions by all authorities; and

(c) make recommendations on the means available to central and local government to promote good practice.

The scrutiny will report to Ministers within the 90 working days which are allowed under efficiency scrutiny guidelines.

The Secretary of State for the Environment and I will be the supervising Ministers for the scrutiny. The scrutiny team will be advised by a steering group which will include officials from interested Government Departments together with representatives of the local authority associations.

Fire Safety

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for a review of the enforcement agencies for fire safety matters; and what the terms of reference for such a review will be.

Mr. Heseltine: Following the announcement after the Prime Minister's last progress meeting on deregulation, that ways of eliminating duplication between enforcement agencies should be reviewed, and in response to concerns of business such as those of the deregulation task force for the construction industry, the Government have decided that there should be a review of those enforcement agencies responsible for fire safety. This review has started today with the following terms of reference:

Taking account of the review of the operation and effectiveness of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 recently undertaken by the Home Office, to review the operation and effectiveness of all legislation for which Home Office, DOE and HSE have policy responsibility in relation to fire safety; to review the organisation arrangements of all relevant bodies and agencies, including local authorities, responsible for enforcing this legislation; and to make recommendations.

The study should identify any areas of overlap, duplication or lack of clarity between the responsibilities of enforcement bodies, and should recommend ways of dealing with them. It should also address the practicability of bringing all policy responsibility for fire safety together in a single Department.

The scrutiny will report to Ministers within the 90 working days which are allowed under efficiency scrutiny guidelines.

The Home Secretary, Secretary of State for the Environment, Secretary of State for Employment and I will be the supervising Ministers for the scrutiny. The scrutiny team will be advised by a steering group which will include officials from interested Government Departments. The steering group which will be assisted by a contact group representing the interests of business users, constructors, the insurance industry and the various enforcement interests.

British Coal

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conclusions he has reached about arrangements for the future of concessionary fuel entitlements after the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: In October, the Government published a consultation paper on proposals for future concessionary fuel arrangements after privatisation of British Coal. Comments were received from coal industry unions, other organisations and a number of individuals.

Careful consideration has been given to all responses to the consultation paper. In the light of these responses, the Government have decided to pursue the proposals which were set out in the consultation paper.

Responsibility for meeting the entitlements of former British Coal employees and their dependants would be transferred at privatisation to the Secretary of State. The Coal Industry Bill which was introduced into the House on 2 December would provide powers for the Secretary of State to make payments necessary for securing these entitlements. The total liability to be assumed by the tax-payer would be in the region of £1,500 million.

Responsibility for supplying concessionary fuel to employees transferred to successor companies would pass to those companies. The Coal Industry Bill would provide the powers for these transfers by means of restructuring schemes. The schemes would place a contractual obligation on successor companies to honour the concessionary fuel entitlements of persons transferred to their employment.

In order to achieve continuity in the administration of concessionary fuel entitlements, the Government have decided that the National Concessionary Fuel Office—NCFO—part of British Coal's pensions and insurance centre in Sheffield—PIC—should continue to administer such entitlements for at least four years after the main privatisation of British Coal. The PIC would be privatised within a year or so of the main privatisation.

As far as continuing employees are concerned, it would be for successor companies to ensure satisfactory administrative arrangements in respect of concessionary fuel entitlements of British Coal employees who transfer to their employment. If required, the NCFO would be able to provide a concessionary fuel administration service to successor companies.

The Government believe that these proposals meet in full their commitment to safeguard the entitlements of past and present employees of British Coal, and their dependants, to concessionary fuel or cash in lieu after privatisation.

Export Licences

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what information he has on the export of Heckler and Koch machine guns from the United Kingdom to the United Arab Emirates in 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will now publish details of all export licences granted to Royal Ordnance between 1980 and 1993; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has on the export of Heckler and Koch weapons from the United Kingdom to the former Yugoslavia in 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has relating to the exports of Royal Ordnance to (a) the United Arab Emirates, (b) central America, (c) the former Yugoslavia and (d) the former East Germany; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information he has relating to the export of ethyl cellulose by Royal Ordnance in 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what is his policy regarding the collection and publication of information on the export of weapons by Heckler and Koch from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 January 1994]: It has been the policy of successive administrations not to disclose details of an individual company's export licence applications, which are submitted to my Department in confidence.

Trade Barriers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards negotiating bilateral agreements with (a) Russia, (b) Hungary and (c) the Czech Republic in relation to reducing tariff or other trade barriers on agricultural products and food manufactured products; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

The negotiation of trade agreements is undertaken on behalf of the Community by the European Commission, working from mandates approved by the Council of Ministers. Europe agreements have been concluded both with Hungary and the Czech Republic, as well as with Poland, Slovakia, Romania and Bulgaria. These provide access to the Community market at concessionary rates of import charge for a wide range of agricultural and processed agricultural products, as well as favourable access terms for the Community's farm exports to their markets. The United Kingdom strongly supported the negotiation of these agreements which should help the development of more market-oriented economic structures in those countries.

Russia benefits from certain agricultural concessionary arrangements under the Community's generalised scheme of preference. Negotiations are currently under way for a partnership and co-operation agreement with Russia. This agreement does not contain specific trade concessions but does hold out the possibility of a free trade agreement in the future.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid (Kenya)

38. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new British aid projects are now being considered in discussions with the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are discussing new projects in many areas including health and family planning, education, agriculture and wildlife, transport and the police.

Cambodia

41. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions Her Majesty's Government are currently making towards the lifting of mines in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since October 1991, we have provided nearly £500,000 for demining in Cambodia, and we are currently contributing in addition some £135,000.

Brazil (Street Children)

42. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government have given to projects in Brazil concerned with assisting former street children.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1992, we have committed over £400,000 to projects which assist Brazilian street children. This assistance is largely channelled through United Kingdom non-governmental organisations such as Childhope, Womankind and Oxfam.

Nigeria

43. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how aid is being affected by the political situation in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Existing aid projects continue and we are reviewing the rest of our programme. A £23·3 million grant to the power sector has been cancelled.

Sudan

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the impact of conflict in Sudan on the United Kingdom"s aid programme to that area.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We closed our aid projects in southern Sudan in 1986 due to the conflict. In 1991, the continuing civil war was one factor in the decision to terminate our aid programme completely.

South Africa

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the United Kingdom is doing to help the training of the police and crowd control marshals in South Africa, with particular reference to election monitoring.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following a successful pilot project, we have agreed to help train marshals in crowd control at a cost of £750,000. We also plan to train 6,000 peace monitors who will be deployed during the elections at a cost of some £830,000. In addition we shall contribute to the activities of the new electoral unit to be set up in South Africa by the European Union, and consider any specific requests from the South African Independent Electoral Commission.

World Bank

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the accountability of the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to Parliament; and what plans he has to make changes to improve accountability to national Parliaments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank and the IMF are accountable to their shareholders, including the United Kingdom. The Government are accountable to Parliament for payments made to these institutions. These arrangements work and we therefore have no current plans to change them.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the report, "Adjustment in Sub-Saharan Africa" published by the operations evaluations department of the World bank on 30 June 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Individual evaluations produced by the operations evaluation department—OED—of the World bank are not published, but summaries of selected reports highlighting the main findings and lessons are released. Publication of the summary of the OED report on adjustment in sub-Saharan Africa is imminent, and a copy will be placed in each Library of the House as soon as it is received.

HEALTH

NHS Employees

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to health authorities regarding procedures for suspension of NHS employees and the length of time in which formal disciplinary inquiries should be instigated, where such an inquiry is to take place.

Dr. Mawhinney: Disciplinary proceedings for national health service staff employed on national terms and conditions of service are governed by section 40 of the General Whitley Council's handbook, a copy of which is available in the Library. This provides a framework within which employing authorities determine local disciplinary procedures.

Guidance on disciplinary procedures for hospital medical and dental and community medical staff, where questions of professional conduct or professional competence are involved, was issued to employing authorities in departmental circular HC(90)9, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of all individuals appointed to chair NHS trusts and serve as non-executive directors, listing their occupation and sex.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capital allocations have been awarded to each NHS trust in the Northern region for 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: Capital allocations to national health service trusts are not yet complete. An announcement about the issue of trust external financing limits, which control trust capital spending, will be made shortly.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish estimates of the amount of money held in trust funds by (a) district and (b) region.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals are at present engaged in community activities in order to raise money to purchase a magnetic resonance imaging scanner.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Surgeons' Assistants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on cardiac surgeons' assistants.

Dr. Mawhinney: This interesting development is being evaluated at the Churchill John Radcliffe hospital, Oxford. The Royal College of Surgeons is closely involved in the scheme and it will be discussed with the medical profession in the joint consultants committee shortly.

Optician Registered Premises

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many optician registered premises there were in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of ophthalmic opticians premises[1] for the five most recent years for which figures are available is as follows:

at 31 December

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
England
Ophthalmic opticians premises[2]	4,970	4,944	4,887	4,944	4,927

Ophthalmic opticians premises	349	345	330	353	358
Other	—	—	56	51	47
Total	—	—	386	404	405

[1]Between 1986 and 1989, data were not collected on those premises not classified as 'Ophthalmic Opticians' premises. In 1990, information on all premises was collected. As a result, it became apparent that some family health services authorities were wrongly classifying some premises as 'Ophthalmic Opticians'. These figures should therefore be used with care.
[2]Premises where the owner or manager is registered with the General Optical Council as an ophthalmic optician.
[3]Premises where the owner or manager is not registered with the General Optical Council as an ophthalmic optician.

Female Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many female consultants there were in the national health service on 1 January; and what was the Opportunity 2000 target for female consultants in the national health service by 1994.

Mr. Sackville: Most recent figures available are that there were 2,822 female consultants in the national health service as at 30 September 1992. The Opportunity 2000 target is that 20 per cent. of all consultants should be female by 1994.

Dentists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists were salaried in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Number of salaried dentists in England at 30 September

Year	Number of salaried dentists
1989	36
1990	33
1991	27
1992	65
1993	93

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of general practitioner fundholders have spent more than their budgets for 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not yet available centrally. The Department is awaiting finally audited figures on fundholder expenditure from some regions.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to be able to publish a regional breakdown of the 1992–93 allocations retained by general practitioner fundholders.

Dr. Mawhinney: These figures are not yet available centrally, as the Department is awaiting finally audited figures from some regions. When these are available, the regional information will be published.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it remains her policy that hospital treatment should be made available equally to the patients of fundholding and non-fundholding general practices; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: All patients are entitled to expect high-quality health care, regardless of whether the treatment is paid for by a fundholding general practitioner, or a district health authority on behalf of the general practitioner.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received from right hon. and hon. Members identifying instances where is it alleged that different priority in the allocation of treatment is given to the patients of fundholding and non-fundholding general practices; and if she will in each case identify the establishment allegedly operating any such two-tier system.

Dr. Mawhinney: According to our records, six parliamentary questions—excluding my hon. Friend's—and 61 letters from hon. Members have been answered in the current financial year.

The establishments named were:
Addenbrookes Hospital (twice), Cambridge
Kidderminster General, Kidderminster
Lister Hospital, Stevenage and Queen Elizabeth II Hospital Welwyn Garden City, Hertfordshire
Luton and Dunstable Hospital Trust, Luton
Norfolk Acute Hospitals Trust, Norwich
Nuffield Orthopaedic Centre, Headington

St. Peter's Hospital, Chertsey
South Warwickshire General Hospital Trust, Warwick
Stoke Mandeville Hospital, Aylesbury
Watford General, Watford
Westmorland General Hospital, Kendal and Cumberland Infirmary, Carlisle.

Cigarette Advertising

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of the effect of a ban on cigarette promotion on levels of smoking.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health discussion document "Effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption" reviewed the evidence on the effect of tobacco bans in other countries. The report makes no estimate of the effect of an advertising ban in the United Kingdom. Copies of the report, published in October 1992, are available in the Library.

Opticians

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many opticians were registered with family health services authorities in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of ophthalmic opticians and ophthalmic medical practitioners registered in the five most recent years for which figures are available is:

At 31 December

	England[1]			Wales[1]
	Ophthalmic opticians	Ophthalmic medical practitioners	Total	Ophthalmic opticians	Ophthalmic medical practitioners	Total
1988	5,378	832	6,210	419	47	466
1989	5,514	784	6,298	436	43	479

1992	5,863	738	6,601	477	53	530

[1] Practitioners are generally counted only once even if they have a contract with more than one family health services authority. If however, they have contracts in both England and Wales, they will appear in figures for both countries.

Confidentiality

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she first announced a plan to publish a code of confidentiality for the NHS; what progress has been made; and if she will publish the draft NHS Management Executive document on confidentiality, use and disclosure on NHS information.

Mr. Sackville: In 1984 and in 1989, the Government issued consultation documents on a draft code of practice for handling personal health information. After failure to achieve consensus on this code the Government decided instead to prepare guidance on the matter. This was announced in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 13 February 1991 at column 509. There have been complex legal issues to resolve, but we hope to issue the guidance for consultation before the end of March.

Midwifery

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the establishment by Leeds university of a chair of midwifery which is open to non-midwives; and if she will make a statement about the funding of this post.

Mr. Sackville: The qualifications required for appointment to the chair of midwifery are a matter for the university funding the chair to determine.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what communication she has had with the director of research and development about advertisement for the chair of midwifery at Leeds university being open to non-midwives; and if she will comment about his views.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to restructure the Medicines Control Agency; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency became an executive agency in July 1991 and a Government trading fund in April 1993. In accordance with the usual arrangements, and as announced in the next steps review 1993, we shall be conducting a review of the performance and operation of the Medicines Control Agency for completion within three and a half years of the agency's launch—that is, by early 1995.

GP Night Fees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is required on the form on which general practitioners claim night fees.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health has issued a model form for completion by general practitioners claiming night visit fees. However, individual family health services authorities are free to amend this form to ask for additional information if they wish. The model form asks for details of the GP making the visit, including FHSA code number, and his or her relationship to the patient's own GP; the patient's personal details, including national health service number and date of birth; place of attendance; and confirmation that the visit was requested and made between the hours of 10pm and 8am; additionally, if more than one patient was seen on the same visit to one place, details for each patient are requested.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are those people currently appointed to serve on regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Non-executive chairmen and members of regional health authorities are as listed. The appointment of executive members to regional health authorities is a matter for the authorities themselves.

Nuts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about the number of people suffering from an allergy to nuts and the number of deaths that have resulted in recent years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Flu Vaccine

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the distribution of flu vaccine for 1993-94; and what relative priorities have been given to asthmatics, children, adults and the retired.

Mr. Sackville: For commercial reasons, a fifth of the expected supply of flu vaccine did not become available until 22 December 1993. Helpfully, however, additional production by licensed suppliers resulted in over 5 million doses being made available to the national health service prior to this date compared with 4·7 million in 1992-93. Supplies of influenza vaccine are still available.

As in previous years, the chief medical officer wrote to all general practitioners in 1993-94 giving advice about available vaccines and about people most at risk for whom immunisation is recommended, including asthmatics. Routine immunisation of children and fit and healthy older people is not recommended unless there are particular risk factors. The final decision in individual cases rests with the GP.

Private Health Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about the number of people using private health care (a) by region and (b) by district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Patient Complaints

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish a regional breakdown of written patient complaints for 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information should be available by the end of March 1994.

NHS Estates

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the terms of reference for the review of the role and functions of the NHS estates; and when she expects the review to be completed.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference, including the time scale, for the review of the national health service estates agency are as follows.

REVIEW OF THE NHS ESTATES AGENCY

Terms of Reference

I. To carry out a review of the NHS Estates Agency by the end of June 1994, by

1. evaluating the following:
   (a) the appropriateness of the aims and objectives of the agency
   (b) the agency's performance in meeting its targets
   (c) the appropriateness of the delegations available to the agency
   (d) the efficiency and economy of the agency's internal operations, including its personnel, management and financial systems
   (e) the impact of agency status on the agency's activities in relation to the Department of Health and its Ministers
   (f) the impact of agency status on the agency's and Department's relationship with Parliament and the public;

2. reconsidering the prior options for the status of the agency;
3. depending on the outcome of 1 and 2 above, revising the agency's framework document as appropriate.

II. to report to Ministers according to the agreed timetable, consulting the Office of Public Services and Science and the Treasury as necessary.

Runaway Children

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will direct area child protection committees to undertake monitoring of the scale of the problem of young runaways in each area and ensure that proper inter-agency arrangements are in place to respond effectively.

Mr. Bowis: Government guidance on the role and functions of area child protection committees—ACPCs—is given in "Working Together under the Children Act 1989" and we have no plans to issue specific guidance to ACPCs on young runaways. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the report of the Children's Society on young runaways, a copy of which has been sent to her.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has just received a copy of the report of the Children's Society on young runaways and will study it with interest.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon her departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employer's national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's running costs baseline.

Oldchurch Hospital, Romford

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and nature of representations she has received relating to Oldchurch hospital, Romford.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a petition of some 46,000 signatures and some 17,000 pre-printed letters and postcards from members of the public, as well as a number of letters from individuals and hon. Members.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement indicating her policy on the use of ova from aborted babies to enable babies to be conceived through in vitro fertilisation; and if she will identify precisely those sections of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 which would effectively prevent the adoption of such techniques.

Mr. Sackville: The Government welcome the consultation document on the use of ovarian tissue, including fetal ovarian tissue, in the treatment of infertility issued on 7 January by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. This wide-ranging consultation will give the public and professional interests time to consider all aspects of this complex and sensitive area. We look forward to receiving advice from the authority in due course, when we can consider what action, if any, is required.

Under Section 3 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act, it is an offence to create, keep or use an embryo without a licence. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority stated that no licence would be granted where the in vitro fertilisation involved fetal eggs.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1990 the expenditure on gross redundancy payments for (a) regions, (b) districts and (c) trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 December 1993]: The information is shown in the table.

Revenue expenditure on gross redundancy payments in England

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £	1992-93 £
Regional Health Authorities	948,202	2,720,438	3,236,599
District Health Authorities	10,789,525	25,875,532	34,805,785
NHS Trusts	Not applicable	3,674,860	14,467,515
Totals	11,737,727	32,270,650	52,509,899

Notes:
Number of trusts as at: 1 April 1991— 57
Number of trusts as at: 1 April 1992—156
Number of trusts as at: 1 April 1993—292

The closure of psychiatric hospitals in connection with "Care in the Community" and management restructuring throughout the national health service are the main reasons for the increase in redundancy compensation payments. Section 45 of the General Whitley Council handbook establishes the redundancy compensation arrangements for NHS staff. Redundancy compensation takes the form of a lump sum dependent on the age and reckonable service of the employee at the date he or she ceases to be employed.

Benefits

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total annual amount of money paid to claimants by way of health benefits; and how much was paid in each area of entitlement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 January 1994]: Holders of low income scheme charge remission certificates are entitled to receive national health services free or at a reduced cost as and when these are needed during the currency of a certificate; they do not receive a specified financial award. Certificate holders may also be entitled to refunds of travelling expenses incurred when attending hospital for national health service treatment and, within strict time limits, to refunds of charges paid before they claimed help from the low income scheme. Information about expenditure on these refunds is not collected centrally.

WALES

Inward Investment

14. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the Welsh share of inward investment to the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992-93, Wales had a 20 per cent. share of United Kingdom foreign investment projects. The comparable European figure is not available.

Cardiff Wales Airport (Road Links)

15. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to secure the provision of an improved road link between Culverhouse cross and Cardiff Wales airport.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for securing the good communications which are important to the continued success of Cardiff Wales airport rests with South Glamorgan county council. The Department would be prepared to consider a well substantiated case for transport grant support for major improvement to road links to the airport if the county council considered it of sufficient priority.

Hospital Waiting Lists

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest information he has concerning the length of hospital waiting lists at (a) six months, (b) one year and (c) over one year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The most recent detailed information on the length of hospital waiting lists in Wales and the increasing numbers of patients being treated is that shown in the Welsh "Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1993", No. 2, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Economy

17. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement outlining the prospects for the Welsh economy during 1994.

Mr. Redwood: Welsh industry has extremely high productivity. We have seen a long-term trend of falling unemployment with a further fall of 1,800 in Wales last month; low inflation; low interest rates; and competitive exchange rates. All of these factors have given Welsh companies a competitive edge which they are using to the full. Welsh industry is in a strong position to take advantage of improving trading conditions both at home and overseas, which will be improved even further with the accord reached in the Uruguay round.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The seasonally adjusted number of claimant unemployed in Wales was 126,000 in December 1993. The number has fallen by 7,900 since January 1993.

22. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of male and female unemployment in Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Redwood: Seasonally adjusted, there were 99,600 males and 26,500 females who were claimant unemployed in Wales in December 1993.

Hill Sheep Farmers

19. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange to meet leaders of farmers' unions in Wales to discuss the acute problems facing hill sheep farmers.

Mr. Redwood: I meet the farming unions several times each year.

NHS Staff

20. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many managerial, nursing and midwife posts there were in the NHS, including trusts, in Wales in each year from 1988 to date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information given as follows relates to staff numbers and not posts.

	Managerial staff[1]	Nursing and midwifery staff
		Other	Learners[2]	Total
1988	[3]—	24,583	3,336	27,920
1989	187	24,919	3,118	28,037
1990	416	25,018	3,075	28,093
1991	683	25,028	2,934	27,962
1992	848	25,451	1,970	27,421
1993	1,028	25,206	1,033	26,239

Notes:

Figures given are the whole-time equivalent number of staff employed as at 30 September each year.

Includes staff employed by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and those Family Health Services Authorities using District Health Authority payroll systems.

The use of locally devised payscales from 1991 onwards may affect the comparability of figures as these staff cannot be allocated centrally to a specific staff group and are not, therefore, included above.

[1] General and senior managers. The growth in the number of these staff arises partly from the extension in 1989 of senior manager terms and conditions of service to second and third level managers including some senior nurses and other professional staff.

[2] Since the autumn of 1991 student nurses have been classified as students and are no longer included in the NHS staff figures. Staff included here are students finishing courses begun before this date. There were some 1,800 Project 2000 student nurses at September 1993.

[3] Comparable figures for years before 1989 are not available.

North Wales Main Railway Line

23. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss improvements to the north Wales main railway line.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend last met Sir Bob Reid on 12 October 1992. They discussed a number of issues including the north Wales main line.

Roads

26. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for further road building in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: On 14 December, my right hon. Friend announced that in 1993-94 work will start on the A465 Aberdulais-Glynneath improvement, the A4042 Llantarnam bypass, and the A40 Llandeilo northern bypass. Work has since started on the first two of these schemes and tenders for the third are being assessed. In 1994-95 starts are planned for the A470 Pentrebach-Cefn Coed improvement, the A5 Glyn Bends improvement and the A40 Whitland bypass.

My right hon. Friend is reviewing the strategic roads needs of Wales with the aim of accelerating the start of the more important schemes in the forward programme. He plans to make an announcement shortly.

Youth Service

27. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of his local government settlement on the level of youth service provision in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provisional local government revenue settlement for 1994-95 provides for local government spending of £2,704·8 million, an increase of 4·2 per cent. over 1993-94. The settlement is realistic in the present economic climate.

Local authorities are responsible for determining their priorities for expenditure in the light of available resources and local needs, including the youth service.

Health Authorities (Administration Costs)

28. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the administration of the Clwyd health authority and other authorities in Wales cost in the last year and in 1978 adjusted to 1992 prices.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows. The table gives the cost of administration for health authorities in Wales for 1992-93—the last year for which data are available—and for 1978-79 adjusted to 1992-93 prices.

£ thousands

West Glamorgan	2,605	4,584

Note: The figure for the cost of administration is taken to be that covering authority administration and purchasing expenses. This represents the total revenue expenditure on the pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines and their support staff employed at headquarters levels together with the costs of the purchaser function. They exclude administrative support in hospital departments and at other local levels which is regarded as operational expenditure.

Council Spending

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the actual council revenue spending for 1993-94, net of community care, and the planned council revenue spending for 1993-94 and 1994-95, net of community care, for each district and county of Wales and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authority budgeted expenditure, including community care, for the current financial year is published on page 43 of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics No. 17 1993", copies of which are in the Library of the House. Information on community care budgets is not available separately. Actual figures for 1993-94 and budgeted expenditure for 1994-95 are not yet available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of reserves was spent by every county and district council in Wales during the last financial year; and if he will give the totals for all counties and all districts, and the combined total for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The use of reserves by local authorities during the last financial year is shown in the table.

Public Appointments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of members of all public bodies to which he made appointments.

Mr. Redwood: The latest list, showing the position as at 1 December 1993, was deposited in the Library of the House on 16 December 1993.

Youthstart

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect on Wales of implementing the Youthstart programme, proposed by the European Commission White Paper on growth, competition and employment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Youthstart is a Community youth guarantee scheme which is still being considered. The Government's youth guarantee scheme already ensures that all young people under the age of 18 who are not in a job or further education are given the opportunity of a suitable place on youth training.

Welsh Language Act 1993

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available in the Vote Office and Library Welsh language copies of the Welsh Language Act 1993.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Yes. I have today arranged for copies of the Welsh translation of the Welsh Language Act 1993 to be available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House.

NHS Managers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of general and senior managers in the NHS in each year since 1986.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Salary costs of general and senior managers

i. Figures include expenditure by Health Authorities, the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, Pembrokeshire NHS Trust and the Health Promotion Authority for Wales but excludes those of Family Health Services Authorities whose corresponding costs are not identifiable on the same basis.
ii. It should be noted that since 1989 senior managers' terms and conditions of service have been extended to second and third level managers and some senior nurses and other professional staff have also transferred to the senior management grades.

Biodiversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he received a copy of a report on biodiversity and conservation action, prepared by six environmental groups; and what steps he has taken to evaluate the risks outlined in the report.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have not received a copy of the report although I understand that it broadly accords with the Government's biodiversity action plan which will be published shortly.

Tunnel Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has made to Friends of the Earth Cymru's inquiry in regard to the standardisation of safety regulations covering the transport of dangerous cargoes through road tunnels.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I replied to a letter from Friends of the Earth on 10 January decribing the measures we have taken to minimise the risk of vehicles carrying hazardous loads using the tunnels on the A55. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Education Staff

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the continued employment of the staff of the Welsh Education Development Committee—PDAG—the Welsh Committee of School Examinations and Assessment Council and the Curriculum Council for Wales following the transference and expansion of the functions of those bodies following the enactment of the Education Act 1993 and the Welsh Language Act 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Decisions on the continued employment of the staff of the Curriculum Council for Wales when it is established as the new Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales/Awdurdod Cwricwlwm ac Asesu Cymru—ACAC—from 1 April will be a matter for the new Authority to consider within the approved staffing structure and resources to be made available to the authority. Discussions are taking place with the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority in respect of those staff employed on Welsh language functions whose contracts will continue after 1 April 1994. The redeployment of staff currently employed by the Welsh Language Education Development Committee—PDAG—is the responsibility of the Welsh Joint Education Committee which is their statutory employer. Staff currently engaged at PDAG will, however, be free to apply for any post advertised by ACAC, the Further Education Funding Council and the Welsh Language Board.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has in regard to the disposal of radioactive waste by Singleton hospital, Swansea in a local landfill site.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The disposal of radioactive waste from Singleton hospital is authorised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. The small volume of waste sent to landfill is mainly in ash form, most of it having already been incinerated, and contains very low levels of radioactivity.

Grant and Subsidy Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been spent in Wales on each different grant and subsidy scheme available to farmers and landowners in each year from 1990-91 to 1993-94; what are his forecasts for 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The expenditure on agricultural grant and subsidy schemes in the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 is published in the appropriation accounts for the relevant years, copies of which are in the Library of the House. The latest forecasts for 1993-94 are set out in the supply estimates 1993-94 for vote 1 schemes and, for vote 2 schemes, in the winter supplementary estimates. My plans for spending on agricultural grants and subsidies in Wales for 1994-95 will be set out in the 1994-95 supply estimates. The Government's priorities on and aims for agricultural spending will be set out in the Welsh Office departmental report to be laid before Parliament in March.

Pembrokeshire Coast National Park

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress his Department has made in reviewing the boundaries of the Pembrokeshire Coast national park following the public inquiry in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The review has raised complex legal issues which are still being considered. A response is expected to issue in the near future.

Local Planning Authorities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish new guidelines to local planning authorities with regard to the factors which should be considered in permitting out-of-town shopping centres with a potentially detrimental effect on town centre business activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Revised guidelines were published in July last year in planning policy guidance note No. 6. These advise that the scale, type and location of out-of centre retail developments should not be such as to undermine the vitality and visibility of those town centres that would otherwise serve the community well. The guidance is being kept under review.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employer's national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Swimming Pool, Kilkeel

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when funding will be provided to Newry and Mourne district council in respect of the provision of a swimming pool at Kilkeel.

Mr. Ancram: Finance for this project is not currently available.

The position in future years will be determined in the light of the resources available and the priorities which need to be addressed.

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what changes have taken place in teacher training to ensure that all newly qualified teachers can identify and assist children suffering from dyslexia;

(2) how many teachers in Northern Ireland have been trained specifically to recognise or to assist children with dyslexia and other special educational needs.

Mr. Ancram: Dyslexia can describe a variety of learning difficulties experienced by children. All teachers receive, as part of their initial training, an element designed to enable them to develop the capacity to identify and deal with pupils with learning difficulties. For serving teachers, the education and library boards mount in-service courses with similar objectives, but the numbers involved are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parole

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were released from prison for Christmas parole; how many returned at the required date and time; and what was the maximum number of years of sentence for any such prisoners.

Sir John Wheeler: In December 1993, a total number of 446 prisoners were released from prison for Christmas home leave; of these, 100 prisoners were serving indeterminate sentences. The number who returned at the required date and time was 436, including all the indeterminate sentence prisoners.

At 14 January, three prisoners were still unlawfully at large and their names have been passed to the security forces.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why Neil Latimer was not released from prison for Christmas parole; how many years he has been sentenced to imprisonment; and how many of these years he has already served in prison.

Sir John Wheeler: Neil Latimer is serving a life sentence. He completed 10 years imprisonment in December 1993. To be eligible for consideration for Christmas home leave a prisoner was required to have served a minimum of 11 years in custody.

Ice Bowl

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the public inquiry was held about the next phase of the development of Dundonalds international ice bowl; when a decision is to be announced; and if he will make a statement about the efficiency of such public inquiries.

Mr. Tim Smith: The public inquiry was held before the Planning Appeals Commission from 5 January until 13 January 1993. Unfortunately, as the presiding commissioner was indisposed for a period following the close of the inquiry, the commission's report is not yet with the Department. I understand that the report should be submitted to the Department next month after which a decision will issue as soon as possible.

Planning inquiries are held to ensure that all representations are fully aired and considered in an open forum before a decision is made. I am content that this system provides a fair consideration of what are often complex planning issues.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Sir John Wheeler: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Parliament Buildings, Stormont

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the refurbishment of Parliament buildings, Stormont.

Mr. Tim Smith: A contract costing in the region of £2·5 million is to commence at Parliament buildings in February 1994. The work, which will take about a year to complete, will ensure that the building complies with health and safety and fire regulations.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many official Christmas cards were sent in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Sir John Wheeler: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Fine Defaulters

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average prison sentence imposed for defaulting on a fine; what is the average period actually spent in prison by such a defaulter in Scotland; and what is the average cost of such a person's imprisonment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average sentence imposed in 1992 for defaulting on a fine was 23 days. The average time spent in prison by a fine defaulter was an estimated 13 days and the estimated average cost of the person's imprisonment was £970.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were sentenced to a prison term under each offence category in the latest year for which figures are available; and what number and percentage of the total were fine defaulters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. The table details the total number of receptions and the number of fine defaulter receptions to penal establishments in Scotland by classification of crime and offence for 1992.

Agricultural Base Areas

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the figures in hectares for (a) set-aside; (b) pulses, (c) oilseed rape and (d) cereals for 1989, 1990 and 1991 which were used to calculate the base area in Scotland.

(2) if he will list the June census set-aside figures for Scotland for 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 29 November 1993]: The figures used to calculate the base areas in Scotland are as follows:—

	1989		1990		1991		3 years average
	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA	LFA	Non-LFA

[1]Figures taken from the five-year and one-year set-aside scheme returns.

[2]Before submission to the EC Commission in September 1992, these figures were adjusted by switching 34,854 hectares from less-favoured areas to non-LFAs giving a base area of 160,348 hectares for the LFAs and 390,844 hectares for the non-LFAs. These figures were further adjusted to reflect the more accurate split between LFAs and non-LFA arable land established from the integrated administration and control system returns, and a further 39,303 hectares was switched from LFAs to non-LFAs giving new base areas of 121,045 hectares for the LFAs and 430,147 for the non-LFAs. These last figures are now accepted by the EC as the Scottish base areas. Throughout, the total base area has remained constant at 551,192 hectares.

The set-aside figures recorded in the June census for 1989 and 1990 were 29,197 and 44,465 hectares respectively. These figures partly reflect land registered for set-aside and are, therefore, higher than the area actually set aside. No specific set-aside questions were asked in 1991.

Negative Equity

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of households with negative equity for the third quarter of 1993; and what this figure represents as a proportion of total owner occupied households.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 January 1994]: We do not hold this information. However, recent studies have shown that the problem of negative equity is less pronounced in Scotland than in other regions of the United Kingdom, affecting only an estimated 1 per cent. of recent homebuyers. It is open to anyone in that position to discuss their situation with their mortgage lender.

EDUCATION

Further Education Colleges

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the members of the governing bodies of the new further education college corporations together with (a) their age, (b) their gender and (c) occupation;

(2) what statistics were held on (a) the age, (b) the gender and (c) the occupations of members of further education college governing bodies prior to the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not hold records of members of further education college governing bodies prior to the passing of the Education Reform Act 1988, nor of members of further education college corporations, since in neither case was the Secretary of State the appointing authority. In the case of sixth form college corporations, my right hon. Friend was responsible for the appointment of the initial members only. Current records are not held by the Department.

Student Loans

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the usual period experienced by full-time students who have no other financial means for the processing of their applications for support from the access fund; and what assistance is available to sustain them during that period.

Mr. Boswell: Access funds are intended to help eligible full-time students in higher and further education who, for whatever reason, face financial difficulties. Arrangements for allocation and payment of funds to students are determined by individual institutions. Under the charters for further and higher education published by my right hon. Friend, students who apply for assistance from access funds can expect a decision normally within four weeks of applying or by a published termly date when the institution considers applications. They can also expect to be paid quickly if their application is approved. It is open to institutions to accelerate the timetable for students in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the usual period experienced by students between the end of entitlement to benefit on the commencement of a full-time course and the actual receipt of maintenance grant from the local education authority; and what financial assistance is available to such students who have no other financial means to sustain them during that period.

Mr. Boswell: Most full-time students in further and higher education are ineligible for income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit from the date of their enrolment on the course. Students formally enrol at their institution at the beginning of their first term. Local education authorities are responsible for the payment of the grants they make to students. Under the charters for further and higher education published by my right hon. Friend, students have a right to expect the payment of their grant at the start of each term, provided that they have met the authority's application deadline and given such information as the authority requires. Where payment of the full grant is delayed, authorities can make some payment on account. Institutions may use their access funds to give help to eligible students who face particular financial difficulties.

Higher Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice he has issued about responses to be made in respect of complaints concerning quality in higher education.

Mr. Boswell: As autonomous institutions, universities and higher education colleges are responsible for providing responses to complaints about the quality of what they provide. However, the charter for higher education published on 21 September 1993 by my right hon. Friend advises that institutions responsible for service delivery can be expected to reply to complaints within 10 working days.

Assisted Places

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the total cost to public funds of the assisted places scheme at the Royal school, Wolverhampton in each year since 1988-89;

(2) how many pupils have been (a) on the roll and (b) under the assisted places scheme in each year since 1988-89 at the Royal school, Wolverhampton.

Mr. Forth: Nil. The Royal school, Wolverhampton does not participate in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average household income of children supported by the assisted places scheme in each year since 1988-89 in each English local education authority.

Mr. Forth: Information about the average household income of an assisted place holder is not collected by reference to local education authority areas. The data can be derived only at disproportionate cost. The average household income of assisted pupils in England for each year since 1988-89 is given in the table:

Financial year	Average household income of assisted place holders £
1988-89	9,105

1992-93	10,982

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many pupils have been (a) on the roll and (b) under the assisted places scheme in each year since 1988-89 at Tettenhall college, Wolverhampton;

(2) what was the total cost to public funds of the assisted places scheme at Tettenhall college, Wolverhampton in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Forth: Tettenhall college does not participate in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost to public funds of the assisted places scheme; and how many children were supported by the scheme in each year since 1988-89 in each English local education authority.

Mr. Forth: The total cost of the scheme and the number of children supported by it for each year since 1988-89 is given in the following table. The data are not available broken down by each local education authority.

Year	Total expenditure (financial year) £ million	Total number of assisted pupils (academic year)
1988-89	50·9	27,083
1989-90	56·5	27,008
1990-91	63·4	26,740
1991-92	75·7	27,641
1992-93	[1]92·8	28,674

[1] Includes £4·9 million brought forward from financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average cost to public funds of each place at non-maintained secondary schools under the assisted places scheme in each year since 1988-89 in each English local education authority.

Mr. Forth: Information about the average cost of an assisted place is not collected by reference to local education authority areas. The data can be derived only at disproportionate cost. The overall average cost to public funds of an assisted place for each year since 1988-89 is given in the table:

Academic year	Average cost of an assisted place £
1988-89	2,121
1989-90	2,364
1990-91	2,691
1991-92	3,101
1992-93	3,405

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 442, if he will publish the random audit surveys of income assessments made by his Department for parents of children supported by the assisted places scheme, together with other statistical information collected and referred to.

Mr. Forth: No.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average school fee paid by the parents of children who benefited under the assisted places scheme, in each year since 1990.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table:

Academic year	Average fee charged for assisted pupils £
1990-91	3,267
1991-92	3,703
1992-93	3,996

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost of the assisted places scheme for each financial year since 1990.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table:

Financial year	Total cost of assisted places scheme £ million
1990-91	63·4
1991-92	75·7
1992-93	[1]92·8

[1] Includes £4·9 million brought forward from financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children in (a) England, (b) Cornwall and (c) Devon have received funding under the assisted places scheme, in each year since 1990.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table. The number of assisted pupils in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Number of assisted pupils

Academic year	(a) England	(b) Cornwall	(c) Devon
1990-91	26,740	174	728
1991-92	27,641	178	753
1992-93	28,674	179	774

Sex Education

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans the Government have to ensure that teachers receive adequate initial and in-service training to deliver the new compulsory provision of sex education in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The new arrangements for sex education, which will come into force in September 1994, will incorporate elements which currently form part of the national curriculum requirements for science; and many secondary schools already teach other elements of sex education too. The Department's grants for education support and training programme for 1994-95 will assist schools in securing any additional in-service training needed to equip teachers to deal with these and other aspects of the new arrangements. My right hon. Friend's accreditation criteria for initial teacher training require that the new arrangements should be adequately covered in all relevant courses.

Surplus School Places

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest available statistics for surplus school places for primary schools and for secondary schools in Essex.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest figures we have for surplus places in Essex are for 1992. In that year the local education authority estimated that there were 18,121 surplus primary and 12,600 surplus secondary places in schools maintained by the county council, representing 13 per cent. of capacity in each sector.

Capital Bids

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the purpose of his Department issuing a list of named schools following the announcement of the decisions on capital bids for local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: The schools named in the announcement are those voluntary aided and special agreement schools where central Government grant is being set aside for projects. The annual announcement of capital allocations also covers the annual capital guidelines given to local education authorities in respect of their county and voluntary controlled schools.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to meet representatives of the national steering committee of the nuclear-free local authorities to discuss their report on the nuclear industry in schools, a copy of which was recently sent to him.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. How nuclear issues are handled in schools is a matter for the individual schools themselves and their local education authorities, within the law.

Student Grants

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the efficiency of payments of grants to students by local education authorities; and if the citizens charter specifies the standard of service students are entitled to in this respect.

Mr. Boswell: Local education authorities are responsible for ensuring the prompt payment of grants to students. My right hon. Friend wrote on 8 September 1993 to the chairmen of all authorities in England and Wales to remind them that students have a right to expect the prompt payment of their grant at the start of term, provided that they have met the authority's application deadline and given such information as the authority requires. The charters for further and higher education published by my right hon. Friend on 21 September 1993 tell students about the level of service they have a right to expect from their authority. The Department is prepared to take up some complaints of significant delay with the authority concerned.

List D Schools

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement in respect of his Department's current proposals for list D schools.

Mr. Forth: There are no list D schools in England.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Boswell: The Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 Competing for Quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Postgraduate Students

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many postgraduate students have successfully completed their doctorates within British universities for each year over the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The number of students successfully completing doctorates in the former UFC-funded universities in the United Kingdom in the last five years for which information is currently available was as follows:

	Number
1987-88	7,552
1988-89	7,745
1989-90	8,380
1990-91	8,447
1991-92	8,878

University Academic Posts

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what data he holds on the number of academic posts existing within British universities which are (a) not wholly funded and (b) wholly funded by the institutions.

Mr. Boswell: In the academic year 1991-92, there were 31,226 full-time and 2,532 part-time academic staff wholly funded, and 19,895 full-time and 1,778 part-time academic staff not wholly funded by their institution in the former UFC-funded universities in Great Britain.

Parents Charter

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the number of his Department's officials involved in the preparation of the parents charter; how many hours this involved; what was the total cost to the taxpayer of (a) the involvement of civil servants, (b) typesetting and printing and (c) circulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on Friday 14 January 1994 at column 280. The revised parents charter will cover many aspects of the organisation and curriculum of schools in England. The involvement of civil servants in the Department in the preparation of the text reflects their ongoing responsibilities for promoting improved educational standards, and cannot be separately quantified.

Curriculum Advisory Group

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the members of each Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority curriculum advisory group.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for the authority. SCAA announced the members of its advisory groups on 12 January and I have arranged for a copy of its press notice to be placed in the Library.

Asthma

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice he has given to schools to ensure that medication for conditions like asthma are readily available for children to take when necessary; if he will consider publishing guidelines to ensure that medication for conditions like asthma are readily available for immediate use when required; and what representations he has received on this subject.

Mr. Forth: General guidance on health care in schools for children with medical conditions is given in DES circular 11/90, "Staffing for Pupils with Special Educational Needs", and the October 1993 draft code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. My right hon. Friend has recently received a letter on this subject from the National Asthma Campaign.

Teachers should, in consultation with parents and with appropriate medical advice, do all that is reasonable to enable children with medical conditions to obtain maximum benefit from education and to participate as fully as possible in school life. Where possible, and particularly in cases of asthma or diabetes, it is considered good health care practice to encourage children to manage their own condition as early as is consistent with their development.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

School Premises Regulations 1981

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to publish the results of his Department's review of the School Premises Regulations 1981.

Mr. Forth: An announcement will be made in due course.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Boswell: This information could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Rail Freight

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many tonnes of freight were carried by BR's Railfreight distribution company in each of the last five years; and how much it is estimated will be carried in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96;

(2) how many tonnes of (a) coal, (b) petroleum, (c) metals and (d) construction materials were carried by BR's Trainload freight company in each of the last five years; and how much it is estimated will be carried in (i) 1993-94, (ii) 1994-95 and (iii) 1995-96.

Mr. Freeman: Historic data can be found in table 5.14 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1993", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Traffic forecasts are a matter for BR.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will seek to use freight facilities grant, or other grants, to ensure that fuel oil is once again carried from Stanlow to Aberystwyth by rail.

Mr. Freeman: If the company concerned felt that an application for freight facilities grant or the new track access grant, which will be available from 5 April, could be of assistance in returning this business to rail, I would be happy to consider it.

Marchioness Disaster

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate whether the crew of the Bowbelle had been made aware of the availability of walkie talkies on the night of the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. Norris: The matter was investigated during the marine accident investigation branch inquiry. The master was aware of the presence of hand-held VHF sets on board Bowbelle; sections 8.9 and 17.1 of the chief inspector's report refer. At least one of the seamen on the fo'c'sle was aware that sets were carried.

Thames Bridges

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the co-ordination of works involving Thames bridges as a result of consultation between his officials and the Association of London Borough Engineers and Surveyors.

Mr. Norris: Ways in which the co-ordination of works, including those on Thames bridges, could be improved feature regularly in discussions between officials of the Department and the Association of London Borough Engineers and Surveyors. A "Riparian" group of borough highway authorities, which have responsibility for most river crossings within London, has been set up under the chairmanship of the City of London. One of the main aims of this group, which has now met twice, is to reduce the inconvenience to traffic and pedestrians caused by roadworks on those structures.

Q Plates

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will give, by region, figures for the number of vehicles which have been issued Q plates for each of the last five years; and how many of these vehicles were later found to be stolen.

Mr. Robert Key: The information requested on the volumes of Q plates issued is as follows by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency area command:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	Total
Scotland and North	1,957	1,834	1,969	2,022	1,930	9,712

Total	12,632	12,101	11,455	10,739	10,517	57,435

Information on the number later found to be stolen is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Trunk Roads, London

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what major road improvement schemes on trunk roads in London have been (a) completed, (b) started or (c) planned to start in the current financial year.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:—

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what future role that grade of senior executive officer will play in the structure of the vehicle inspectorate; and what will be the significance of the grade's duties.

Mr. Key: Senior enforcement officers (traffic) are and will continue to be key members of the area management teams of the road traffic enforcement division of the vehicle inspectorate. In addition, they provide expert advice on traffic enforcement matters for traffic commissioners, lorry and bus operators and other enforcement agencies.

Tanker Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress made in his review of the safety of tanker transport established after the Braer oil tanker accident.

Mr. Norris: I expect the report of Lord Donaldson's inquiry in the early part of this year.

In addition, the Department made specific proposals on tanker routing to the International Maritime Organisation. These entered into force on 28 November.

Recommended routes will be introduced for the Fair Isle channel subject to the successful completion in 1994 of further hydrographic surveys.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the punctuality performance of each of the Network SouthEast divisions as compared to target performance in the four-week periods ending 3 December and 31 December 1993.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Division	Punctuality standard Per cent.	Performance four weeks ending 3 December 1993 Per cent.	31 December 1993 Per cent.
Great Northern	90·0	86·5	93·8
Northampton Line	90·0	90·6	87·5

London Tilbury and Southend	85·0	88·3	93·2
Sussex Coast	83·0	84·0	78·6
Kent Coast	82·0	70·7	77·1

On average over 1993, 12 out of the 15 groups met or exceeded their punctuality standards.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's proposals for sound reduction measures on existing rail routes that will be part of the network to the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: For some locations on the existing rail routes where the concentration of international traffic will be heaviest, between the channel tunnel and west London, BR has agreed with local authorities jointly funded non-statutory schemes for the provision of noise barriers. Beyond London, international traffic will be spread over a number of routes without the same degree of concentration. The new international rolling stock which is to be introduced on all the routes concerned has been designed so as to minimise noise levels.

A43

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further progress has been made since July 1993 on improvements to the A43 between Stanton and Corby.

Mr. Key: Tenders have now been returned for the installation of traffic signals at both A6116 junctions with the A43, and for road lighting from south of the southern A43 junction at Stanton northwards to the existing lighting on the Weldon bypass. Work is programmed to start in February.

Indoor Enforcement Office

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of the indoor enforcement office as a main prosecution unit or for diversification of its functions.

Mr. Key: The vehicle inspectorate is conducting a review of the future role of the indoor enforcement offices —now called group support offices. This is expected to report by the end of Feburary and decisions about their future will be taken in the light of the recommendations of the review team. Interested parties, including the staff and trade unions are being consulted.

A1(M)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has published in advance of the outcome of the planning inquiry into Radwell motorway services station concerning the sites of such stations on the A1(M) motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We announced on 1 December that the proposal at Radwell was one of 16 potential motorway service area sites in England on which a planning application was under consideration.

Cycle Network, London

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of the 1,000-mile cycle network in London have now been completed; and what action his Department has taken to speed up its completion.

Mr. Norris: Responsibility for the provision of the 1,000 mile network in London rests primarily with the 33 London boroughs. Cycle schemes on local authority routes are eligible for Government funding support. Approximately a third of the network is in existence or in preparation. We have agreed to provide, where practicable, all the routes that have been proposed for trunk roads as well as cycle crossing points of the trunk road network. We continue to encourage local authorities to provide cycle facilities.

London buses (Privatisation)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been presented to him by London Buses Ltd. on the expected impact on mileage following privatisation.

Mr. Norris: None.

British Rail

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the approximate passenger mileage on British Railway's InterCity services travelled by passengers paying (a) first-class fares, (b) normal standard fares, (c) saver and supersaver fares and (d) period on fare past tickets, together with the approximate revenue per year for each category of ticket.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport if he will publish a table showing his Department's latest estimate of passengers travelling

(a) into, (b) out of and (c) within (i) South Yorkshire, (ii) Humberside, (iii) North Yorkshire and (iv) West Yorkshire, each day on British Rail; and what are the comparable figures for (1) 1979, (2) 1983 and (3) 1989.

Mr. Freeman: My Department does not hold the information requested. This is a commercial matter for InterCity.

Maritime Collisions (Inquiries)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the discretion afforded to an inspector appointed by the chief inspector of marine accidents under the regulations concerning the conduct of inquiries into maritime collisions (SI, 1989, No. 1172) is compatible with the open policy objectives of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Tuesday 11 January, Official Report, column 135.

A1-M1

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the A1-M1 link road serving the Dearne valley area to be completed; and what proportion of this highway is currently able to carry traffic.

Mr. Key: Barnsley metropolitan borough council hopes to complete the Dearne towns link road in 1996. About one quarter of this road is already open to traffic.

London Lorry Ban

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to abolish or reduce the existing restrictions on heavy goods vehicles over 16·5 tonnes entering the Greater London restriction zone.

Mr. Norris: I am considering proposals aimed at reducing the bureaucracy associated with the administration of the Londonwide night and weekend lorry ban while maintaining the environmental protection it offers. These will be published shortly.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Norris: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

EC Habitats Directive

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Attorney-General in regard to the implications for areas covered by EC habitats and species directives by his roads development programme.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are considering the arrangements for implementing the EC habitats directive in United Kingdom law. Draft regulations will be laid before Parliament in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Business Plan and Yearbook (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of producing the North Yorkshire district benefit agency's 1993-94 business plan and yearbook; how many copies were produced; and to whom they have been given.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, its chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 14 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking details about the cost and production of the North Yorkshire Benefits Agency's 1993-94 Business Plan and Yearbook.

The Benefits Agency requires its District Offices to produce Business plans for external customers. In total 460 copies of the North Yorkshire District Benefits Agency 1993-94 Business Plan and Yearbook were produced and distributed to client representatives in the North Yorkshire Area. Of these 330 copies were distributed to local councillors and Members of Parliament and 65 copies to Statutory and Voluntary organisations, for whom the year book is intended as a reference document. Other copies were distributed internally.

The majority of the preparation work was done locally, all the photographs being provided by the District Office staff and the document was produced on recycled paper. With the exception of 70 copies issued by second class post, all other copies were distributed at nil cost.

Some of the design and artwork was completed by Benefits Agency Publishing House at a staffing cost of £999·42 met from their own budget allocation. HMSO printing costs were covered out of the Benefits Agency's printing budget.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Notes to tables:

1. All figures rounded to nearest thousand. Percentages correct to one decimal place. Figures may not sum due to rounding.
2. ' Indicates that figures are not available.
3. The tables refer to Great Britain only. Figures for Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.
4. Information on the number of households claiming income support is not available. The tables show the number of claimants, partners and dependants in receipt of income support.
5. Information on the number of income support claims is not collected by standard regions. The tables show Department of Social Security administrative regions as used by the Department prior to 1988. Population figures for these regions are not available.
6. The latest available figures for numbers receiving income support are taken from the February 1993 quarterly statistical inquiry.
7. The latest population figures available are for mid-1992. Therefore these have been used to calculate both the May 1992 and February 1993 proportions.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to ensure that claimants with disabling medical conditions are given due consideration in any assessment of eligibility for incapacity benefits; and if he will make it his policy that claimants' existing medical histories will be taken fully into account in these assessments.

Mr. Scott: The proposed new medical incapacity test will accurately assess the limiting effect of all medical conditions on a claimant's capacity for work. In applying the test, all relevant factors, including the claimant's medical history, will be taken into account.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if people receiving the new incapacity benefit will be eligible for the income support disability premium from the 28th week of incapacity.

Mr. Scott: The new long-term rate of incapacity benefit, payable after 52 weeks, will act as a passport to the disability premium. For those who have no other means of entitlement to the disability premium, the period of incapacity needed to qualify will be 52 weeks.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the child dependant additions payable with incapacity benefit will be payable from the first day of incapacity.

Mr. Scott: Incapacity benefit will follow the usual rule that child dependency increases are not payable with short-term contributory benefits, unless the beneficiary has reached pensionable age. They will not normally commence until long-term incapacity benefit comes into payment after 52 weeks.

Special Compensation Payments

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for special compensation payments have been made in each of the most recent four quarters for which figures are available; how many were successful; and what was the average amount of each payment in each quarter.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 14 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for details of the special compensation payments made in the most recent four quarters for which figures are available.

Firstly, I should explain that the Special Compensation Scheme applied to both Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) customers.

Scans of both the DLA and AA computer systems were obtained and these lists of customers were then individualy scrutinised for possible entitlement to compensation under the special scheme.

There were no applications from customers, indeed the first that the vast majority of customers knew about the scheme was when they actually received their compensation payment.

The scheme has now been completed in its entirety but as there were no monthly or quarterly collations of statistics I have provided the total figures for both benefits below.

	Cases examined	Cases entitled	Cases not entitled	Cases paid	Amount paid £
DLA	33,539	20,457	13,082	20,457	406,745
AA	44,299	[1]9,564	34,735	[1]9,527	217,105

The average payment made to both DLA and AA compensation recipients was £20.

[1] The difference between AA cases entitled and AA cases paid is 37 and occurred as a result of the death of customers for whom no next of kin could be found.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of invalidity benefit receive an additional pension; and what is the average amount payable.

Mr. Scott: On 4 April 1992, the latest date for which information is available, additional pension was paid to 1,230,000 invalidity benefit recipients[1]. The average weekly amount of additional pension in payment was £13·40[2].

Notes

[1] Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain, rounded to the nearest thousand.

[2] Rounded to the nearest penny.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against a decision that an invalidity benefit claimant was fit for work were received by his Department during (a) April to December 1992 and (b) April to December 1993; and what percentage of these were found in the claimant's favour.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table.

Appeals registered with Social Security Appeal Tribunals: Invalidity Benefit[1]

Quarter ending	Appeals lodged	Heard and decided[2]	Decided in claimant's favour[2]
30 June 1992	2,593	1,311	681
30 September 1992	2,836	1,236	670
21 December 1992	2,834	1,367	757
31 March 1993	3,245	1,436	782

Notes:

[1] Figures show all invalidity benefit appeals, including those against decisions that the claimant is capable of work.

[2] Includes appeals lodged in an earlier quarter.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of (a) male and (b) female claimants of invalidity benefit are over the age of 45 years where an invalidity allowance is in payment.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information is in the table.

	Invalidity Benefit recipients aged 45 and over receiving invalidity allowance[1]	Percentage of Invalidity Benefit recipients by gender
Male	232,000	22
Female	113,000	30

Notes:

[1] Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain at 4 April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

[2] Figures do not include people whose entitlement to invalidity allowance is wholly offset by payment of additional pension.

Child Support

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the changes in targets on savings in benefits paid to parents with care following his recent announcement on changes to the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: The changes will have an effect on benefit savings this year, but it is too early to be precise about the impact. We do not intend to alter the target at this stage in the year.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Scott: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Age-related Rebates

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he issued the consultative document on age-related rebates; what time scale he laid down for responses; and which bodies and organisations were consulted on the document.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on 10 December 1993 at column 408. Several hundred copies of the consultation document have been issued to a wide variety of interested organisations and individuals.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Contributions Agency has for improved standards of service to employers.

Mr. Hague: The Contributions Agency today published a revised employers charter setting out the new improved standards of service employers can now expect. It incorporates the code for enforcement that all enforcement agencies were committed to publish as part of the Department of Trade and Industry's "Working with Business" initiative. Copies are available in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who would own equipment jointly purchased by employers and the Government for disabled employees under the access to work proposals; and what advice will be issued to companies by his Department on (a) the declaration of equipment purchasing within the audited accounts of companies and (b) arrangements for insuring equipment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In reaching final decisions about these and other details of the access to work scheme, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Henley are considering carefully all the representations made by the disability and employer groups whom they have recently met. Our aims, in relation to the issues raised by the hon. Member, will be to ensure that we have arrangements that do not inhibit the movement of people with disabilities into and between jobs and to ensure that procedures are simple and non-bureaucratic.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make the levy upon employers within his access-to-work proposals dependent on the allocated budget being fully spent after one year of the new scheme.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps will be taken by his Department to encourage employers to make the contributions expected of them under the proposed access-to-work scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In reaching final decisions about the details of the access to work scheme, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Henley are considering carefully a range of representations made by disability and employer groups including representations about the proposed employer contribution. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce decisions soon.

Social Policies (EC Budget)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the provision of public money via the European Community budget to promote social policies through the Trades Union Congress which are incompatible with the policies of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are opposed to such subsidies and are considering what steps can be taken to restrict them.

European Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what contribution his Department made to the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in terms of financial support, practical support for particular events, and the provision of information;

(2) in which programmes and events for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations he has been directly involved.

Miss Widdecombe: To mark the end of the European Year of Older People and Solidarity Between Generations my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my hon. Friend the Minister of State joined colleagues at a meeting of the EC Social Affairs Council in November in issuing a declaration of principles confirming the commitment of member states to integrating older people into all areas of the life of the Community.

Throughout the year, Ministers and officials from the Employment Department supported appropriate events, including that on "Investing in Older People at Work" staged by the Health Education Authority in October. In December, I spoke at an international symposium in Dublin on the implications of our ageing population for the work force. I told delegates of the work of my Advisory Group on Older Workers to persuade employers of the benefits of treating everyone on merit, regardless of age. I described our "Getting On" campaign which offers employers a five-point plan to avoid ageism. I also took the opportunity to challenge the European Commission to end its practice of excluding anyone over the age of 35 from applying to work with it or its institutions.

Office Heating Bills

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, columns 737-38, in what form information in respect of heating bills for his Department's offices is available.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department group occupies some 1,500 buildings nationally. Where the Department is billed direct, which is in the majority of cases, we hold records of electricity, gas and fuel consumption from April 1990 for individual offices. In the remaining offices these costs are part of an overall service charge and details are not available.

There is no mechanism for identifying separately the cost of heating the Department's offices.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in abattoirs in each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information on employees in employment in abattoirs is from the periodic censuses of employment and is given in the table:

Number of Employees in employment in Abattoirs[1] in Great Britain, September of each year

Year	Number
1981	10,100
1984	9,900
1987	11,200
1989	10,400
1991	10,400

[1] Activity Heading 4121 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980.

Training

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a regional breakdown of the number of participants on work-related Government training programmes in each year since 1979; and if he will give the figure as a percentage of the total regional civilian work force in each such year.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is available from June 1983, and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Astra

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has made to representations to extend preferential reinstatement arrangements for staff employed by Astra.

Miss Widdecombe: In the light of the representations I have received, I have extended for a further year the previous arrangements to give staff employed in the Skills Training Agency immediately before its sale to the private sector preferential consideration for reinstatement in the Employment Department group.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent the Health and Safety Commission has been able under the auspices of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to rationalise or modernise substantial areas of health and safety law.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: Since 1975, the Health and Safety Commission —HSC—using the powers given to it under the 1974 Act has proposed changes endorsed by Ministers which have led to the replacement of around 350 sets of old-style prescriptive sets of regulations with some 100 sets of modern goal-setting ones. This is a substantial programme of achievement, although the Government share the Commission's view that there is scope for simplifying legislation and reducing red tape.

However, the powers in the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 are technically deficient and do not allow for regulations to make revocations or repeals of pre-1974 provisions unless they are directly replaced by new requirements in the same set of regulations.

The HSC has requested an amendment to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to permit repeals and revocations without direct replacement where it is satisfied that the overall system of regulations and approved codes of practice in modern legislation properly safeguards standards of health and safety.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive draft publication "The Cost to the British Economy of Work Accidents and Work-Related Ill Health" will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: "The Cost to the British Economy of Work Accidents and Work Related Ill Health", a technical companion to the "Cost of Accidents" report, published in January 1993, is to be published on 9 February.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE were confirmed in the United Kingdom for each month of 1992 and 1993 in cattle that were (a) under two years of age, (b) aged two to three years, (c) aged three to four years, (d) aged four to five years, (e) aged five to six years, (f) aged six to seven years and (g) aged seven or more years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE were confirmed in the United Kingdom for each year from 1985 in cattle that were (a) under two years of age, (b) aged two to three years, (c) aged three to four years, (d) aged four to five years, (e) aged five to six years, (f) aged six to seven years and (g) aged seven or more years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE were (a) confirmed, (b) reported and (c) slaughtered in the United Kingdom for each month of 1992 and 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was spent by the Government in respect of BSE on (a) research, (b) slaughter, (c) compensation and (d) disposal of carcases for each year since 1985 to the latest available date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The amounts spent by this Ministey in respect of BSE in Great Britain for the areas requested are as follows:

£ million	Miscellaneous[1] £ million	Compensation[2] £ million	Research[3] (Financial year) £ million
1987			0·2
1988	0·2	0·5	0·3
1989	1·6	2·8	1·0

1991	7·2	16·3	4·9
1992	10·2	29·2	5·7
1993	9·5	38·1	6·1

[1] This includes all expenditure involved in the slaughter, transportation, storage and disposal of carcasses of cattle suspected of being affected by BSE.
[2] The compulsory slaughter of suspects with compensation was introduced in August 1988.
[3] Separate figures on R and D expenditure on BSE before April 1987 are not readily available. The disease was first identified in 1986.

Milk Industry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been done by the Government to promote a level playing field in the development of competition following the decision to abolish the Milk Marketing Board; and what methods have been employed by the Milk Marketing Board in establishing Milk Marque as its successor.

Mr. Jack: The Government's actions in respect of the proposed changes to the marketing of milk are guided by the provisions of the Agriculture Act 1993. The Milk

Marketing Board has proposed that Milk Marque should be established as its successor body. We have received reports of concern from outside bodies regarding the methods employed by Milk Marketing Board, Genus and National Milk Record staff to persuade producers to sign contracts with Milk Marque.

Food Expenditure

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage of average income spent on food in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany and (d) the United States of America for each five-year period since 1965 and for the third quarter of 1993.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available for all four countries for the whole of the period referred to nor in the precise form requested. Details of household expenditure on food as a proportion, first, of total household expenditure on goods and services and secondly, of the total income of households and private unincorporated enterprises for five-year periods from 1966 to 1990 and for the latest available periods are shown in the table.

Cereal Production

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the change in (a) tonnage and (b) percentage terms in cereal production between 1992 and 1993 in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the United States of America and (iii) the European Union as a whole.

Mr. Jack: Final estimates for the 1993 harvest in the United Kingdom will be known only when the results of the April cereal production survey become available in May 1994. A similar situation exists in other countries.

The current estimates are shown in the table.

Estimated cereal production

(thousand tonnes)

	1992	1993	Change	Percentage change
United Kingdom	22,063	19,607	-2,456	-11·1
United States of America[1]	344,700	262,100	-82,600	-24·0
European Union	168,059	164,061	-3,998	-2·4

[1] The figures are taken from the latest IWC grain market report—30 November 1993—and do not include rice production. The 1992 figure is an estimate and that for 1993 is a forecast.

Crop Spraying

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to tighten controls on tractor spraying to bring them into line with aerial spraying; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In May 1993 the pesticides safety directorate consulted interested parties on proposed amendments to the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 including a new provision requiring any person who uses a pesticide to confine the pesticide to the land, crop, structure, material or other area to be treated. This would effectively extend the existing provision on aerial spraying to all methods of use. The proposed amendments are being considered in the light of comments received with a view to laying a statutory instrument before the House in the near future.

Radioactive Waters

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the aquatic environment monitoring report on "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles 1991" will be published.

Mr. Jack: The report "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles 1991" was published in February 1993. The subsequent edition, with the results of monitoring undertaken in 1992, was published on 6 January 1994. Copies of both reports are in the Library.

Cake Wood

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans her Department has to sell off the part of Cake wood which is owned by the Forestry Commission under its current disposals programme.

Mr. Jack: No decision has been taken to sell any part of Cake wood under the Forestry Commission's disposals programme.

EC Surplus Beef

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list for each of the metropolitan boroughs of South Yorkshire the designated organisation allowed to distribute surplus beef released by the European Community; and what has been the response to date.

Mr. Jack: A list of all organisations in the United Kingdom that have been designated to distribute canned beef under the EC surplus food scheme in 1993-94 is available in the Library. The 28 organisations designated in south Yorkshire have so far received allocations for over 100,000 eligible people. It is for the organisations to arrange distributions which best reflect their circumstances.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon her departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Jack: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Agricultural Imports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the value of imports (a) into the United Kingdom and (b) into the EU of agricultural products analysed by suitable category of product from (i) Russia, (ii) Hungary and (iii) Czechoslovakia in each of the three most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The value of imports into the United Kingdom is shown in table 1 in thousands of pounds while those for imports into the member states of the European Community are shown in table 2 in thousands of ecus.

Data for the whole of 1993 are not yet available. Prior to 1993 no separate data were collected for Russia.

Food Labelling

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will bring forward legislation requiring improved food labelling by food manufacturers.

Mr. Jack: The food labelling regulations will be amended shortly to provide a standard format for the provision of nutrition information. We also plan to consolidate these regulations this year, because of the many amendments which have been made to them since 1984. I do not believe that further regulation is necessary in advance of decisions on several labelling issues in the European Community.

Farm and Conservation Grants

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation she has made of the horticultural elements of her Department's farm and conservation grants scheme.

Mr. Jack: An evaluation of the horticultural elements of the farm and conservation grant scheme was completed in May 1993 by Dr. Ilbery of Coventry university and Dr. Bowler of the university of Leicester. A copy of the evaluation has been placed in the Library of the House.

Advertising

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the cost of advertising by her Department has been for each year since 1979 and for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1993]: Expenditure on advertising by MAFF in the financial year 1982-83 and each subsequent year was as follows:

1982-83	3,000
1983-84	27,000
1984-85	26,000
1985-86	29,000
1986-87	54,000
1987-88	12,000
1988-89	380,000
1989-90	116,000
1990-91	53,000
1991-92	262,000
1992-93
April	13,000
May	Nil
June	Nil
July	Nil
August	Nil
September	475,000
October	Nil
November	Nil
December	Nil
January	6,000
February	Nil
March	Nil

Figures prior to 1982-83 are not available in this form since they do not distinguish between expenditure on advertising and other paid publicity.

Organic Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out, for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, the balance of trade for organic food produce, both in terms of value in real terms and as a percentage of all foods.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 January]: Trade statistics do not separately identify organic food.

Estimates suggest, however, that about two thirds of organic food consumed in the United Kingdom is imported. Some of this, but it is not known how much, is attributable to such factors as climate. The total organic market is very small, representing less than 1 per cent. of all food sales.

DEFENCE

Exercise Hadrian's Wall

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties by (a) helicopters and (b) fixed-wing aircraft took place (i) in the Hunterston area and (ii) at other locations during Exercise Hadrian's Wall; and how many of these took place at night.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 117 sorties were flown during Exercise Hadrian's Wall, 104 by helicopter and 13 by fixed-wing aircraft. Of these, four helicopters sorties were flown in the Hunterston area; 41 sorties were flown at night.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received about (a) low flying and (b) other activity connected with Exercise Hadrian's Wall.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's air staff secretariat received 12 complaints or inquiries about low flying in areas affected by Exercise Hadrian's Wall, not all of which were necessarily connected with the exercise. Two further complaints were received about other activity connected with the exercise.

Departmental Records

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with the Lord Chancellor's Department in regard to the withholding of departmental records on Anglo-American mutual defence co-operation under section 3(4) of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967, in preparation for the most recent release of official papers from the Public Records Office.

Mr. Hanley: In accordance with the Public Records Act 1958, MOD records withheld under section 3(4) are reviewed, on a rolling programme, every 10 years. Records may be withheld individually or under blanket arrangements, covering certain classes or records such as those relating to security, intelligence and nuclear matters.

Records may continue to be withheld under the blanket arrangements without reference to the Lord Chancellor. Individual records withheld require separate reference to the Lord Chancellor for his approval.

Due to the very large number of records reviewed under these procedures it is not possible to identify, without disproportionate cost, records which may have been withheld under a very broad category such as Anglo-American defence co-operation.

Air Transport (Outsize Loads)

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current policy on the air transportation of outsize loads, including the Challenger main battle tank, Warrior mechanised infantry combat vehicle and multiple launch rocket system.

Mr. Hanley: Outsize loads are normally transported by sea or land. If these needed to be moved by air, we have a bilateral agreement with the United States for the use of their aircraft and plans for the use of chartered civil wide-bodied aircraft.

West Freugh Airfield

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what night flying facilities are available at West Freugh airfield.

Mr. Hanley: West Freugh airfield is capable of providing all the facilities necessary for night flying; it is equipped with runway, taxi-way and approach lighting and air traffic, crash, fire and refuelling facilities can be made available in support of night flying detachments.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, aircraft types and circumstances of all incidents occurring in each year since 1988 in which a public complaint about low flying led to an investigation which concluded that the aircraft concerned was in breach of low flying regulations.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested could not be provided without disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what comparative statistical information on the safety record of different air forces while flying in Flag exercises underlay the statement in his Department's memorandum to the Committee of Public Accounts inquiry into low flying training—HC 241-i, Session 1989-90, appendix 1, paragraph 7—on the safety record of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Hanley: The statement is borne out by United States Air Force statistical records of all aspects of FLAG Exercise flying. The RAF has been a major participant in these exercises since 1977 during which time it has lost four aircraft. This is some 7·8 per cent. of the total number of FLAG accidents suffered by all participating nations up to October 1990.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date night low level training by Royal Air Force Harrier GR7s re-commenced after the summer of 1993; and what are the projected dates for commencement of night low level training by numbers 3 and 4 squadrons.

Mr. Hanley: Royal Air Force Harrier GR7s resumed night low flying on 28 September 1993. One of the two squadrons mentioned is planned to commence night flying in September 1994 and the other in September 1995; the order has yet to be decided.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the regulations for practice interception of aircraft in the United Kingdom low flying system (a) by similar aircraft types and (b) by dissimilar aircraft types since the accident to a Royal Air Force Jaguar on 12 September 1990.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures are used to ensure separation of military aircraft, operating without lights at night in the low flying system, from civil aircraft operating in the flight information region.

Mr. Hanley: There are two such procedures: notices to airmen and separation by height.

Laser-guided Bomb

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tenders have been received for the low-level laser-guided bomb programme; and if he will make a statement on the projected dates for project milestones for this programme.

Mr. Aitken: Three companies responded following the invitation to tender issued last year. Of these, two were invited to submit best and final offers which are currently under consideration. Project milestones will be established once the weapons contractor has been selected and final negotiations are complete.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce shared civil-military usage of (a) existing military infrastructure facilities funded by the NATO infrastructure programme and (b) future NATO infrastructure programme facilities.

Mr. Hanley: Certain military infrastructure facilities funded by the NATO infrastructure programme are already shared with civil users. The possibility of shared usage will be taken into account for all future NATO infrastructure facilities.

Pilot Training

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual continuation training requirement, in hours, for simulator training for (a) Tornado GR1/1A pilots and (b) Harrier GR5/GR7 pilots.

Mr. Hanley: The annual continuation training requirement for simulator training for GR1/1A and Harrier GR5/GR7 pilots is 20 hours.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual continuation training hours requirements for fully combat-ready front-line pilots in (a) Tornado GR1/1A pilots and (b) Harrier GR5/GR7.

Mr. Hanley: To retain combat-ready status on Tornado GR1/1A and Harrier GR5/GR7, pilots must fly a minimum of 180 hours a year.

Birds (Radar)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to deploy radars in the United Kingdom for the purpose of monitoring concentrations and movements of birds.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently no plans to deploy radars in the United Kingdom for this purpose. However, a trial has established the feasibility of detecting birds on radar and a contract has been let in order to evaluate the development of a bird hazard warning system for the RAF.

Operation Distant Frontier

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military operations areas, instrument flight rules military training routes, visual flight rules military training routes, air-to-ground weapons ranges and electronic warfare ranges to which Royal Air Force aircraft have been granted access by the United States authorities during Distant Frontier deployments to Alaska.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the purchase of new Jetstream aircraft following his meeting with Jetstream managing director, Allan Macdonald; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has studied carefully the company's proposal to replace RN and RAF Jetstreams with new Jetstream Super 31s. There is, however, no current operational requirement, nor are there other grounds for replacing our existing Jetstreams, which can continue in service into the next century.

HMS Illustrious

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report on the inquiry into the recent accident aboard HMS Illustrious; and if he will make a statement on the accident.

Mr. Hanley: HMS Illustrious is at present undergoing a refit in Devonport dockyard. On the morning of 7 January 1994 an accident occurred when a member of the ship's company fell into the machinery of the vessel's vertiflo stores lift. He suffered severe facial injuries and was transferred to a local hospital.

An investigation was immediately initiated by the ship to establish the circumstances which led to the accident. The report is an internal document produced for internal use and there are no plans to publish it. However, a copy would be made available to the individual concerned on request.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report of the inquiry into the accident which occurred on HMS Tireless on 7 January; and if he will make a statement on the accident.

Mr. Hanley: On the afternoon of 7 January HMS Tireless was preparing for machinery trials in Devonport Dockyard. During this procedure a member of the ship's company was caught in a large spill of very hot water from the ship's propulsion system causing him to suffer burns. He was taken to a local hospital where his condition is now stable.

An investigation was immediately convened to investigate this accident. The report of that investigation is an internal document produced for internal use and there are no plans to publish the report. However, a copy would be made available to the individual concerned on request.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost of the school place provided for the children of service personnel in independent and private schools in each year since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The MOD provides support to service parents for the education of their children by means of boarding school allowance; this is paid to assist eligible service parents in providing a stable education for their children in the face of the domestic turbulence frequently encountered in service life. The average amounts of boarding school allowance paid per service child for the years in question were:

Year	£
1990-91	5,897
1991-92	7,117
1992-93	7,719

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of sending children of service personnel to independent or private schools in each year since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: On current plans, the advance elements of the 1st Battalion Royal Welch Fusiliers will occupy RAF Brawdy in August 1994 with the remainder of the battalion following in September 1994. The battalion is planned to remain there until 1996.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if RAF Brawdy is still being considered for longer-term Army barracks requirements.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, RAF Brawdy is being looked at as one of a number of options for the Army's longer-term barracks requirements.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Royal Welch Fusiliers will transfer from RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Hanley: On current plans, the 1st Battalion Royal Welch Fusiliers will transfer from RAF Brawdy in the first half of 1996.

Army Apprentice College, Chepstow

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his best estimate of the cost of refurbishing the Army apprentice college, Chepstow, accommodation in the next two years.

Mr. Hanley: The latest estimate for refurbishing the Army apprentice college Chepstow to allow reroling as an infantry battalion barracks is approximately £16,000,000.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Aitken: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

RAF Supply Depots

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for an examination by auditors of the findings of the equipment depot supplies report into RAF supply depots.

Mr. Hanley: The findings of the equipment supply depot report have been scrutinised by the senior finance officer of RAF Support Command and are fully open in the usual way to examination by the MOD's internal auditors and the NAO. In addition, and in response to concerns expressed, I have asked senior MOD officials outside the RAF Support Command structure to go over the analysis again on my behalf.

Ukraine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent agreement reached with the Ukraine to dismantle its nuclear defences.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister referred to this in the House on 12 January. We warmly welcome this agreement and pay tribute to all the signatories. It is important that it be speedily implemented. I have placed in the Library of the House the text of the statement made on 14 January.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the conditions under which countries are eligible to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many independent inspections of the magistrates courts system he estimates will be employed; and what is his estimate of their annual pay.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The magistrates courts service inspectorate employs the following inspectors:

Chief Inspector
4 Senior Inspectors
12 Inspectors

The inspectorate's annual salary budget in 1994-95 for these 17 individuals will be £867,492.

Magistrates Clerks' Committees

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates' clerks committees the Lord Chancellor has met in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will list each venue he has visited and organisation he has met.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has not attended any formal meetings of magistrates courts committees, nor have all the members of any magistrates' courts committee attended a meeting with him. However, during his visits to magistrates courts, meetings with representative bodies from the service, meeting with magistrates and staff from particular areas and attendance as a speaker at gatherings of magistrates, he has met and talked to members of various magistrates courts committees.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates courts have closed since 1979; how many court closures are currently scheduled.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The provision of magistrates court house accommodation is a matter for the courts committee for the area concerned in conjunction with the local paying authority. The Department has no central record of the number of magistrates courthouses that have been closed or are scheduled to be closed. A local authority that is aggrieved by a decision of a magistrates court committee to close a courthouse has the right of appeal to the Lord Chancellor. In 1993 the Lord Chancellor dealt with six appeals.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the annual cost of supporting the courts units of management.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The administrative costs of the magistrates courts service depend on decisions taken by magistrates' courts committees, the local managers of the service, about how the service in their area is organised. It is likely that costs will vary between magistrates courts committee areas, according to their decisions taken in the light of local circumstances.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what principles and objectives he has in mind in the amalgamation of magistrates courts committees.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The objectives of the reforms set out in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" included yielding improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the service, and securing maximum co-operation in the management of the service with other parts of the criminal justice system. The Government believe that a reduction in the number of areas from the present 105 to 50 to 60 would provide a good balance between the local character of the service and operational needs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many individual letters the Lord Chancellor has received from magistrates concerning his court reforms.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has received approximately 300 letters from members of the magistrates courts service and other interested bodies, the majority of which were from serving magistrates. However, it is not possible to give an accurate figure of the number of magistrates that have written to the Lord Chancellor since this information is not recorded.

"A New Framework for Local Justice"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received on the White Paper, "A New Framework for Local Justice"; and if he will list each organisation that responded.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to 964 responses to the consultation documents issued by his Department the Lord Chancellor has received in the region of 950 representations on the White Paper, comprising approximately 650 letters from honourable Members and approximately 300 letters from members of the magistrates' courts service and other interested bodies, the majority of which were from serving magistrates. He has also received personal representations from 10 magistrates. A list of the organisations that responded appears at the back of each of the consultation documents. Copies of these documents are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those persons and organisations that have protested to him concerning (a) judicial independence, (b) chief justices clerks, (c) fixed-term contracts and (d) performance-related pay.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to 964 responses to the consultation documents issued by his Department the Lord Chancellor has received in the region of 950 letters about the White Paper, comprising approximately 650 from hon. Members and approximately 300 from members of the magistrates courts service and other interested bodies. However, it is not possible to break down these figures into the specific topics requested since the information has not been recorded in this form.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment the Lord Chancellor has made of the extent of consultation on the White Paper, "A New Framework for Local Justice"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since the publication of the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice" in February 1992, 11 consultative documents on various aspects of the reforms have been issued. The reforms have also regularly been discussed by the Magistrates' Courts Consultative Council. The Lord Chancellor has taken careful note of respondents' comments in reaching conclusions about how the White Paper will be implemented.

Courts Inspectorate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of establishing and of running annually the courts inspectorate.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of establishing and of running annually the magistrates courts service inspectorate is estimated to be £1·005 million for the set-up costs in 1993-94 and £1·8 million a year in subsequent years when the inspectorate will be fully operational and undertaking a full programme of inspections. This does not include overhead costs, such as general accommodation and other charges, which are not separately identified and which are met from a central budget.

Magistrates

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning fixed-term contracts and performance-related pay for magistrates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The majority of magistrates are unpaid lay volunteers, so there is no possibility that they could have fixed-term contracts or performance-related pay. There is no proposal that stipendiary magistrates should be placed on fixed-term contracts or that their pay should be linked to their performance.

Courts Inspectorate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the guiding principles in the training of independent inspectors.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since the inspectorate is operationally independent of the Lord Chancellor's Department, the training of the inspectors is being undertaken by the chief inspector and her senior management team. It builds on the existing competencies of the inspectors who have been recruited from a wide range of backgrounds.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq and Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what record has been kept of representations made to the Prime Minister by members of the public in regard to Iraq since 1985.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if any request has been made by (a) Lord Justice Scott or (b) members of the public to Her Majesty's Government to permit cameras and tape recorders to be taken into and used in the Scott inquiry.

The Prime Minister: The procedures of the Scott inquiry are a matter for Lord Justice Scott.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received and from whom in the last six months that the terms of reference or the workings of the Scott inquiry into arms for Iraq should be modified or changed.

The Prime Minister: In the last six months I have answered a written question from the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) concerning a change to the procedures of the inquiry, and a letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham) seeking an extension to the inquiry's terms of reference. I have received no other requests for changes.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) himself, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his office; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

The Prime Minister: The information as requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Arms Sales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what records are held at 10 Downing street of a telephone conversation made between his predecessor and Mr. Frank Machon in regard to arms sales in January 1989.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, there have not been any conversations and there are no records.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 18 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a full list of all statements he has made, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the channel tunnel rail link, the dates on which each such statement was made and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

The Prime Minister: I have not made any such statements.

Crossrail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a full list of all statements he has made and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the crossrail project, the dates on which each such statement was made and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

The Prime Minister: I have made no statements nor has my Department issued any press notices which referred to a possible completion date for the crossrail project.

Broadcasting Acts

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has received from the Irish Republic concerning its decision not to renew section 31 of the Irish Broadcasting Act 1960; when he received copies of guidelines issued to the staff of Irish broadcasting organisations following the non-renewal of section 31; what action he proposes concerning section 10 of the Broadcasting Act 1990; what representations he has received concerning households in the United Kingdom receiving television and radio broadcasts originating in the Irish Republic and observing different broadcasting requirements; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Irish Government's announcement of their decision was made immediately available to us, together with relevant background information. So far as the United Kingdom Broadcasting restrictions are concerned, I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 17 January, Official Report, column 369. I have not received any representations concerning the reception of broadcasts originating in the Irish Republic.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what timetable he envisages for the introduction of his proposals for greater democracy in Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The legislation for the 1994-95 election arrangements in Hong Kong will need to be passed into law by the Hong Kong Legislative Council by the time the Council rises for its summer recess in July.

The Council is currently considering the first stage of the legislation. The timing for the introduction of the second stage has yet to be decided.

Pakistan

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the cases of Salamat, Manzoor and Rehmat Masih, three Christians held in Gujiran-wala central gaol, Pakistan under the blasphemy laws; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There has been continuing parliamentary and public interest in these cases, which we have often raised with the Pakistani authorities. Most recently, I expressed our concern when I visited Pakistan last November. All three Christians have now been released on bail. Dates have not yet been set for their cases to be heard.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report".

Major General Mohnke

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the German authorities about the possible prosecution of Major General Mohnke.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Jurisdiction in the case of General Mohnke lies with the German authorities, to whom we have given full co-operation in their investigation.

Social Development Summit

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations Her Majesty's Government have made for the 1995 World summit for social development in Copenhagen; and what progress has been made on the UN proposals for the establishment of a national committee on the summit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom intends to participate fully and constructively in preparations for the World summit for social development to ensure that it is a success. We are holding inter-departmental discussions to formulate the United Kingdom's approach to the summit, and have submitted a national report to the summit secretariat in New York to feed into the preparatory process.

We have no plans at present to establish a national committee on the summit. We will review this question following the first preparatory committee of the summit in February.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the total number of people killed in former Yugoslavia since the break-up of that country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have seen no reliable figures on the number of casualties since the break-up of the former Yugoslavia, but the numbers are very large.

Tibet

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the occupation of Tibet by China and to the reported human rights abuses there.

Mr. Goodlad: The situation in Tibet is a matter of serious concern. We and our European Union partners regularly raise human rights with the Chinese authorities, urging them to conform to internationally recognised standards of behaviour. We also encourage the Chinese authorities to enter, without pre-conditions, into a real dialogue with the Tibetans, including the Dalai Lama, as the best means of achieving greater autonomy for the people of Tibet.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1993 to the hon. Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry), Official Report, columns 968-69, if he will place in the Library copies of (a) the Council's code of conduct governing public access to public documents and (b) the Council's code of conduct on the publication of formal votes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In his reply to the letter of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of 2 December the Turkish ambassador reported that details of the main allegations made by Manchester United supporters have been passed to the Ministry of the Interior in Ankara for an inquiry. The ambassador has promised to let my right hon. Friend have the results of the inquiry as soon as they are known.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Data Protection Registrar's powers are such that I do not consider such arrangements are necessary. Should he so wish, the registrar may inspect the one contract we have with an IT services supplier that involves the use of personal data held by my Department.

This relates to the "Charterline" service run on the citizens charter units behalf by IBM (UK) Ltd. at its Havant offices; this service was registered under the Data Protection Act 1984 in June 1993.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Primates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set a target date to end the use of non-EU sources of primates in research.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No target can be set until we can be confident that the EU will be self-sufficient in breeding non-human primates for research.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made in the European Community in setting a target date after which the use of wild-caught primates in research will be prohibited; and when the group of national competent authorities established under directive 86/609 will make a statement on this subject.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The group of national competent authorities established under directive 86/609 has been giving active consideration to the problems associated with the elimination of the use of wild-caught primates in research, but I cannot at this stage predict what the outcome of their deliberations will be.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to the possibility of the EU becoming self-sufficient in breeding primates for its research purposes within the next five years; what resources are available for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The European Commission is now collating statistics on animal use and the availability of breeding stock but it is unlikely that the EU will be self-sufficient within the next five years.

Ford Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the projects now under (a) development and (b) consideration at Her Majesty's prison Ford, West Sussex, the cost of each project and if funding for each project has been approved and granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Butler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1994:

HM Prison Ford

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the projects under development and consideration at HM Prison Ford.

Work is currently being carried out to lay a new floor in the kitchen at an overall cost of £260,000. The sanitary recesses in A Wing are being refurbished at a cost of £10,000 per recess.

Projects under consideration include a new kitchen and dining facility, the options for which are currently being examined; the replacement of the sewage works at a cost of around £1 million; and the upgrading of the hutted accommodation. Design work has also been completed on a new sportshall, the estimated cost of which is £1·1 million. No funding has as yet been allocated for any of these schemes.

Probation

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will measure efficiency and productivity in respect of future pay rounds in the probation service in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: In reaching a judgment about the productivity and efficiency of the probation service I shall have regard to the service's key performance indicators, as set out in the three year plan for 1994-97, a copy of which is in the Library.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to carry out a review of probation officer basic training in respect of the diploma in social work.

Mr. Maclean: Such a review is timely and I propose to announce its basis and terms of reference shortly.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will conduct the next review of probation national standards; and when the review will be completed.

Mr. Maclean: The review will take place over the first half of 1994 with a view to the publication of revised national standards in September.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the assistant chief officer grade in the probation service in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: I have at this stage no proposals for changes to this grade.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the entry requirements for probation training in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: None at this stage, but I propose to review the qualifying training arrangements and to announce the basis of and terms of reference for the review shortly.

EC Nationals

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if nationals of the European Union and of the European Economic Area have the right to enter the United Kingdom (a) without an offer of employment but with the intention of looking for employment, (b) without the guarantee of having somewhere to live and (c) without having provided proof that they will not have recourse to public funds during their time in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: European Community and other European Economic Area nationals may enter the United Kingdom simply on production of a valid passport or national identity card, but can be refused entry on grounds of public policy, public security or public health.

The rights of nationals of European Community and other European Economic Area member states to reside in the United Kingdom are subject to the conditions and limitations laid down in European Community law, including, in the case of those wishing to reside without working, the requirements to have sufficient resources to avoid becoming a burden on the social security system.

Prisoners' Earnings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department as to the handing over of money earned by inmates being held in penal establishments in England and Wales who are being deported from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The pay of prisoners awaiting deportation is not liable to be used to help defray the expenses of deportation. Money (apart from pay) belonging to a prisoner awaiting deportation is applied to defray the expenses of deportation and maintenance of the prisoner and his dependants until their departure from the United Kingdom.

Land Byelaws

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which local authorities in England have adopted a byelaw prohibiting the occupation of land within 300 yd of any dwelling house so as to cause injury, disturbance or annoyance to those living in the house.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Our records indicate that, prior to 1969 when the Home Office ceased to offer it to local authorities, this model byelaw was adopted by the following local authorities in England and Wales:

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the number of incidents requiring police deployment (a) per officer and (b) per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 for the South Wales, Thames Valley, Kent, Lancashire, Avon and Somerset and Hampshire police authority areas; and what were the comparable totals for all non-metropolitan and Welsh non-metropolitan police authority areas.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the currently available medical treatment for drug abuse within British prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Butler to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about medical treatment for drug abuse currently available in British prisons.

In England and Wales policy and guidance on this is set out in Circular Instruction 12/1991 and the resource manual "Caring for Drug Users"—a copy of which is/has been placed in the House of Commons Library. This covers Provision of Detoxification, General Health Care, Management of Drug Induced Psychiatric State, Harm Minimisation, Longer Term Treatment, General Lifestyles, Work etc. and Pre-Release Work.

The Prison Service is currently developing a strategy for dealing with drug misuse in prisons which includes a review of existing policy and advice in this area.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many known drug addicts have been identified within prison establishments in each year since 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Butler to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of known drug addicts in prisons for the years 1990 to 1993.

The number of prisoners reported by prison medical officers to the Addicts Index at the Home Office as required by the Misuse of Drugs (Notification & Supply to Addicts) Regulations 1993 follows.

Year	Number
1990	1,420
1991	1,747
1992	2,586

Data for 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many discoveries of (a) heroin, (b) cocaine and (c) cannabis were made by the Prison Service in each year since 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about discoveries of heroin, cocaine and cannabis in the years 1989 to 1993.

The following table shows the number of heroin, cocaine and cannabis finds from 1991 to 1993 reported to the Incident Management Support Unit of the Prison Service. Records prior to November 1990 are not held centrally.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women serving prison sentences in England and Wales for drug offences who were not British nationals as at 10 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 18 January 1994:

DRUG OFFENCES

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what was the number of (a) men and (b) women serving prison sentences in England and Wales for drug offences who were not British nationals as at 10 January.

The latest available provisional information is for 30 September 1993. On that date 767 foreign nationals (of whom 623 were male and 144 female) were recorded centrally as being under sentence for drugs offences, excluding any where drugs offences were not the principal offence. These figures include those born outside the UK for whom a nationality was not recorded.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the availability of prescribed methadone maintenance and withdrawal programmes within British prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A. Butler to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the availability of prescribed methadone maintenance and withdrawal programmes within British prisons.

In England and Wales policy and guidance relating to these matters are set out in Circular Instruction 12/1991 and the resource manual "Caring for Drug Users".

A detoxification programme should be offered, unless specifically contra-indicated, where a prisoner presents with signs of addiction which are verified by a prison medical officer. In the case of opiates a methadone detoxification programme is advised and details of suitable detoxification schedules are provided.

Current policy and advice is that methadone maintenance is not normally appropriate in prisons.

As with all medical treatment, decisions about individual treatment must be a matter for the clinical judgement of the doctor responsible.

The Prison Service is currently developing a strategy for dealing with drug misuse in prisons and is reviewing policy relating to methadone detoxification and maintenance as part of this work.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff have been (a) suspended and (b) disciplined for the possession or alleged possession or importation of an unlawful drug into prison establishments annually from 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director-General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of Prison Service staff who have been suspended and/or disciplined for the possession of drugs, or for trafficking drugs into or out of prison, since 1990.

The information available centrally is set out in the table below.

Year	Suspensions	Disciplinary action taken
1990	4	3
1991	5	4
Total	12	9

There are three instances where disciplinary action was not taken. In two cases, the suspension was lifted when the members of staff involved were found not guilty of the criminal charges against them. In the remaining case the member of staff resigned before disciplinary action could be concluded.

Most of these cases concerned incidents away from the prison, and typically involve possession of small quantities of cannabis. In one case a member of staff was found guilty of possession of drugs and trafficking inside the prison.

Homosexual Prosecutions

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place in each of the past three years for which figures are available involving homosexual acts with those (a) under 18 years and (b) between 18 and 21 years.

Mr. Maclean: Available information on prosecutions under sections 12 and 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956, as amended by the Sexual Offences Act 1967, is given in the table.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 January 1994]: No prosecutions have been brought under section 1 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967. This section amended earlier legislation to make lawful homosexual acts in private between consenting men aged 21 or above.

Available information on prosecutions under sections 12 and 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956, which were the principal offences amended by the 1967 Act, are given in the table.

Ethnic Minority Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of prison inmates, (a) men and (b) women, being held in prisons in England and Wales who are of an ethnic minority background but are citizens of the United Kingdom as at 10 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 18 January 1994:

ETHNIC MINORITIES

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what is the percentage of prison inmates, (a) men and (b) women, being held in prisons in England and Wales who are of an ethnic minority background but are citizens of the United Kingdom, as at 10 January.

The latest available provisional information is for prisoners in Prison Service establishments on 30 September 1993. On that date 11 per cent. of males and 11·5 per cent. of females were of minority ethnic origin and were recorded as having United Kingdom nationality.

Ethnic Minority Pupils

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children in British schools come from new Commonwealth countries;

(2) how many extra children in British schools will be included in the new section 11 brief to include all members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not held centrally in the form requested and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1993, representations regarding the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 concerned primarily the decision not to extend the provisions of the Act to channel tunnel services and the direct airside transit visa provision which was added by the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. Representations from carriers against the imposition of charges are regularly received by the immigration service.

999 Calls

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the number of 999 calls made (a) per police officer and (b) per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 for the South Wales, Thames Valley, Kent, Lancashire, Avon and Somerset and Hampshire police authority areas; and what were the comparable totals for all non-metropolitan and Welsh non-metropolitan police authority areas.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Racial Attacks

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to curb the rise in racial attacks and the increasing activity of the British National party.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have on many occasions expressed their abhorrence of racial violence and harassment and fully support police efforts to tackle racially motivated crime.

Ministers have decided to reconvene the inter-departmental racial attacks group, chaired by the Home Office. The group provides a forum in which different agencies can examine the issue of racial violence at a national level, and co-ordinate a broad-based response. The first meeting is due to take place in February 1994.

The views of the British National party are as repugnant to the Government as they are to the public at large. If the activities of this group or its members breach the law, they are liable to be dealt with by the police under public order and criminal legislation, and a number of prosecutions of BNP members have been mounted in the past.

Video Rentals (Children)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many proprietors of video rental outlets were prosecuted for supplying films with an 18 rating to children in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 11 January at column 139.

Immigration

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the status in relation to entering the United Kingdom of citizens of Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Dominica, The Gambia, Grenada, Guyana, Kiribati, Lesotho, the Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, Namibia, Nauru, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, St. Lucia, the Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Tanzania, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Somoa, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans for any such changes.

Police Overtime (M11)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost in 1993 of the police overtime payments and other costs related to the security and policing for the M11 link road through Wanstead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the total manpower costs in 1993 of security and policing for the M11 link road through Wanstead amounted to £256,211. Information on the cost of support services and other resources involved is not available.

Police Vehicles

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the vehicle replacement policies in terms of mileage and age for the South Wales, Thames Valley, Kent, Lancashire, Avon and Somerset and Hampshire police authority areas.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

	South Wales	Thames Valley	Kent	Lancashire	Avon and Somerset	Hampshire
General purpose vehicle	70-100,000 miles	80,000 miles/ 4 years	100,000 miles/ 3 years	70,000 miles/ 3 years	75,000 miles/ 3 years	80,000 miles
Traffic vehicle	120,000 miles	100,000 miles/ 3 years	120,000 miles/ 2 years	70,000 miles/ 3 years	100,000 miles/ 2·5 years	120,000 miles
CID general vehicle	70-100,000 miles	100,000 miles/ 5 years	100,000 miles/ 5 years	70,000 miles/ 3 years	100,000 miles/ 2·5 years	100-120,000 miles
CID Special vehicle	70-100,000 miles	80,000 miles/ 3 years	100,000 miles/ 3 years	70,000 miles/ 3 years	100,000 miles/ 2 years	80,000 miles
Special Vehicle	70-100,000 miles	Dependent on age and condition	5-7 years	Dependent on age and condition	150,000 miles/ 10 years	80,000 miles
Motor-cycle		80,000 miles/ 6 years		80,000 miles/ 4 years	45,000 miles/ 4 years	65,000 miles

Where no age criterion is given, forces replace vehicles on the basis of mileage alone. Each force reviews its policy regularly to take account of operating experience and other factors.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of information technology services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers in compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers under the Data Protection Act 1984 to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Prisons (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department in seeking to give specialist training to prison officers whose work involves them with foreign nationals serving prison sentences in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no formal specialist training provided centrally for those working with foreign nationals, but all new officers receive race relations training which includes awareness of minority cultural, linguistic, spiritual and dietary needs.

Responsibility for meeting the needs of foreign nationals is often co-ordinated by the race relations management team and liaison officers in establishments. Information on "best practice" in relation to foreign prisoners has been disseminated through the Race Relations Liaison Officers' Newsletter and their 1993 national conference.

Training has been provided in this area for all staff at HM Prison Haslar (a specialised detention facility for deportees) by Prison Service College consultants.

There has also been a number of other initiatives to assist those working with foreign prisoners including translating the prisoners' information pack into 14 lanugauges; support for the Nuffield interpreters project to encourage accredited interpreters; introducing Language Line, a telephone interpreting service, into all prisons; and publication of the foreign prisoners' resource pack to provide information and guidance for staff working with foreign nationals, and the prisoners themselves.

Ethnic Minority Grants

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he proposes to meet the shortfall in services caused by the proposed cuts in section 11 funding.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following discussions with local authorities, section 11 grant will now be distributed as a cash sum, rather than a percentage of expenditure. This will ensure maximam take-up of available funding, and it remains open to local authorities to provide additional resources in the light of their assessment of relative local priorities.

Immigration Guidelines

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now publish his Department's guidelines for immigration officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. It is not the normal practice to publish internal instructions.

Paramilitaries

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all members of (a) proscribed loyalist and (b) proscribed republican organisations who are convicted prisoners in custody in England and Wales, giving in each case the date of their original conviction, their offence or offences, the length of sentence given and their paramilitary affiliation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. A Butler to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 18 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking for details of convicted prisoners in custody in England and Wales who are members of proscribed organisations.

It is not the practice to discuss the claimed or suspected affiliation of individual prisoners to particular organisations.

Leave to Remain

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his policy for issuing travel documents to individuals who have been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer to my reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 16 December at column 791, which indicated that officials were writing that day setting out changes to be introduced on 1 January. A copy of the letter was placed in the Library. The new arrangements clarify policy and practice in the issue of Home Office travel documents, including the issue of documents to those granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy with regard to allowing re-entry to the United Kingdom to those individuals who have been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom and have been granted a travel document, and who then seek to re-enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A person granted exceptional leave to remain will normally be re-admitted on return to the United Kingdom before the expiry of the period granted if the immigration officer is satisfied that the circumstances which led to the granting of that leave still apply.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of (a) recorded crime, per police officer, (b) recorded crime per 100,000 population for each year since 1979 for the South Wales, Thames Valley, Kent, Lancashire, Avon and Somerset and Hampshire police areas; and what were the comparable totals for all non-metropolitan and Welsh non-metropolitan police authorities.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in the following table:

South Wales Police

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the basis for the categorisation this coming year of South Wales as a semi-rural police authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Concentration of population is one of a number of factors which have been used in reaching decisions on the allocation of increases in police force establishments. As my right hon. Friend has made clear, however, available resources will not allow for further increases to establishments in 1994-95.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his target date for the opening of each of his proposed secure training centres; (2) what target date he has set by which he intends that all five secure training centres shall be open and accepting referrals.

Mr. Maclean: The centres will open as soon as possible after Royal Assent to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 952, whether he will now identify the region in which each of his five proposed secure training centres is to be sited and list the counties to be served in each case.

Mr. Maclean: Final decisions have not yet been reached. The notice recently placed in the Official Journal of the European Community invited expressions of interest from companies to finance, design, build/refurbish, operate and maintain secure training centres either on Home Office land or on alternative sites which they would themselves propose. The deadline for receipt of applications is 11 February 1994.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all the running costs of his proposed secure training centres will be met by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: Running costs will be met by the contractor(s), who will be reimbursed by the Home Office.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people under the age of 25 years are not included in the electoral register.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of people under 25 included in, or missing from, the electoral register is not collected. However, research carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys after the 1991 Census suggested that approximately 12·1 per cent. of people aged 18-19, 19·5 per cent. of people aged 20 and 20·6 per cent. of people aged 21-24 were missing from the register.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department is spending on (a) electoral registration in the United Kingdom, (b) electoral registration of EC nationals in the United Kingdom and (c) electoral registration of overseas voters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Electoral registration officers are appointed by district and London borough councils in England and Wales and receive their funding through their local authority. The Home Office undertakes an annual publicity campaign in support of electoral registration in England and Wales. Some £620,000 has been spent on television advertising in support of the canvass for the 1994-95 electoral register. We have no plans for expenditure on overseas electors publicity. We are currently considering ways of letting European Community nationals know about their new voting rights.

Schools-Police Liaison Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Wales police authority in relation to the priority to be given to the schools-police liaison service in the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police authorities operate a schools-police liaision authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. Arrangements for police liaison with schools are the responsibility of chief officers of police. Some police forces have dedicated schools liaison personnel, others employ officers with wider youth and community liaison duties to undertake schools liaison.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in relation to the schools-police liaison service of the South Wales police authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Child Cruelty

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and where he first announced his intention to extend the prosecution right of appeal to cases of child cruelty and indecent assault; and if he will list the occasions on which he has since made a similar announcement (a) to the House, (b) via Home Office press release, statement or communication or (c) otherwise.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend first announced the Government's intention to extend the scope of the Attorney-General's power to refer unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal in a speech at the Conservative party conference on 6 October. Since then, my right hon. and learned Friend has referred to this intention on a number of occasions in response to questions from hon. Members and the public, and in explaining the Government's overall strategy on law and order. On Thursday 13 January this year the Home Office public relations branch issued a press release giving further details of the offences to be covered and the proposed date of implementation, to coincide with the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave in the House on that day to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim).

Deported Jamaicans

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost, including plane charter, of returning to Jamaica on 25 December 1993, Jamaican nationals refused entry to the United Kingdom on 21 December 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The figure was £126,765, including the cost of the charter and of in-flight escorts but excluding the cost of in-country escorts which have yet to be finalised.

Peanut Allergy

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths are known to have been caused in England and Wales by peanut-related food allergy in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

For the latest 10 years, 1983 to 1992, for which data are available, there were no deaths registered where allergy to peanuts was the assigned underlying cause.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average prison sentence imposed for defaulting on a fine; what is the average period actually spent in prison by such a defaulter; and what is the average cost of such a person's imprisonment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. William Ross, dated 18 January 1994:

Fine Defaulters

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking about the average prison sentence imposed for defaulting on a fine; the average period actually spent in prison by such a defaulter; and the average cost of such a person's imprisonment.

The latest available information is for 1992 when the average length of sentence imposed for fine default in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales was 22 days. The average period served was 7·5 days. Information relating to the average cost of imprisonment specifically for fine defaulters is not available. The average net operating cost for prisoners in local prisons and remand centres in 1992/93, however, was £526 per week.

Community Charge (Fines)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November and December of the number of people imprisoned for non-payment of outstanding community charge and in each case specify the length and cost per person of imprisonment; and what proportion of those imprisoned are in receipt of benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Walley, dated 13 January 1994:

NON PAYMENT OF OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY CHARGE

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of people imprisoned in April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November and December for non-payment of outstanding community charge, and for each case the length and cost per person of imprisonment and what proportion of those imprisoned are in receipt of benefit.

Provisional data is given in the attached table for the months April to October 1993. Because of the number of cases identified it is not possible to detail the length of sentence imposed in each cage. Information relating to the cost per person of imprisonment specifically for these cases is not available. The average net operating cost for prisoners in local prisons and remand centres in 1992/3, however, was £526 per week. The average sentence applied was 34 days of which just under half would normally be served. Information on the proportion of those imprisoned who are in receipt of benefit is not available centrally.

WALES

Health Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps employees in Wales of health service bodies, local authorities or voluntary organisations may take to raise concerns relating to patient or client treatment, to malpractice or to fraud.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the NHS, employees are encouraged to take up their concerns through all levels of management within the employing authority or NHS trust in accordance with local procedures designed to ensure such concerns are dealt with fairly and thoroughly. A copy of guidance issued last June is in the Library of the House.

Every local authority has to appoint a monitoring officer who has a duty to prepare a report to the authority if it appears to him/her that an action or omission by the authority is or is likely to be illegal or amount to maladministration. The authority must consider his/her report before deciding what action to take. A local authority's chief finance officer has a similar duty with regard to matters of financial propriety. An employee of an authority could bring his or her concerns to the attention of the monitoring officer or the chief finance officer.

It is also open to any person, including employees of a particular local authority, to approach the independent external auditor appointed by the Audit Commission to that particular authority.

No central guidance has been issued to voluntary organisations. Since these are independent, employees are bound by the terms of their contracts of employment.

Schools Inspection

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the difference between the total value of the tenders placed in the financial year 1993-94 for the inspection of secondary schools in Wales and the sum of £933,000 transferred from the rate support grant to county councils to the Office of Her Majesty's chief inspector for Wales was spent on appointing staff to the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None of the money transferred from the revenue support grant to the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales was spent on appointing staff to that office.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the attendance figures for 1993 reported by the National Museum of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 951,982 people visited the National Museum of Wales during 1993, an increase of 9·7 per cent. over the attendance reported for 1992.

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that health authorities and ambulance trusts in Wales make arrangements to allow ambulance personnel to retire at age 55 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend is to consider what arrangements might be introduced to facilitate the early retirement of long-serving ambulance staff in Wales.

SCOTLAND

Rural Medical Care

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the report of the review of medical care in rural Scotland, chaired by Sir Thomas Thomson.

Mr. Stewart: The report of the working party has not yet been received, but it is understood that it is at final draft stage and will be submitted early next month. It will thereafter be considered and a decision taken about publication.

Government Papers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legislation applying to Scotland similar to the 30-year rule regarding the release of Government and Cabinet papers.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for introducing legislation to provide for the public release of Scottish Office governmental papers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Office papers have for many years been released as a matter of course under arrangements which mirror administratively those which apply statutorily in England and Wales. I have no plans at present to place the system on a statutory footing.

Glenochil Prison

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who granted permission for the visit in December 1993 of Mr. Roger Kendrick, former governor, and Mr. Walter Litherard to Glenochil prison; and how many staff and prisoners they interviewed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have asked Mr. E. W. Frizzell, the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, to arrange for a reply to be given to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. John McFall, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about who granted permission for a visit in December 1993 by Mr. Roger Kendrick, former governor, and Mr. Walter Litherard, to Glenochil Prison, and how many staff and prisoners they interviewed.

Mr. Kendrick telephoned Mr. L. McBain, Governor-in-Charge, HM Prison, Glenochil, and asked if he could visit to discuss a number of matters and Mr. McBain agreed.

Mr. Litherard did not visit the establishment.

Mr. Kendrick subsequently visited. The purpose of the visit was to advise the Governor of the existence of a new electronic drug detection unit that Mr. Kendrick's company was marketing. Mr. Kendrick also met with a Governor involved in the prison industries complex to ask if Glenochil Prison would be interested in seeking a contract to supply his company with items of prison industries output. No staff and no prisoners were interviewed by Mr. Kendrick.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish League clubs together with the total season's attendance at (a) matches played in the Scottish Premiership and Leagues and (b) matches played in the Tennant's Scottish cup, Skol cup and B and Q cup with the total numbers of (i) arrests, (ii) ejections and (iii) arrests plus ejections as a percentage of the total attendance at each category of such matches, accurate to four decimal places for the seasons 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will make a statement on attendance rates and arrest rates at each category of such matches.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not held centrally and cannot, therefore, be assembled in the time available. I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make a statement on the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro: Ministers will await the advice of the forestry review group before deciding what action, if any, should be taken in relation to the ownership and management of the Forestry Commission's woodlands.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what undertakings he has made to the forestry unions to guarantee the future of the Forestry Commission; and if he will place them in the Library.

Sir Hector Monro: Forestry Ministers have given no undertakings to forestry unions in respect to any matter in relation to the Forestry Commission.

Bulk Shipping

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what tariff rebate subsidy will be applied to the bulk transport of timber; and what plans the Government have to reduce the rate or abolish the scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The bulk transport of timber currently attracts a TRS rate of 40 per cent. Arrangements for 1994-95 have not yet been finalised.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made as to the number of extra timber loads which will be transported by road in the west highlands following the termination of ship freight services; what assessment he has made of the cost in terms of repair and maintenance of trunk roads resulting from such extra loads; what studies he has made of the economic and environmental effect of such extra traffic on the areas concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is my understanding that Glenlight Shipping Ltd. is continuing to transport timber by sea within the highlands and islands area using the company's timber barge system. Glenlight Shipping Ltd. will continue to receive subsidy on such cargoes. In addition, other bulk shippers operating within the TRS scheme are eligible to receive subsidy for the carriage of timber.

Given the continuing operation of Glenlight's timber barge system as well as the availability of other bulk shipping operators to carry timber, it seems unlikely that there will be any significant transfer of timber transport to road in the west highlands area.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which bulk shipping operators will be undertaking the transport of goods which were previously carried out by Glenlight Shipping; when he expects the commencement of the service by alternative operators; what level of subsidy they are receiving; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what discussions his Department has had with freight shipping services following the collapse of the Glenlight Shipping company regarding the provision of life line shipping services to the Isles; if he will list the shipping services which have shown an interest in the routes currently served by Glenlight; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultation has been initiated or entered into by his Department with bulk shipping companies in order to operate the routes relinquished by Glenlight Shipping Services Ltd; on what dates these meetings took place; and which ministers or officials were involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Glenlight Shipping Ltd. has not collapsed. The company is still operating but has taken the commercial decision to discontinue bulk shipping operations in the highlands and islands area apart from the carriage of timber. The Scottish Office is continuing to provide tariff rebate subsidy to the company on the basis of eligible cargoes carried. In addition to Glenlight there are four other bulk shipping operators within the TRS scheme operating on the west coast. The relevant companies are: Easdale Island Shipping Line, Gardner Shipping (Scotland) Ltd., Roderick Cunningham (Scalpay) Ltd. and Dennison (Shipping) Ltd. I understand that at least two of these shipping companies are already carrying cargoes for customers who were previously served by Glenlight Shipping Ltd. The Scottish Office maintains regular and frequent contact with shipping operators within the TRS scheme to discuss variations in traffic levels, the redistribution of TRS resources and other matters. In recent months the Scottish Office has had extensive discussions with Glenlight Shipping Ltd. and also with Easdale Shipping Line and Gardner Shipping (Scotland) Ltd., the two west coast bulk shipping operators that are most likely to carry the traffic previously carried by Glenlight.

The general rate of TRS subvention on the west coast is 40 per cent. for cargoes originating from the mainland and 30 per cent. for cargoes originating from the islands. Each company's TRS allocation is based on the company's estimates of traffic to be carried within the specified period and on previous years' actual traffic carried as compared with forecasts. Individual bulk shipping operators' allocations are commercially confidential. In 1993-94 provision of £3·130 million is being made available for bulk shipping services and £6·768 million for P and O Scottish Ferries Ltd., giving a total TRS provision of £9·898 million.

Local Government Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect local government reform will have on projects currently being planned and undertaken by existing local authorities and specific requests for assistance of objective 1 funding; what guidelines his Department has drawn up or plans; what discussions his Department has had with local authorities regarding the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Local government reform will not affect the ability of local authorities to compete for objective 1 funds. Any rights, liabilities and obligations of existing authorities resulting from grant awards before the new local authority structure comes into effect will be inherited by relevant successor authorities, as provided for in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill. No specific guidelines are planned in relation to the European structural funds; and my Department has had no discussions with local authorities regarding the matter.

Crosshouse Hospital

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 84, if he will make a detailed statement on the facilities which have been closed in Crosshouse hospital by the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust.

Mr. Stewart: There have been no reductions in service but there are two wards for which there are planned changes in use.

In its first six months the trust has treated 400 more in-patients, 1,900 more day patients and 1,500 more out-patients compared with the same period last year. In orthopaedic surgery and gynaecology, changes in service delivery patterns have meant that fewer in-patient beds are required to meet an increased demand for services.

Orthopaedic day surgery has increased by 83 per cent. and in-patient activity by 11 per cent. following the appointment of an additional consultant orthopaedic surgeon and the opening of a £1 million purpose-planned day surgery unit. As day surgery patients no longer require to be cared for in a hospital ward, a 30-bedded orthopaedic ward will now be used to provide expanded and improved in-patient facilities for renal and haematology patients.

Gynaecological day surgery has increased by 20 per cent. compared with last year and this improvement in clinical practice means that consultants require 26 fewer gynaecological in-patient beds to treat an increased number of patients. A gynaecology ward will shortly become available for use as a decanting facility which will ensure that the planned programme of ward upgrading at Crosshouse hospital can proceed without inconveniencing patients and with no reduction in the number of patients treated.

Land Valuation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding amending revaluation forms under the Land Valuation Acts to simplify the procedure for business in Scotland by eliminating the need to provide detailed financial information about the business concerned; what are the implications for the arrangement of the commitment to reducing bureaucracy, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received three letters on this subject since 1 January 1993. Under section 7 of the Lands Valuation (Scotland) Act 1854, as amended, an assessor is authorised to call upon any ratepayer within his area to supply him only with such information as is reasonably required in order to value the property concerned. This is to ensure that the property is valued as accurately as possible with the objective of minimising the need for an appeal and the consequent additional costs for the ratepayer.

Tourist Boards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the consultation exercise into tourist boards in Scotland concerning the proposed new board covering Argyll and Bute; what suggestions have been made with regard to the geography of that tourist board area; when he expects the conclusion of the exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish tourist board has submitted a recommendation on a new area tourist board structure to my right hon. Friend. This is being considered carefully and an announcement will be made in due course.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now direct that the salaries of general managers of NHS trusts be made public; and if he will arrange for the members of the boards of NHS trusts to declare any financial interests and that a register of such interests be made available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Lang: These issues are under consideration following publication for consultation in England of draft codes of conduct and accountability for NHS boards and their members.

Shipping Operators

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which companies presently receive tariff rebate subsidy; what is the extent of tariff rebate subsidy for each shipping operator; what are the current guidelines for receiving the subsidy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The companies currently operating within the tariff rebate subsidy scheme are as listed. Each company's TRS allocation is based on the company's estimates of traffic to be carried during the year concerned as well as on previous years' actual traffic carried as compared with forecasts. Individual shipping operators' claims are monitored monthly against the TRS resources available. Individual bulk shipping operators' allocations are treated as being commercial confidential. In 1993-94 provision of £3·130 million is being made available for bulk shipping services and £6·768 million for P and O Scottish Ferries Ltd., giving a total TRS provision of £9·898 million. The TRS scheme operates on the basis of providing for reduction in shipping operators' normal commercial tariffs. The shipping operator determines tariffs on a normal commercial basis for the carriage of particular cargoes, and, if the cargo and the destination are eligible for subsidy under the scheme, the operator reduces the commercial tariff by a percentage decided by the Scottish Office. The Scottish Office pays subsidy to the shipping operator to compensate for tariff reductions. Before becoming eligible for assistance under the tariff rebate subsidy scheme a shipping operator is required to enter into an undertaking with the Secretary of State for Scotland to provide approved shipping services within the highlands and islands area.

Companies operating within the TRS scheme:
P & O Scottish Ferries
Orcargo
Orkney Line Ltd
Shetland Line Ltd
Dennison (Shipping) Ltd
Easdale Island Shipping Line
Gardner Shipping (Scotland) Ltd
Glenlight Shipping Ltd
Hay & Company (Lerwick) Ltd
Roderick Cunningham (Scalpay) Ltd

Student Awards

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what conclusions he has reached about the future administration of student awards in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have decided that student awards branch of the Scottish Office Education Department should become an executive agency of the Secretary of State for Scotland, under the "next steps" initiative, with a proposed launch date of 5 April 1994.

Mountain Deaths

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people died during 1993 as the result of incidents on Scottish mountains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The information requested for 1993 should be ready by April 1994. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available. Meanwhile, the number of deaths from such incidents in the most recent 10 years are given in the table.

Tourism

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress being made on Her Majesty's Government's review of tourism support arrangements in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Good progress is being made in implementing the decisions announced by my right hon. Friend on 29 June 1993 following the tourism review.

To ensure collaboration at the national level, my right hon. Friend has appointed representatives of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to the board of the Scottish tourist board. I hope to announce shortly the measures we are taking to strengthen the Scottish tourism co-ordinating group and the Scottish Confederation of Tourism. I expect the first national strategic plan for tourism to be published in the spring.

Arrangements for the Scottish tourist board's assumption of Highlands and Islands Enterprise's tourism marketing and visitor service functions with effect from 1 April 1994, for the consolidation of business support within the enterprise network, and for the relocation of some of the board's functions to Inverness are well advanced.

The provisions of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill confirm the important role which local authorities have in supporting the tourist industry and provide for the establishment of a co-ordinated and coherent network of area tourist boards covering the whole of Scotland.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he will announce the Government's intentions regarding the future of tourism support in Scotland;

(2) what reduction the Scottish tourist board has proposed in the number of area tourist boards in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The Scottish tourist board has submitted a recommendation on a new area tourist board structure to my right hon. Friend. This is being considered carefully and an announcement will be made in due course.

Teacher Training

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people graduated or qualified in teacher training in each of the Scottish teacher training colleges and universities in 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The available information is set out in the table:

College/University	Number of Graduates in 1993 (provisional)
University of Paisley	180
Strathclyde University	758
Moray House Institute of Education	539
Northern College of Education	455
St. Andrew's College of Education	420
University of Stirling	31
All	2,383

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many newly qualified teachers were appointed to permanent teaching posts by each of the regional and island authorities in Scotland in 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Surveys to ascertain the first destination of newly qualified teachers are undertaken in September of the graduation year and in the following March, the later survey tending to give a more comprehensive picture of employment rates.

Such information as is available from the September 1993 survey about teachers who qualified in 1993 is set out in the following tables. The high non-response rate—34 per cent.—to the survey questionnaire means, however, that the figures are of limited reliability.

A7

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish the route action plan for the A7 trunk route south of Hawick.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 January 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer of 10 December 1993.

Ambulance Personnel

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what recent discussions he has held with representatives of ambulance staff and Unison in connection with plans for early retirement of ambulance personnel; (2) what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the national Whitley council to look at provisions for early retirement schemes for ambulance personnel.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Early retirement was discussed in the ambulance council of the national Whitley council in October last year.

On 13 January my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State announced a special scheme for this financial year to enable some ambulance staff aged 60 and over to retire early with the full pension rights which they would have accrued by age 65.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the EC plans to spend in the current financial year on its agricultural policy; and by what percentage this has changed over the past five and 10 years.

Mr. Jack: Expenditure on agricultural support in the United Kingdom in the current financial year—1993-94—is estimated at £3,011 million. This represents increases of 118 per cent. and 74 per cent. over expenditure in the 1988-89 and 1983-84 financial years respectively. Of this, £2,727 million represents the estimated expenditure on the CAP in the United Kingdom.

Rare Livestock

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support the Government are giving to individuals preserving rare breeds of farm livestock.

Mr. Jack: Individuals rearing rare breeds of farm livestock are eligible for the same support under the common agricultural policy as other livestock producers. In addition, the European Commission has made a proposal on the conservation of genetic resources in agriculture which may prove helpful to organisations concerned with rare breeds: and my Department is planning a study to establish the extent to which rare breeds contribute to genetic diversity.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether she is encouraging conservation agencies to use rare breeds of livestock in conservation grazing schemes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: None of the conservation schemes for which this Department has responsibility specifically encourages the use of rare breeds. However, a recent change to the EC set-aside rules has introduced the possibility of limited grazing of set-aside land in the autumn, including grazing by rare breeds.

Rockingham Forest

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to sell any woods owned by the Forestry Commission in the Rockingham forest.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission is currently selling or considering the sale of the following woodlands in Rockingham forest:

Woodland	Area (hectares)
Bolt Wood	27
Hayes Wood	2
Hewson's Spinney	2
Launde Big Wood	41
Launde Park	55
Owston Wood	104
Salome Wood	23
West Wood	29

Farming

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers there are in Britain; and how many acres of land are farmed (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a percentage of the total land area.

Mr. Jack: The number of farmers, partners and directors working on agricultural holdings in the United Kingdom at 1 June 1993 was 278,700. The absolute area of land being farmed in the United Kingdom at 1 June 1993 was 45·7 million acres, which was about 77 per cent. of the total land area.

Notes:

1. Source: Provisional results from the 1993 June agricultural and horticultural census. Final results are expected to be published towards the end of January.
2. Estimates for minor holdings are included for England and Wales but not for Scotland and Northern Ireland.
3. Figures exclude the wives/husbands of farmers, partners and directors, even though they themselves may be partners or directors.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total of all subsidies paid to farmers in Britain in the most recent year for which figures are available (a) by the British Government and (b) by the European Union, in sterling terms; and if she will give the total for each subsidy.

Mr. Jack: Table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1992"—pages 78-79—provides details of public expenditure on market support measures and on other grants and subsidies paid in the United Kingdom. Receipts from the European Union are set out at the foot of page 79. A copy has been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she will make a statement about the future of the Agricultural Wages Board.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) on 11 January at column 50.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to her Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Jack: A total of 2,750 charity Christmas cards were purchased at a cost of £1,633 and sent out by MAFF Ministers and senior officials in 1993. The cost of sending these cards is not known. A combination of delivery by hand and by postal system was used.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will apply flexibility in enforcing the closing date for the sheep annual premium, suckler cow premium and arable payments in cases of obvious hardship.

Mr. Jack: Rules which apply to claims received after the closing dates both for individual schemes and for the area aid application, required under schemes covered by the integrated administration and control system, are laid down in EC legislation. The explanatory literature connected with all these schemes makes it clear that it is the farmer's responsibility to get the claims in by the due date. However, we will look sympathetically at cases where it is claimed that delay is the result of force majeure.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish a table of farm incomes for each of the years 1982-83 to 1992-93 showing the figures at 1992-93 prices for the dairy farm, lowland livestock farm, cropping farm and hill and upland livestock farm sectors.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the average net farm income at 1992-93 prices are provided in the following table. The method of farm classification has been changed and results are available only on the new classification from 1986-87. Year-to-year comparisons can best be made by reference to the indices shown in the table; these are based on results from identical samples between successive years.

Cattle Conference

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how her Department was represented at the Cambridge conference on cattle.

Mr. Jack: Representatives from the State Veterinary Service and ADAS were present at the international conference of the British Cattle Breeders' Club held at Cambridge between 10 and 13 January 1994.

Oilseeds

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) of 17 December 1993, Official Report, columns 1071-72, if she will list all those member states whose area of oilseeds exceed a level calculated by reference to the 1989-91 average area; for what reasons the Council decided to extend the moratorium on the use of bovine somatotropin for one year only; and what was the Commission's recommended moratorium on bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Jack: The EC-US oilseeds agreement does not apply until the crop for harvest in 1994 nor will penalties apply unless total plantings throughout the Community exceed the EC's total base area. The member states with areas planted to oilseeds in 1993 in excess of their 1989-91 average area are Germany, Portugal, Spain and the United Kingdom.

The Commission's proposal was that the marketing and use of BST within the Community should be prohibited for the duration of milk quotas, that is currently until 31 March 2000. The Council decided however, to extend the moratorium on the marketing and use of bovine somatotropin for a further year only, so that it could consider the implications of a long-term ban, including the consequences for international trade, and the new situation created by the recent decision of the United States to approve the marketing of BST from the beginning of February 1994.

It remains the United Kingdom view that the final Community decision on BST should be based firmly on scientific principles, taking into account the need to avoid international trading problems, to encourage Community based research industries, and to maintain the competitiveness of the Community's agriculture and food industries. Nonetheless, we accepted that it was sensible to extend the current moratorium for not more than one year, so that the Council could consider these new developments and experience overseas.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Works of Art (Export Licences)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half year ended 31 December 1993, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; if he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued by his Department covering the information given in his reply, including that relating to the outcome in individual cases.

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half year ended 31 December 1993 of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed in the matter of allocation by testators or executors; and if he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax.

Unicorn Heritage plc

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what criteria the English tourist board made a grant of £200,000 to Unicorn Heritage plc.

Mr. Sproat: In considering the application from Unicorn Heritage plc, the English tourist board applied its standard criteria for making grants under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. These were as follows: the grant must be additional—that is, the project would not go ahead without the section 4 grant; there should be a clear market need for the project, and reasonable prospects for its success; the project should where possible be innovative; and the section 4 grant should constitute only a small proportion of the total funding.

The English tourist board commissioned a report on the Unicorn Heritage project from consultants with particular expertise in developing visitor attractions. Drawing on this report and its own assessment, the board concluded that the project met the section 4 criteria. Unicorn Heritage was treated in exactly the same way as any other company would be in such circumstances.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what date his Department was notified of the demise of Unicorn Heritage plc; on what date it was recognised that a grant was reclaimable; on what date it started action to recover the grant; what form that action took; how many months it took to refer the file to the Treasury; and what were the reasons for the time taken to refer the file.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The grant referred to was made by the English tourist board. The board has discretion to secure payment of any grant if the grant recipient becomes bankrupt or, in the case of a company, is wound up. The board was notified of the failure of the Unicorn Heritage plc shortly after the company went into liquidation on 25 June 1990. On 11 September 1990 the board agreed to raise a debt of £200,000, and proof of debt was submitted to the liquidators. On 12 October 1990 the liquidators replied stating that there was no prospect of any payment of any dividend to the board.

The board kept the case open for some time because of the remote possibility that an unexpected dividend might have been forthcoming as the liquidators' work proceeded. This did not prove to be the case, so on 13 August 1992 the English tourist board recommended to my Department that this debt should be written off.

Consultancies

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Sproat: My Department let the contracts shown in the chart to accountancy firms and merchant banks in 1992 and 1993. Many of these contracts were with the management consultancy arm of the firm concerned rather than their accountacy arm. The total value of these contracts to date is approximately £0·71 million.

Grant Write-offs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all companies which have had grants from his Department written off since June 1992 and set out his reasons for the decisions.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 January 1994]: My Department has not written off any grants which it administers directly.

Under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the English Tourist Board has given financial assistance to projects providing or improving tourist amenities and facilities in England. As permitted by Act, the board attached conditions to the grants which allowed them to be recoverable, including bankruptcy/insolvency of the recipient. The board is required to surrender to my Department all the sums recovered. Any amount which proves to be irrecoverable has to be written off by the Department. Treasury approval is required where the amount is over £100,000 and for 20 per cent. of the value of cases assessed.

Since June 1992, grant reclaimable debts have been written off in respect of the following companies. The debts were irrecoverable by reason of receivership, liquidation or because the company was wound up:

Receivership
- Ashbourne Lodge plc
- Badgerealm Ltd.
- Border Developments Ltd.
- Callow Park Ltd.
- Grosvenor Arms Hotel (Pulford) Ltd.
- Marshall of Luton (Builders) Ltd.
- Theme Holdings Ltd.
- Wessex Farm Horse Centre Ltd.
- White Lion Hotel (Banbury) Ltd.

Liquidation
- Backbrook Ltd.
- Betternatural Ltd.
- Brighton Rackets Club Ltd.
- E & P Hotels Ltd.
- Horsley Hall Ltd.
- National Jazz Centre Ltd.
- Sal Investments Ltd.
- Unicorn Heritage plc
- West Country Transport and Plant Hire Ltd.

Voluntary wound up
- Oxford Area Arts Council Ltd.

In addition to the English tourist board, the Department sponsors a number of non-departmental public bodies which make grants available as part of their activities. Responsibility for determining to whom grants are given, and the conditions attached, rests with the individual bodies. Where appropriate, these include the need for the recipient to repay the grant where compliance with the conditions has not been met. Responsibility for writing off any irrecoverable debts arising within certain limits rests with the sponsored bodies. Details of these are not held centrally and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. No cases outside the delegated limits have been submitted to the Department for approval.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in how many cases since 1987 tourist board grants have been written off as irrecoverable; how many were between £100,000 and £150,000, £150,000 and £199,000 and £200,000 or over; and what is the highest single amount written off.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The figures for debts relating to grants made under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 are shown separately for England, Scotland and Wales.

	England	Scotland	Wales
Debts written off since 1987	53	39	13
£100,000 – £150,000	3	2	1
£150,000 – £199,000	3	0	0
£200,000 or above	2	0	0
Highest amount written off	£759,039	£124,447	£100,000

Royal Armoury

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the progress made to date in the removal of the Royal Armoury to Leeds.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The new Royal Armouries museum in Leeds, scheduled to open in spring 1996, has won all the private sector support it needs to go ahead, and work has begun at the Clarence dock site. This prestigious enterprise is a leading example of a joint venture between the public and private sectors bringing benefits to Leeds, the armouries and the tourist. A consortium of investors has formed the Royal Armouries (International) plc which is putting £14 million into the project in addition to £20 million from my Department and contributions from Leeds development corporation and Leeds city council. The new museum will allow a far greater proportion of the armouries' unique collection to be displayed to the public and will make the Royal Armouries accessible to a much larger section of the population. The Royal Armouries will maintain a substantial display at the Tower of London, focused on the tower's rich history.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset, at least in part, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional cost will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

DEFENCE

Exercise Hadrian's Wall

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the newspapers and other media concerns and (b) the hon. Members to whom prior warning was given of Exercise Hadrian's Wall.

Mr. Hanley: Since most of the activity took place in Scotland, a number of Scottish newspapers were informed on 3 December 1993 that the exercise was taking place. The list of these is as follows:

Daily Record
Scotsman
Herald
Galloway News
Galloway Gazette
Wegtown Free Press
Dumfries and Galloway Standard
Lennox Herald
Helensburgh Advertiser
South West Advertiser

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence wrote to the hon. Member and to the right hon. and hon. Members for the following constituencies on 24 November 1993 informing them of the exercise:

Salisbury
Westbury
Devizes
Hampshire North West
Galloway and Upper Nithsdale
Dunfermline East
Angus East
Argyll and Bute
Ross, Cromarty and Skye
Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber
Caithness and Sutherland

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the role of Hunterston power station during Exercise Hadrian's Wall.

Mr. Hanley: Hunterston power station had no role in the exercise. A small amount of activity did, however, take place at the disused British Steel direct reduction plant at Hunterston.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties during Exercise Hadrian's Wall entered the airspace (a) within one nautical mile of Hunterston power station, (b) within the Glasgow airport control zone and (c) within the Scottish control zone; and what permissions were obtained from the relevant authorities for this activity.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers of sorties which entered the specified areas were as follows:

	Number
Within one nautical mile of Hunterston Power Station	4
Within the Glasgow Airport Control Zone	7
Within the Scottish Control Zone	29

My Department consulted Scottish Nuclear and Hunterston power station before granting permission for flights within the provost marshal's prohibited area which affords special protection to the power station. Normal air traffic control clearances were obtained from airspace controlling agencies in the case of flights within the Glasgow airport and the Scottish control zones.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature and purpose of Exercise Hadrian's Wall in December 1993; what locations were used during the exercise; how many personnel and aircraft were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Exercise Hadrian's Wall was designed to test aspects of the land, air and maritime skills of the armed forces. The locations used were RAF Boscombe Down, RAF West Freugh, Oban, Mallam Charles camp, Barry Budden camp, Aldourie Castle estate, Rosyth dockyard, Hunterston and some stretches of the Caledonian canal. The exercise involved 450 personnel, seven helicopters, two Hercules transport planes and two Tornados.

Hercules

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flight crew members are required to operate the C-130K Hercules aircraft; and what are their responsibilities.

Mr. Hanley: A minimum of five flight members are required to operate a Hercules C130K aircraft; the captain, co-pilot, navigator, air engineer and air loadmaster. The captain is a pilot and responsible for the overall safety of the aircraft; the co-pilot assists the captain with flight management and acts as a safety pilot in the event of incapacity of the captain; the navigator is responsible for the safe navigation of the aircraft in all phases of flight; the air engineer is responsible for all aircraft systems and the air loadmaster is responsible for all aspects of freight, passenger safety and security within the aircraft.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria, in addition to value for money, his Department will use in coming to a judgment on whether to replace half the existing fleet with the new C-130J Hercules or to opt for refurbishment.

Mr. Aitken: The basis on which we evaluate bids for military equipment is affordability, value for money, and technical considerations. In considering overall value for money, my Department will consider, with the DTI and Treasury, wider economic factors.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action the Government are taking to end the supply of anti-personnel mines to any faction attempting to buy them; and what attempts are made to halt the general trade in other weapons to sources outside the law.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom supports responsible international efforts to control trade in defence equipment. We also adopt a responsible approach to the export of defence equipment and have one of the most rigorous systems for scrutinising licence applications. The United Kingdom has not produced or exported conventional anti-personnel landmines for some time.

"Front Line First"

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department's "Front Line First" review will include study of tactical aircraft; and if the study would go beyond basic air trooping.

Mr. Aitken: The DCS is not examining tactical combat aircraft, but is looking at the provision of air transport aircraft in all roles, including basic air trooping, as part of a wider study of procurement projects and practices.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he, or his predecessors, have held since 1982 with his counterpart in the United States, or with officials in the United States Department of Defense in regard to (a) the implications for United Kingdom policy of the United States removing Iraq from its priority list of terrorist states and (b) the provision of arms, military equipment or defence-related technology to Iraq by the United States or its allies.

Mr. Hanley: Since 1982, my right hon. and learned Friend and his predecessors have had frequent discussions with their United States counterparts covering a wide range of security and defence issues. The topics in question may have been included, but it would involve disproportionate cost to establish the details of such discussions.

Pregnant Women (Radiation Exposure)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been conducted or sponsored by his Department into the effects of radiation exposure on pregnant women and their foetuses.

Mr. Hanley: We are not aware of any such research being conducted or sponsored by this Department.

Persian Gulf

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he received from his counterparts in the Gulf Co-operation Council in regard to decisions taken at the GCC meeting in Riyadh on 20 to 22 December 1993 affecting British forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Hanley: During his recent visit to the Gulf, my right hon. and learned Friend discussed a wide range of defence-related matters, including the outcome of the GCC meeting in December. The GCC plan for an expansion of the Peninsula Shield force does not affect British forces.

Small Battlefield Arms

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department gave to the production of the "Horizon" programme on the human impact of small battlefield arms, broadcast on 10 January.

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Martin Freeth, the senior producer in the BBC science and features department responsible for the "Horizon" programme, was given a number of unclassified background briefings while examining the feasibility of the programme. When a decision was taken by the BBC to proceed to make the programme, further unclassified briefings and interviews were provided.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom's Trident missiles will be more accurate than the Polaris ones they replace.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the warheads deployed on the United Kingdom's Trident missiles will be independently targetable.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total number of Trident missiles being purchased by the United Kingdom are to form part of a processing margin.

Mr. Aitken: On current plans, about 5 per cent. of the total number of United Kingdom's Trident missiles will form part of a processing margin.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans any demonstration that the Trident deployment will not involve any increase in strategic nuclear warheads above Polaris levels.

Mr. Hanley: In keeping with the practice of successive Governments, we do not make public the number of warheads actually deployed on our submarines. The question of verification does not arise.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to deploy conventional warheads on the United Kingdom's Trident missiles.

Mr. Hanley: The Government have no such plans.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of warheads assumed to be carried by each United States Trident D5 missile under the terms of the strategic arms reduction treaties.

Mr. Hanley: The details of the START I and START II treaties are a matter for the parties to those treaties. Under the memorandum of understanding on the establishment of the data base relating to the treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms—START I—deployed United States Trident II ((D5) missiles are attributed with eight warheads. START II sets additional limits on the overall number of warheads attributed to deployed submarine-launched ballistic missiles and modifies the rules established under START I for reducing the number of warheads attributed to deployed missiles.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on revealing the number of missiles and warheads deployed on the United Kingdom's Trident submarines; and in what circumstances the policy is reconsidered.

Mr. Aitken: It is our policy to be as open about the United Kingdom's nuclear deterrent as is possible without revealing information which might diminish the effectiveness of the system. For that reason we do not make public the number of missiles or warheads actually deployed on our submarines.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will apply a maximum ceiling to the number of warheads carried on any individual Trident missile.

Mr. Aitken: No. Overall, each Trident submarine will deploy with no more than 96 warheads.

Chevaline

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Chevaline has been fitted to every Polaris missile.

Mr. Aitken: All in-service United Kingdom Polaris missiles are fitted with the Chevaline modification.

Submarines (Fishing Vessels)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received regarding a complete ban on the movement of submarines in designated fishing areas; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he intends to initiate with appropriate organisations and Her Majesty's Navy following the recent incident involving a fishing vessel and HMS Valiant;

(3) what discussions he has had with the Royal Navy regarding the alleged breaching of guidelines on separation distances between submarines and fishing vessels;

(4) when he expects to receive the report of the Royal Navy inquiry into the incident involving HMS Valiant during naval exercise off Cape Wrath; and if he will make a statement on this incident.

Mr. Hanley: I have received no representations in the last 12 months regarding a complete ban on the movement of submarines in designated fishing areas.

I should, however, like to report that, during a training exercise off the coast of north-west Scotland on 8 November 1993, the submarine HMS Valiant's towed sonar array was lost after it apparently caught on the trawl of the fishing vessel Audacious. Communications were at once established with the fishing vessel, which reported that all was well.

A full investigation was immediately put in hand. This is not yet complete, but preliminary findings have concluded that HMS Valiant accidentally breached the 4,000 yard separation distance laid down in the submarine and fishing vessel code of practice. However, as soon as this was realised, HMS Valiant, in accordance with the requirements of the code, immediately reduced speed, returned to periscope depth and established communications to ensure the safety of other vessels. The towed array which HMS Valiant lost is a lightweight plastic tube and, as such, presents no hazard to the other vessels.

I have instructed that the report be concluded as soon as possible and its findings made available to the members of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety group sub-group on submarine and fishing vessel interaction, which includes representative of the fishermen's federations. It does appear that, while the code of practice was accidentally breached, its subsequent observance prevented a possibly more serious incident. Nonetheless, the issue of safety at sea is one which I take very seriously and I shall be considering what lessons might be learnt for the future.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what detailed investigations have taken place into alleged incidents between submarines in Scottish waters and fishing vessels within the past 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: Other than the surface collison which occurred between HMS Opossum and the FV Amber Rose in poor visibility on 14 July 1993, in which no one was hurt and only minimal damage sustained, the only incident to have occurred in or close to Scottish waters within the last 12 months is that between HMS Valiant and the FV Audacious.

The surface collision between Opossum and Amber Rose, which is not covered by the code of practice as this governs the conduct of dived submarines, was investigated by the MOD and the marine accident investigation branch of the Department of Transport.

The incident between Valiant and Audacious is currently the subject of an internal MOD investigation, the findings of which will be made available as soon as possible to members of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety group sub-group dealing with submarine and fishing vessels matters.

Competition Shooting

Sir James Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Army's policy on competition shooting.

Mr. Hanley: A major review of the Army's policy on training in shooting skills, including the role of the Regular Army skill-at-arms meeting, has recently been completed. The RASAM, which involved eight shooting days, was highly manpower intensive. Against the background of the Army's very heavy commitments at a time of restructuring and reducing numbers, I have taken the view that RASAM should be replaced by a one-day event, to be known as the Regular Army Queen's Medal competition. The new competition will continue to encourage excellence in Army shooting and meet the terms governing the award of the Queen's Medal. Competitors will be selected from divisional and district meetings, to be held under new guidelines issued by the Inspector General, Doctrine and Training. These guidelines will be designed to ensure a high standard of marksmanship throughout each Army unit, and that resources are available to improve the less proficient as well as enhance the skills of those who are already excellent shots.

The Royal Navy, the Royal Marines and the Royal Air Force will continue to hold their own central skill-at-arms meeting, overlapping with the new Army competition. This will be run by the Royal Air Force on behalf of the other services. International competitors will be able to take part, as before, in the various service and National Rifle Association competitions as well as in the international match on the last day of the meeting.

The Territorial Army skill-at-arms meeting and the combined cadet force (schools) and the inter-service cadet rifle meeting will take place as before.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of the Government on involvement of the United Kingdom in strategic nuclear arms control negotiations.

Mr. Hanley: Our policy continues to be that if, in time, the United States and former Soviet arsenals were further reduced substantially, and there had been no significant improvements in defensive capability, we would consider what further contribution we might make to nuclear arms control in the changed circumstances.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 527, if an increase in accuracy of delivery allows a reduction in the number of warheads deployed or the yield of the warheads deployed.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 527.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any nuclear arms control treaties have measured nuclear capability according to comparative explosive yield of the weapons involved.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom is not party to all nuclear arms control treaties, most of which are bilateral between the nuclear super-powers, but we are not aware of any that measure nuclear capability in this way.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when his Department originally determined the total procurement buy for the RAF of the European fighter aircraft;

(2) what are the implications of the recently announced reductions in frontline RAF combat aircraft for the total procurement buy of the Eurofighter 2000 for the RAF.

Mr. Aitken: A decision on the number of Eurofighter 2000 aircraft to be procured for the RAF is not required until 1995. However, for planning purposes, we have assumed—and declared to our partners—an offtake of 250 aircraft, with deliveries commencing in 2000.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Air Force combat aircraft types are due to be replaced by the Eurofighter 2000.

Mr. Hanley: Our current plan is to procure 250 Eurofighter 2000s to replace RAF Tornado F3s and Jaguars. The scope for replacing other RAF aircraft by the Eurofighter 2000 remains under consideration.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what slippage has occurred in the expected initial delivery date of the Eurofighter 2000 to the RAF since the inception of the programme; and what are the cost implications.

Mr. Aitken: The initial delivery date of the Eurofighter 2000 to the RAF has slipped by some two years from that envisaged at the start of development. Most of this results from the decision which the four partner nations took in December 1992 to delay the commitment to production. The cost implications of this delay will depend on the outcome of negotiations with industry on the necessary contract changes.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 156, if he will list the planned time scale for the project to move the Procurement Executive to Abbey Wood; by which date the decision on new computers will be taken; and what is his Department's latest estimate of the cost of the new computer equipment and software.

Mr. Aitken: The Procurement Executive's future corporate IT system is planned to replace the PE's existing IT system from the completion of collocation. A final decision will be taken later this year when the definition stage is complete.

It would be prejudicial to the tendering process to disclose the current estimates.

TRADE

Iran

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been made to his Department following the announcement by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 1 March concerning the Government's export licensing policy towards Iran.

Mr. Needham: We have received a number of representations about export business which was entered into before the moratorium on export licences was imposed on 17 December 1992. An exception has been made in one case to date: this concerns completion of a contract for repair and overhaul of non-lethal aircraft components, for which the company concerned held a valid export licence issued before the moratorium was announced. For reasons beyond its control the company was unable to complete the work within the time frame of the extant licence, which we have now renewed.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to amend the rules applying to the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The small firms loan guarantee scheme was improved significantly twice during 1993. There are no current plans further to amend the rules applying to the scheme.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the take-up rate for the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The DTI is currently guaranteeing an average of around 240 loans each month. From its inception in June 1981 to 30 September 1993 a total of 34,689 loans have been guaranteed under the scheme.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what adverse representations he has received concerning the attitude of banks involved in the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Complaints are received frequently from businesses unable to obtain a loan under the small firms loan guarantee scheme. The vast majority of these are from businesses which either fall outside of the scope of the scheme or whose proposals have been rejected by lenders on commercial grounds. With both public and lender funds at risk, successful applications under the scheme must be assessed carefully as commercially viable and meet fully the other conditions of the scheme.

Fire Safety

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make the recommendations of the construction task force, and the evidence upon which they are based, public; and if they will form the basis of a consultation exercise between his Department, the fire and emergency planning department of the Home Office and organisations representing the fire service;

(2) if he will provide details of the findings and recommendations of the construction task force with regard to the provision and enforcement of the current fire safety laws and regulations in England and Wales.

Mr. Heseltine: The recommendations of all seven business task forces will be published shortly and the working documents on which they are based will be made available. The recommendations of the construction task force and other views will help inform any wider consideration of fire safety matters.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make arrangements for the data protection registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Eggar: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary by this Department for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: Factors which led to an increase in the cost of ministerial cars were (a) an increase in the rate of VAT from 15 per cent. to 17·5 per cent. which accounted for an additional £12,000, (b) an increase in the weekly rate charged for cars by the Department of Environment which accounted for £38,500 and (c) the costs relating to two additional Ministers, since April 1992, which amounted to £105,400 for a total increase of £156,000. Against this can be offset reduced expenditure of £210,000 on cars following the amalgamation of the Department of Energy with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Telecommunications Licences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the outstanding applications for new telecommunications licences, together with the date of the placing of the application with him.

Mr. McLoughlin: The "Register of Licence Applications" which is published weekly by OFTEL lists all applications for new telecommunications licences which have been made since the publication of the duopoly review White Paper in March 1991. The register does not list the dates on which the applications were made; these are provided in the table for all applications under consideration appearing on the register as at 14 January 1994.

Since publication of the White Paper, 35 licences for new telecommunication systems have been issued.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the size of the unused tranche of ECGD support for large defence contracts when this facility was withdrawn in August 1991.

Mr. Needham: It was £392 million.

European Space Year

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's contribution to European Space Year 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: There was no European Space Year 1993 with which the Government was involved. However, the United Kingdom made a significant contribution to International Space Year 1992, which did much to raise awareness of space through a wide variety of events and activities.

Radio Frequencies

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions are imposed on those allocated radio frequencies regarding hiring these out to third parties.

Mr. McLoughlin: Licences issued by the Radiocommunications Agency under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts authorise the licensee to use one or more radio frequencies for specified purposes. Licences are not transferable and do not permit the licensee to hire out radio channels to third parties except for certain types of licences issued to radio dealers and manufacturers to meet the temporary needs of their customers.

Military Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the most recent date on which his Department's export licence unit manual of instructions was revised in respect of weapons or technology used in the manufacture of weapons or military equipment.

Mr. Needham: All staff in the licensing units of the Export Control Organisation were issued with new and very detailed working instructions in March 1993. These instructions are continually brought up to date to reflect changing requirements and circumstances. For example, in the context of arms exports they have just been amended to reflect the use of the new standard document required to accompany consignments of arms transferred between member states of the EC. The ECO will also shortly issue to all its staff a new handbook which will, among other things, consolidate into a single volume many existing separate items of higher level guidance on all aspects of the conduct of the ECO's business.

Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on commercial reprocessing of nuclear fuel of the extra-territorial mandate to the United States President, contained in United States congressional resolution 1163 as part of the amended Defense Authorisation Bill 1994 (HR 2401) to take action to encourage the reduction of and cessation of civil nuclear reprocessing world wide.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have taken note of this resolution, which is not binding on the United States Administration.

Company Accounts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to his Department of the advertising campaign on Classic FM regarding the submission of company accounts; and at whose instigation the campaign was undertaken.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the chief executive of Companies House, for which my Department is responsible. I have, therefore, asked Mr. David Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 14 January 1994:

On 12 January you tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to his department of the advertising campaign on Classic FM regarding the submission of company accounts, and at whose instigation the campaign was undertaken."

Following the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade, I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency.

In the current financial year, Companies House has spent £47,000 on radio advertising with Classic FM with a further £23,500 committed.

This figure includes VAT and covers radio advertising paid for directly by Companies House. The campaign was instigated by Companies House.

The introduction of Late Filing Penalties in July 1992 has provided a major boost to the completeness of the company register. However, many companies appear to remain unsure of their filing obligations and continue to file late. Companies House recognises that awareness of the legal obligations, which include dates by which company accounts must be filed, is an important aspect of the process of enabling companies to meet their obligations under the Companies Acts. We see it as our duty to ensure that we use all reasonable means to make the business community aware of the deadlines for filing the accounts and the mandatory penalties which apply. Independent market research is commissioned to monitor the effectiveness of our communications.

I hope this is helpful to you.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, column 36, when the hon. Member for Don Valley can expect to receive a list of biographical details and relevant dates of appointment of members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have now written to the hon. Member with the information requested. I apologise for any inconvenience caused to the hon. Member by the delay in providing this.

Heating Bills

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, column 681, in what form information in respect of the annual heating bills to his Department's offices is available.

Mr. Eggar: The costs of energy consumption disaggregated by building or by use are not available. Overall expenditure on energy has been:

	£ million
1990-91	5·16
1991-92	5·95
1992-93	5·49

These figures include estimated apportionments of costs in multi-occupancy buildings, and include former Department of Energy buildings throughout. We do not have comprehensive data before 1990-91 and data for 1993-94 have not yet been collated.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Royalties

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what would be the expected net inflow to the United Kingdom recording rights owners of a harmonised European private copying royalty on blank tapes and recording equipment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The European Commission has not submitted any proposal for harmonised European private copyright royalty, nor is it clear whether or when it will do so. It is therefore not possible to say what money flows involving the United Kingdom would occur, since these would be determined by factors which cannot be known in the absence of a proposal, in particular the rate of royalty and whether payments are to be made to nationals of countries outside the European Union.

Television Relay Masts

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average cost of (a) erecting and (b) maintaining local low-power television relay masts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average cost of erecting a low-power broadcaster's television relay station is in the order of £40,000, with maintenance costs of about £3,000 per year. However, these costs can be markedly affected by factors such as site rental and access, laying-on of electricity at remote sites, and mast erection and equipment housing.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) of 12 January, Official Report, column 167, if he will give the basis for his statement on the number of jobs dependent on THORP.

Mr. Eggar: The employment figures given in that answer derive from estimates set out in the British Nuclear Fuels plc document "The Economic and Commercial Justification for THORP". A copy of this document has been placed in the Library of the House.

Accounts Service Agency

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the Accounts Service Agency.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) on 29 October 1993, Official Report, column 805. The review of the Accounts Services Agency has recently been concluded. I hope to make an announcement in the near future.

Rechar 2

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to support the EU Rechar 2 initiative in areas that have suffered substantial job losses in the mining industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: No such initiative yet exists. Precise Commission proposals for the future of the structural fund's community initiatives are still awaited.

Car Prices

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of price differentials wthin the European Community between vehicles made by European Community-based manufacturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The issue of differences in car prices within the European Community has been looked at by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and the European Commission. Neither concluded that the difference in prices was the result of anti-competitive practices but both agreed that the market should be kept under review. Car manufacturers now provide details of car prices to the Commission, which publishes comparative EC price lists for selected vehicles twice a year. The latest data relating to the situation on 1 November 1993 indicate that manufacturers have tended to reduce price differentials for most of their models.

Plutonium Reprocessing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the storage of surpluses of plutonium from reprocessing foreign spent fuel at Sellafield and the length of time that those surpluses will be stored.

Mr. Eggar: Plutonium recovered from reprocessing by British Nuclear Fuels plc will be stored at Sellafield on behalf of the company's customers until transferred to them under safeguards for recycling or other civil purposes. In the meanwhile, storage will be undertaken subject to stringent safety, security and safeguards procedures.

GM Buses-North

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date his Department received the recommendation of the Director-General of Fair Trading regarding the proposed acquisition by British Bus plc of GM Buses-North; what was the substance of the Director General of Fair Trading's recommendation; and when he intends to make a decision on the possible referral of the decision to the Monopolies and mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I understand that the proposed acquisition by British Bus plc of Greater Manchester Buses North Ltd. is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. Ministers in due course shall need to take a decision on whether or not to refer the acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, taking account of advice from the Director General. The substance of his advice is confidential. I can, however, assure the hon. Member that all relevant factors will be taken into account in considering the case.

Post Office

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the review of the Post Office; when his Department is expected to announce the findings of the review; what consultation his Department has undertaken with other countries during the review; what has been the total cost to date of the review exercise; what is the total number of staff employed and resources devoted to the exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received numerous representations on the subject of the Post Office review, including from the Post Office itself, hon. Members, members of the public, other customers of the Post Office, trade unions and other interested parties.

No decisions on the review have yet been taken. We shall make an announcement when they are.

In the course of the review Ministers and officials have looked at the experience of a number of countries in the postal sector, including among others the Republic of Ireland, Sweden, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Australia and Canada.

I gave the outturn costs for consultancy work on the Post Office review and the sale of Parcelforce in 1992-93 to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Central (Mr. Brown), Official Report, 5 November 1993, column 513-14.

I gave the figures for the staff employed on the review in my Department in the reply to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice), Official Report, 25 November 1993, column 111.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be in a position to announce the final EC agreement on those areas within the United Kingdom which will be eligible for objective 5b funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Shortly.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 January 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 759.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the cost to public funds of the support which is to be available to assist private individuals or companies to prepare bids for the purchase of British Coal collieries and property.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 January 1994]: We announced on 25 March 1993 that up to £1 million would be available to assist management and employee buy-out teams preparing to bid for pits offered for licence or main privatisation.

Patenting of Human Genes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 December 1993, Official Report, column 152, if he will set out those criteria which will be used to determine which sequences of nucleotides of specific industrial application, which may be derived from human genes, will be suitable to be patentable.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Since the law does not specifically preclude patents for genetic sequences, judgments need to be made on any applications for patents in this area by the patent examiner dealing with a particular application. These judgments will turn on the individual circumstances of the case and the law provides that they can be tested in the courts. It is therefore not possible for the Patent Office to set down specific criteria to determine which sequences may be patentable.

As explained in the answer of 7 December 1993, normal criteria of novelty and inventive step are used to determine when a sequence of nucleotides is patentable. This means, for novelty, that the sequence must not have been disclosed anywhere before the filing of the application and, in relation to the inventive step, that the patent examiner must make a judgment on the degree of ingenuity involved in locating the gene of interest and any subsequent cloning or sequencing work.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Employees

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will publish details of the numbers employed full and part time in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will break this down by main divisions.

Mr. Beith: Details of those staff employed by the House of Commons Commission are as follows:

Department	Full-time permanent staff	Part-time permanent staff	Fixed term appointees	Secondments
Speaker's Office	11	1	Nil	1
Clerk's Department	170	17	15	5
Serjeant's Department	311	69	1	3
Finance and Administration Department	105	2	5	1
Library	153	33	Nil	1
Official Report	94	5	13	Nil
Refreshment Department	280	36	2	Nil

Fire Regulations

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee when the fire regulations for the Palace of Westminster were last reviewed; and what assessment has been made of their adequacy.

Mr. Ray Powell: The Home Office fire service inspectorate recently reviewed the fire precautions in the Palace of Westminster and recommended additional measures. Works are progressing and a new fire certificate is expected to be issued later this year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Forensic Laboratory

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the site of the former forensic science laboratory at Newtownbreda will be sold; what proposals he has for the future of this site; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not known at present if the Newtownbreda site will be sold. The site is no longer required by the Northern Ireland Office and its future use is currently under consideration.

Defaulters

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average prison sentence imposed for defaulting on a fine; what is the average period actually spent in prison by such a defaulter in Northern Ireland; and what is the average cost of such a person's imprisonment.

Sir John Wheeler: The average prison sentence imposed for fine defaulting in Northern Ireland is 18 days and the average period actually served by such a defaulter is seven days. These figures have remained constant in recent years.

The current weekly cost of a prisoner, inclusive of all categories, in the Northern Ireland prison system is £1,238. No separate figure for fine defaulters is available.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Sir John Wheeler: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Strip Searches

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will refer the practice of strip searching to the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights.

Sir John Wheeler: No. The issues for consideration by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights must be for the commission to determine.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1993 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1992.

Mr. Ancram: In 1993 a total of 268,300 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh County museum—a decrease of 40·5 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1992.

Irish Broadcasting Act 1960

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for a copy of the guidelines issued by broadcasting organisations in the Republic of Ireland arising from the non-renewal of section 31 of the Irish Broadcasting Act 1960 to be placed in the Library; and how many households in Northern Ireland he estimates are able to receive television and radio broadcasts originating from the Irish Republic.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: It is not considered appropriate to place a copy of the guidelines in the Library. It is estimated that approximately 20,000 television sets can receive signals from the Republic in Northern Ireland; radio signals can be received in any interference-free area in Northern Ireland.

"Next Steps" Initiative

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the departments of the Northern Ireland civil service and the Northern Ireland Office are responding to the "next steps" initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The response of the Departments of Northern Ireland Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Office to "next steps" forms an important component of the overall programme of civil service management reform in Northern Ireland.

In the province the important work of the administration has continued in spite of the many difficulties faced by our civil servants, in common with the private sector work force. The "next steps" programme is designed to enhance effectiveness and efficiency, and to improve standards of service and value for money. "Next steps" is the vehicle for providing, through those executive agencies which serve the public in Northern Ireland, the improved quality which is necessary if we are to meet our citizens charter commitments.

In line with the progress reported by the Government recently in the White Paper on the fourth "Next Steps Review" (Cm 2430), agency coverage in Northern Ireland has been increasing steadily. There are now nine agencies in place covering some 30 per cent. of the work force.

We have plans to look at the scope to extend this coverage to include the remaining significant executive activities, and in doing so to establish, on a case-by-case basis, that these activities continue to be appropriate for the civil service.

There is no presumption that every existing business unit must be an agency. We will wish to confirm, by way of prior options studies, that an activity remains necessary, and also to consider whether it should be pursued through privatisation, or contracting out. Four such studies are coming close to completion and are looking in depth at the Public Records Office, the Estate Services Directorate of the Management Executive for HPSS, the Industrial Research and Technology Unit, and the Forensic Science Laboratory. If agency status is agreed for any of these I will make a further announcement.

The schedule set out lists additional studies for which a timetable is now settled. I am still considering further possibilities, and will make another announcement to the House in due course.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Works of Art

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue is forgone by having a lower VAT rate of 2½ per cent. rather than 17½ per cent. on imported works of art; and if he will make a statement on the impact of the seventh VAT directive on this.

Sir John Cope: At present works of art are exempt from VAT at importation into the United Kingdom. Under a derogation from the seventh VAT directive agreed in principle at ECOFIN on 13 December the United Kingdom will apply the standard rate of VAT to one-seventh of the value of works of art at importation. This is expected to yield in a full year about £2 million. To apply the standard rate to the whole value would yield more if the market were unaffected but in practice the amount would depend on the effects of such a measure on the United Kingdom art market.

1993 Budgets

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average percentage loss of annual income due to the March and November 1993 Budgets for the 10 per cent. lowest income group and the 10 per cent. highest income group.

Mr. Dorrell: Relative to indexation, the main tax-related measures taking effect before the next Budget will cost the 10 per cent. of households with the lowest net incomes, adjusted for family composition, just over 1 per cent. of their net income on average and the 10 per cent. of households with the highest net incomes just under 2 per cent. of their net income on average.

Alcohol

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate as to the amount of revenue lost through the purchase of beer made on the continent and sold in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: At this stage Customs and Excise estimate that the revenue loss through illegal sales in the United Kingdom of alcohol and tobacco purchased in other EC member states does not exceed £35 million. The bulk of this is on hand rolling tobacco.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations underlie the practice of destroying alcoholic drinks confiscated by the Customs.

Sir John Cope: Customs destroy seized alcoholic drinks when they judge it necessary to safeguard the Revenue, or to protect the market for legitimate United Kingdom traders, and there is no acceptable alternative means of disposal.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action is being taken to reduce the amount of beer and wine purchased in France for own consumption and then sold in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: The law prescribes severe penalties of up to seven years' imprisonment for anyone attempting to defraud the Revenue in this way. In addition, goods imported by offenders and the vehicles used are liable to seizure. Customs and Excise are using excise verification officers to detect and prosecute the individuals involved. A range of controls are applied, which include checks made at retail outlets. In the 11 months to November 1993, EVOs made 1,016 detections involving £1,624,543 revenue.

Widow's Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Government will save from the reduction in the tax allowance on widow's bereavement allowance.

Mr. Dorrell: At 1994-95 income levels, the full-year yield from restricting the widows' bereavement allowance to 20 per cent. is about £6 million. Restricting this allowance to 15 per cent. as announced for 1995-96, would yield an estimated further £9 million.

Football Pools Betting Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the Government's total income from the football pools betting duty for each of the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 and as a total over the same period.

Sir John Cope: Receipts from pool betting duty were as follows:

	£ million
1991-92	319·5
1992-93	318·2
Total	637·7

Relocation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants were located in Greater London at the beginning of (a) 1964, (b) 1974, (c) 1984 and (d) 1994; and what he expects the figure to be in 2004.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of civil servants, full-time equivalents, located in Greater London, was 131,451 at January 1984 and 111,252 at 1 April 1993, latest available. Data for earlier years are not available; nor are projections made by location.

Unicorn Heritage plc

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what precise grounds (a) Cork Gully recommended that the debt owed by Unicorn Heritage plc be written off and (b) the Treasury accepted that the debt could not be repaid by the directors of the company.

Mr. Dorrell: Cork Gully, as liquidator of Unicorn Heritage plc, assessed the assets and liabilities of the company and on 12 October 1990 informed the English tourist board that there was no prospect of any payment of a dividend to unsecured creditors. As a result on 16 April 1991 the English tourist board decided that it would seek approval for the debt to be written off from the Department of National Heritage and the Treasury, and wrote to the Department of National Heritage on 12 March 1992. In the light of the information provided by Cork Gully and the ETB, the Treasury on 14 May 1993 accepted that there was no prospect of a dividend. As Unicorn Heritage plc had limited liability status the directors were not personally responsible for the debts incurred by the company.

Air Passenger Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made regarding the revenue derived from air passenger duty per annum in respect of (a) scheduled passenger flights to and from airports in Scotland, (b) charter flights to and from airports in Scotland; and (c) scheduled passenger flights to and from airports operated by Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

Sir John Cope: On the basis of statistics provided by the Civil Aviation Authority, the total revenue yield from air passenger duty from passengers departing from Scottish airports is estimated to be around £20 million. Around 55 per cent. of this total is from scheduled flights and 45 per cent. from chartered flights. No separate estimates have been made for arriving passengers as this can give rise to double counting. The revenue yield is likely to be similar to that from departing passengers.

We estimate that around £1 million will be paid from passengers departing from highland and island airports.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which passengers will be exempt from air passenger duty; what types of aircraft will be exempt; what plans there are to exempt users of aircraft flying to and from the Highlands and Islands of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Finance Bill proposes that passengers will be exempt from air passenger duty if they are on the return leg of a domestic return ticket; if they are transferring at a United Kingdom airport to another aircraft or a further flight on the same aircraft; or if they are under two years of age and are not allocated a separate seat before entering the aircraft. Passengers on aircraft taking off from airports outside the United Kingdom will not be within the scope of the duty. Aircraft will be exempt if they have a maximum take-off weight of under 10 tonnes or if they seat fewer than 20 passengers. There are no plans for an exemption for all passengers flying to and from the highlands and islands of Scotland.

Grants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the grants of over £50,000 for commercial and industrial ventures that his Department has written off as not recoverable in the past three years.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 January 1994]: None.

HEALTH

Primary Care Projects

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the projects in primary care under "London: Making the Best Better" that have been financed by the London implementation group and the cost of each project.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1993-94, £40 million has been made available to fund primary care development plans produced by each of the 12 family health services authorities—FHSAs—within the London initiative zone —LIZ. A list will be placed in the Library of projects contained within those plans which are being progressed in 1993-94. Detailed management and monitoring of development programmes is carried out by FHSAs, and costings for individual projects are therefore not available centrally.

Pathology Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the private tendering of pathology services in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: It is for trusts to take account of the range of options available for the provision of pathology services, including provision by the independent sector, in securing the best service for patients.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the time scale for the Government review of pathology services.

Mr. Sackville: The strategic review of pathology services began in November 1993, and is expected to report to the Department in June this year.

Hepatitis B Vaccinations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of surgeons have been vaccinated against hepatitis B.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally, but surgeons have been among the high risk groups recommended to receive hepatitis B vaccine since its introduction in 1982. Guidance to health authorities and trusts was reinforced last August by the issue of the booklet "Protecting Health Care Workers and Patients from Hepatitis B", with accompanying health service guidelines. These guidelines ask provider units to aim to immunise and check the immunity of all surgeons by the middle of 1994. Copies of the booklet and guidelines are available in the Library.

Air Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place a copy of the third report of the advisory group on medical aspects of air pollution episodes, produced in December, in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 December at column 720.

Food Safety

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures are taken in food poisoning investigations to determine sources of infection; and what assessment she has made of the extent to which these measures are adequate;

(2) when the proposed draft guidelines on the investigation of food poisoning will be released for consultation.

Mr. Sackville: It is for the authorities involved to decide upon the structure and priorities of any investigation undertaken regarding an outbreak of food poisoning.

Guidance on the management of such outbreaks will be released for consultation shortly.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library the detailed protocols of the research into the incidence and sources of salmonella food poisoning being administered by the steering group on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Sackville: Copies of a background note summarising the protocol for the steering group's study of infectious intestinal disease in England will be placed in the Library. The study will provide information on the incidence, but not the sources, of salmonella food poisoning. More detailed information about the protocol will be available when the results of the study are published after its completion in 1995.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis the research funding administered by the steering group on the microbiological safety of food has been, or will be, awarded; and whether the research work has been advertised to independent laboratories and research groups, on a tender basis.

Mr. Sackville: The steering group makes decisions on the need for new microbiological food safety surveillance projects on the basis of available epidemiological data and other data on food, food processes and food hygiene. Contracts are awarded by officials in the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on behalf of the steering group to organisations in the public and private sectors with the relevant expertise. Neither of the national projects currently under way was appropriate for tender procedures, given their complexity. It is envisaged that suitable projects will be advertised in the future and subsequent contracts awarded on a tender basis.

Television and Radio Interviews

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the television and radio interviews, and the topics covered, by her and her departmental Ministers between 18 December and 10 January.

Mr. Sackville: The subjects on which Ministers at the Department gave television and radio interviews between 18 December and 10 January are:

Home Alone Children
In vitro Fertilisation
Services for Juvenile Delinquents
Smoking
Reforming London's Health Services

Accident and Emergency Services
Patient's Charter
Drugs Campaign Launch
Family Values—International Year of the Family

Detailed records of individual interviews are not kept. Ministers responded to requests on the topics listed as they were received.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures she can take to prevent the use of in vitro fertilisation as a mechanism for social engineering as in the fixing of foetus characteristics such as sex or ethnicity; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what measures she can take to prevent the use of in vitro fertilisation in respect of post-menopausal women; and if she will use such measures;

(3) what measures she can take to prevent the use of in vitro fertilisation in circumstances such as the mixing of the ethnicity of donor and recipient.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority established by Parliament in 1990 under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act regulates centres carrying out in vitro fertilisation.

The authority maintains a code of practice setting out its requirements for the proper conduct of licensed activities. The code is approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and is laid before Parliament. It makes clear the age of the prospective parents is one factor which should be considered when deciding whether or not in vitro fertilisation should be offered. Where donated eggs or sperm are used in treatment, it is good practice to try to match the physical characteristics of the donor to those of the couple being treated. The use of sex selection techniques in centres licensed by the authority is permitted only for medical reasons. An essential feature of the 1990 Act and the activities regulated under its provisions is the welfare of any child born as a result of treatment.

Mentally Ill Patients

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order independent inquiries into every death caused by patients discharged under medication from mental illness hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: New guidance to the national health service on the discharge of psychiatric patients, issued for consultation on 12 January, states that it will always be necessary to hold an inquiry which is independent of service providers in cases of homicides involving mentally ill people.

NHS Contracts

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take in the event of a dispute between a contractor and a national health service trust, when that dispute is outside the terms of the National Health Service Contracts (Dispute Resolution) Regulations 1991, to ensure that the trust has acted wholly within the law.

Mr. Sackville: National health service contracts between purchasers and providers are subject to the National Health Service Contracts (Dispute Resolution) Regulations 1991. Where a purchaser or provider contracts with the independent sector these contracts will be legal contracts and therefore subject to the proper legal process.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what levels of savings in purchasing and administrative costs have been targeted by the NHS Supplies Authority for the years 1994 to 1996.

Mr. Sackville: The authority is preparing its business plan for 1994-95, and the national health service management executive has not yet, therefore, agreed purchasing or running cost savings targets with the authority for that or subsequent years. The NHS management executive will, however, require the authority to build significantly on the purchasing savings of £57 million which it is on target to achieve in 1993-94, and further to reduce its warehousing and distribution costs through the new logistics strategy currently being prepared.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which the NHS Supplies Authority's financial savings and efficiency targets could be improved or accelerated by transfering it to the private sector; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: After taking independent, specialist consultancy advice, our assessment is that privatisation of the National Health Service Supplies Authority in its present form would not offer the prospect of increased financial savings or increased efficiency, and would risk diverting management effort from the significant service improvements and cost reductions which are being planned. However, the core function of the authority is acknowledged to be purchasing and contracting. Its other activities, particularly warehousing, distribution, and information technology services, could gain added value from more extensive use through market testing of private sector skills, experience and resources. This will be taken forward by the authority as it develops its new logstics and IT strategies.

Psychiatric Hospital Closures

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where published copies of the handbook of good practice in psychiatric hospital closures prepared by the mental health task force are available.

Mr. Bowis: The handbook of good practice will be available shortly and copies will be placed in the Library.

Blood Donors

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 811, whether the screening tests required for blood or plasma collected overseas for processing into blood products to be imported are conducted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: It is a requirement throughout the European Community that all plasma donations used in the manufacture of blood products marketed in the European Community must be screened for hepatitis B, hepatitis C,

HIV 1 and HIV 2. Such testing is performed in the country of origin. For all products which are to be marketed in the United Kingdom, however, samples of plasma pools are submitted for independent testing in the United Kingdom by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the mental health task force towards its strategic objective of developing a vision of the shape of the market for mental health services in years to come.

Mr. Bowis: On 4 October 1993, a conference was held at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre, London on "Mental Health—Visions for the Future". It was organised jointly by the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts, the Association of Directors of Social Services and the Mental Health Task Force. I gave the keynote address and over 200 health service managers and others attended.

The task force support group, which includes many of the major interests in the field, held a seminar in November which sought to anticipate developments in mental health services over the next 20 years. The issues identified by participants and suggestions for further work during 1994 are being considered.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report of the review of mental health nursing.

Mr. Bowis: Shortly.

AIDS Support Grant

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when is the deadline for London boroughs to apply for AIDS support grant for 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The local authority circular LAC(94)3, explaining arrangements for continuation in 1994-95 of the AIDS support grant scheme has been issued and invites authorities to submit their expenditure plans to the Department by 18 February. Copies of the circular are available in the Library.

Oral Health

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department commenced work on the proposals for an oral health strategy.

Dr. Mawhinney: Work on an oral health strategy started in October 1991, with the setting up of an oral health strategy group, chaired by the chief dental officer.

Lister Hospital, Stevenage

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inquiry she has conducted into the placing of the control by North Hertfordshire health trust to manage the pathology services for the Lister hospital, Stevenage.

Mr. Sackville: It is for the trust to determine which source of pathology provision provides the best service for patients, and to specify and monitor the standards to be met in contracts.

Embryology

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken or will take to encourage the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to prevent research into the use of foetal eggs from aborted foetuses for human reproductive purposes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The consultation document on donated ovarian tissue in embryo research and assisted conception issued on 7 January by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority invites comments on whether eggs or ovarian tissue from foetuses should be used in research. The Government welcome this wide-ranging consultation. We look forward to receiving advice from the authority in due course, when we can consider what further action, if any, is required.

Health Care, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is being allocated on 1994-95 to regional health authorities to purchase health care in London; and what was the figure for 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: Allocations are made to the four Thames regions and it is they who allocate to district health authorities in London. For 1993-94 and 1994-95, the main regional allocations were:

£000's

	1993-94	1994-95
North West Thames	1,320,749	[1]1,352,165
North East Thames	1,490,187	1,561,379
South East Thames	1,439,276	1,519,821
South West Thames	1,116,107	[1]1,163,130

[1]The allocations are not directly comparable because of boundary changes.

In addition, the Thames regions will have received during 1993-94 further allocations for specific purposes, some of which will have been deployed in London. Similar allocations will be made during 1994-95.

Information on allocations for 1994-95 is not yet available centrally. The 1993-94 revenue allocations to London DHAs are as follows:

Region and District Health Authority	£,000's
North West Thames
Barnet	99,709

NHS Trusts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to trust hospitals on their pension fund investment policies.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. For an occupational pension scheme to obtain Inland Revenue approval the rules on scheme investment would have to meet Inland Revenue criteria.

Abortion

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking in respect of re-approval of private sector places to carry out termination of pregnancy under the Abortion Act 1967 when the current approval period ends at the end of January.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will be extending by six months from 1 February 1994 current private sector approvals to carry out termination of pregnancy under the Abortion Act 1967, as amended. This will allow the Department of Health to complete a review of current arrangements for approving and monitoring places so approved. Any changes will be introduced from 1 August 1994. All places currently approved under section 1(3) of the Act are being informed.

Staffordshire Ambulance Trust

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet employees of the Staffordshire ambulance trust to discuss patient transport services.

Mr. Sackville: I have no plans to do so. Employee relations in national health service trusts are the responsibility of NHS trust boards.

Royal Orthopaedic Hospital, Birmingham

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the relocation plan on which she approved the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham;

(2) when she gave her approval to the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham.

Dr. Mawhinney: Agreement to the permanent closure of the Birmingham accident and the Royal orthopaedic hospitals was given on 1 February 1993. In order to effect the closures, trauma, orthopaedic, plastic surgery and burns services were to transfer to the Birmingham general hospital and later relocate to the Selly Oak hospital site. In order to make sufficient space at the general hospital, general surgery and general medicine were to be transferred to the Queen Elizabeth and Selly Oak hospitals.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received to change the relocation plan associated with the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since South Birmingham district health authority put forward suggestions for the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital and reprovision of these services on the Selly Oak hospital site, we have received 12 letters from hon. Members and 51 from members of the public.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the South Birmingham health authority financial review into the Royal orthopaedic hospital compiled by KPMG Peat Marwick, a copy of which has been sent to her.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for the South Birmingham district health authority, which commissioned this report, to consider what response, if any, to make to it.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the financial grounds on which she gave her approval to the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham.

Dr. Mawhinney: At the time the proposal for the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital was considered in February 1993, concerns were expressed about a possible loss of income to the hospital as a number of health authorities were signalling their intention of reducing contracts with it. However, the financial position of the hospital was only one of the issues which was considered. The main reason for agreeing the closure of the Royal orthopaedic hospital and reprovision of orthopaedic services on to one site was to improve the quality of care available to patients.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers a health authority has to alter a relocation plan for a hospital scheduled for closure under a different plan approved by her.

Dr. Mawhinney: When a health authority proposes to make significant changes to proposals for hospital closures and service reprovision which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has agreed, we would expect them to consult on their new proposals.

Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the terms of reference of the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference for the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee are:

"To consider and advise on the acceptability of proposals for gene therapy research on human subjects on ethical grounds, taking account of the scientific merits of the proposals and the potential benefits and risks.

To work with other agencies which have responsibilities in this field, including local research ethics committees, and agencies with statutory responsibilities—the Medicines Control Agency, the Health and Safety Executive and the Department of the Environment.

To provide advice to United Kingdom Health Ministers on developments in gene therapy research and their implications."

Crownhill Hospital, Plymouth

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of converting the former Crownhill hospital in Plymouth into offices for Plymouth and Torbay health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Information is available centrally on schemes with a cost of over £1 million. The Crownhill conversion was below this figure and the hon. Member may therefore wish to contact Mrs. Judith Leverton, chairman of the Plymouth and Torbay health authority, for details.

Health Authorities

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether each health authority seeks or holds details of the political affiliations of people nominated to or appointed to it.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not aware that any health authority either seeks or holds such information.

Ambulance Personnel (Retirement)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist in England to allow ambulance personnel employed by district health authorities or NHS trusts to retire at 55 years.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service pension scheme for England and Wales provides for retirement below the age of 60 on grounds of ill health, organisational change, redundancy and in the interests of the efficiency of the service. The employer meets the additional costs involved in cases other than ill health, and resources have been made available in 1993-94 for the ambulance service in England to cover the costs of a limited programme of early retirement.

Pay Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of dedicated NHS pay bed units, their location and number of beds contained in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Clothier Inquiry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external public relations staff from (a) the private sector or (b) other NHS bodies have been employed by (i) Grantham and Kesteven district general hospital, (ii) South Lincolnshire district health authority or (iii) Trent regional health authority to assist with work relating to the Clothier inquiry; and what was the cost of any of these contracts.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for the Trent regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Trent regional health authority, Sir Michael Carlisle, for details.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to date of the Clothier inquiry.

Dr. Mawhinney: Up to 14 January, £96,574.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to oppose in the World Health Assembly the withdrawal of resolution WHA4640 of 14 May 1993 on the request to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion on the legal status of the use by a state of nuclear weapons in armed conflict.

Dr. Mawhinney: The agenda for the May 1994 World Health Assembly has not yet been published. We are unaware of any proposal for a resolution which would negate resolution WHA 46.40.

NHS Beds (Private Use)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the costs to public funds that arise through the provision of authorised NHS beds for private use, listing each separate budget head, and the total costs thereby incurred by each hospital with authorised beds.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1 April 1991 health authorities, on behalf of directly managed units, and trusts have, subject to certain safeguards, been able to determine their own private patient activity. National health service private patient charges are calculated at the appropriate commercial rate generating valuable income for improving services for all patients.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the location and number of authorised NHS beds for private use in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) gave the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 16 March 1992 at columns 857-66 for the latest available information. Since 1 April 1991 health authorities, on behalf of directly managed units, and trusts have, subject to certain safeguards, been able to determine their own private patient activity.

Health Spending, North Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the percentage increase in health spending in the North Essex health authority area in 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The 1994-95 revenue cash limit for North Essex health authority represents a 5·3 per cent. increase over 1993-94. The allocation is made by North East Thames regional health authority.

Brook Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the South East Thames regional health authority authorised the purchase of a second-hand mobile MRI scanner for use at the Brook hospital; when the authority had paid a non-refundable deposit; what was the total cost paid for the scanner and the amounts borne by (a) the authority and (b) Greenwich Healthcare Trust; when the scanner was delivered to the Brook hospial; when it became operational; how many NHS patients have been scanned with this equipment; what consultation took place with consultants at the Brook hospital prior to the purchase of this equipment; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Barker, chairman of South East Thames regional health authority concerning its involvement in the purchase of the MRI scanner at Greenwich Healthcare national health service trust and Mr. Neville Thompson, chairman of Greenwich Healthcare NHS trust about the installation and use of medical equipment at the trust.

GPs (Suspension)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether the actions of the Greenwich and Bexley family health services authority were appropriate and satisfacory in dealing with complaints against the doctor concerned in the recent case raised with her by the hon. Member for Woolwich; and whether the actions of the General Medical Council were appropriate and satisfactory in dealing with the complaints.

Dr. Mawhinney: It would not be right to comment on the actions of Greenwich and Bexley family health services authority in this case until proceedings to which the family health services authority is a party have been formally concluded.

The General Medical Council is an independent statutory body whose constitution and functions are governed by the Medical Act 1983. The council has sole responsibility for the registration and regulation of the medical profession and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health to intervene in the way that it carries out its responsibilities under the Act or to comment on individual cases in which the council has directed the removal of a doctor's name from the register.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if he will list those suffragan bishops for whose salary the Commissioners are responsible, with their dates of appointment, and such suffragan sees as are currently vacant.

Mr. Alison: The suffragan bishops whose stipends the Commissioners are empowered to pay and their dates of appointment are as follows:

(2) how many recommendations from the Education Assets Board are awaiting a decision by his Department; if he will list them; and for how long each of them has been with his Department.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are 17 cases awaiting determination by my right hon. Friend. They are:

[1] Appeal received.

Note: Under the provisions of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the Education Assets Board (EAB) may determine the transfer of property, rights and liabilities in respect of further education institutions where it appears that agreement between the parties is unlikely to be reached. Under the 1992 Act both the institution and local authority have the right of appeal to the Secretary of State against determinations made by the EAB.

Of the 17 cases being considered by my right hon. Friend, 13 involve the transfer of land and/or property. They are:

GRANT-MAINTAINED SCHOOLS

Abbotswood School, Hampshire—A dispute with Hampshire county council concerning the ownership of an area of land which acts as an access road to the school and another of the council's properties.

Arnewood School, Hampshire—A dispute concerning the ownership of a recreation centre and land used by the school and community.

Dartford Grammar School for Girls, Kent—A dispute between the school and Kent county council over (i) transfer of an area of playing field, (ii) pedestrian rights of access and (iii) transfer of a further area of land.

Great Barr School, Birmingham—A dispute between the school and Birmingham county council over the ownership of an adjacent sports hall and an area of playing field which is used by both the school and the local community.

Kingsley Park School, Northamptonshire—A dispute between the school and Northamptonshire county council over the transfer of a gymnasium block in a building on the school site which is also used by another of the Authority's schools.

Pate's Grammar School, Gloucestershire—A dispute between the school and Gloucestershire county council over the transfer of the site of a former secondary school which had been leased to Pate's grammar school whilst major building work was carried out on their own school site.

Ringwood School, Hampshire—A dispute concerning the ownership of a recreation centre and land used by the school and community.

St. George's School, Lincolnshire—The dispute with Lincolnshire county council concerns the ownership of a property the school shares with the county's adult education and library services and an area of land which is also used by a local scout group.

Thamesview School, Kent—A dispute between the school and Kent county council concerning the transfer of a house occupied by a teacher at the school.

Wilson's School, London Borough of Sutton—This dispute concerns the authority's refusal to sign documents transferring ownership of property to the school pending clarification of the authority's continued use of a swimming pool owned by the school's Trustees.

HIGHER EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS

Greenwich—A dispute between the London borough of Wandsworth, which inherited ILEA's education responsibilities in the area, and Thames polytechnic (now the university of Greenwich) over the transfer of the freehold of property known as Manresa house, and the grounds surrounding this property. Wandsworth use part of Manresa house for adult education.

Falmouth School of Art and Design—A dispute between Cornwall county council and Falmouth school of art and design over the transfer of properties in Falmouth and Camborne, used by the school.

FURTHER EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS

Lincolnshire College of Agriculture and Horticulture—This appeal case concerns the Education Assets Board's determination that ownership of a veterinary investigation centre which was used prior to 1 April 1993 under a lease between Lincolnshire county council and the Minister of Public Buildings and Works should transfer to the college.

Student Awards

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 72, if he will publish in the Official Report the comparable figures on the percentage of dependent students receiving full and nil maintenance given in the "Statistics of Education Student Awards" volume for 1988-89 to 1990-91; and what is the reason for the differences between those figures and the data given in his previous answer.

Mr. Boswell: Figures on the percentage of dependent students receiving full and nil maintenance published in the Statistics of Education Student Awards Volume show scale 1 and scale 2 contributions as follows:

Percentage of dependent students receiving full and nil maintenance in England and Wales.

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91[1]
Scale 1
full maintenance	28·8	27·3	27·5
nil maintenance	30·7	33·0	32·4
Scale 2
full maintenance	29·6	27·4	27·0
nil maintenance	23·1	25·8	28·3

[1] Calculated from subset of LEAs able to provide data.

The figures given in the reply of 11 January, Official Report, column 72 differed from these in that they represented the combination of the two scales.

Education Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to issue vouchers to parents to pay towards education costs.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no present plans to do so.

Higher National Diploma Courses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ensure that students who are entitled to a mandatory grant for a higher national diploma course are allowed to continue to receive that grant for a degree at another institution while continuing to study the same subject.

Mr. Boswell: A student who has already received a mandatory award for an HND course and who goes on to study for a first degree will normally be eligible for a further, modified mandatory award for the final year or years of a designated first degree course, depending upon its duration. Local education authorities can make discretionary payments in respect of any other year. It is for individual institutions to decide whether to give exemption from any part of the course to students enrolling on a first degree course who have already completed an HND in the same subject.

Further Education

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds in the Doncaster area continued in full-time education in each year since 1988.

Mr. Boswell: The numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds in the Doncaster LEA continuing in full-time education in each year since 1988 are shown in the table.

16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education in the Doncaster LEA Area Age as at 31 August at the start of the academic year

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
16 Year Olds	1,824	1,873	1,934	1,987
17 Year Olds	1,280	1,278	1,332	1,444

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in England have fewer than 20 pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1993, 200 schools in England had fewer than 20 full-time equivalent pupils.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the Registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Boswell: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Schools, Wandsworth

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Chisholm) of 14 December 1993, Official Report, column 825, how many children at the latest available date in the borough of Wandsworth were (a) in attendance in nursery classes or nursery schools, (b) in reception classes in primary schools under school starting age and (c) in other pre-school groups; how many (i) qualified nursery teachers, (ii) qualified nursery nurses and (iii) other qualified or non-qualified teachers and nurses, were employed in the borough on nursery education at the latest available date; and what is the latest estimate of the number of children aged three and four years currently resident in that borough.

Mr. Robin Squire: In Wandsworth, in January 1993 —the latest date for which information on schools is available—there were nearly 2,400 pupils below compulsory school age in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools. A further 1,700 pupils below compulsory school age were in infant classes in maintained primary schools. Information on reception classes only is not collected centrally.

The maintained nursery schools and nursery classes were staffed by 71 full-time equivalent teachers, of whom two were unqualified 75 full-time equivalent qualified nursery assistants and a further 26 full-time equivalent unqualified nursery assistants and other education support staff.

As regards other pre-school groups, we are informed by the Pre-school Playgroups Association that their member playgroups in Wandsworth had nearly 400 three and four-year-olds in attendance in mid-1992, the latest date for which such information is available. Information on other forms of pre-school group provision, such as day nurseries, is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Information on nursery classes in independent or special schools is not collected centrally.

In January 1993, the estimated three and four-year-old population in Wandsworth was just over 6,000. I should perhaps add that Wandsworth now has a policy of offering a nursery class place to all parents who want one for the year before entering compulsory education. This policy is not yet fully reflected in the figures available.

University Expenditure

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what amount of university student fees was paid by Her Majesty's Government in the academic years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; what is the expected level of expenditure for 1993-94 and 1994-95; and how much was spent per registered student in each of the years;

(2) what was the level of Government expenditure on student grants in (a) higher and (b) further education in the academic years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; what are the expected levels of expenditure for 1993-94 and 1994-95; and how much was spent per registered student in each of the years.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend pays 100 per cent. specific grant to local education authorities—LEAs—in England and Wales in respect of their expenditure on mandatory awards in respect of students who are domiciled in their areas. Mandatory awards, which cover both maintenance grants and fees, are available to eligible students attending full-time or sandwich courses provided by institutions including universities in the United Kingdom and leading to a first degree or comparable qualification, or to a diploma in higher education or the higher national diploma. They are also available for full-time and part-time courses of initial teacher training. Mandatory awards are not availble for further education courses. LEAs may give discretionary awards to students on such courses and to students who are personally ineligible for a mandatory award but must meet the expenditure themselves.

Departmental records of expenditure and plans relate to financial years. It is not possible to distinguish expenditure on fees to universities from fees for other higher education institutions. The actual expenditure on mandatory awards and the average expenditure per award holder in the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93 are shown in the table. The table also shows the total announced expenditure for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland are responsible for Government expenditure on support for students domiciled in Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively. The table therefore relates to expenditure in England and Wales only.

	Total Expenditure		Average per Student[1]
	Fees £ million	Maintenance £ million	Fees £	Maintenance £
1990-91	593	701	1,228	1,451
1991-92	1,172	813	2,178	1,511
1992-93	1,559	985	2,467	1,559
[2]1993-94	1,534	1,098
[3]1994-95	1,171	1,145

[1] Average per award holder.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much has been spent on the administration of the Student Loans Company; how many people are employed by the company; and how many cases of non-repayment have been legally pursued under (a) Scottish law and (b) English and Welsh law.

Mr. Boswell: These are matters for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the pupil to teacher ratio as at January 1993 for each local education authority in (a) the primary sector, (b) the secondary sector and (c) overall.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Primary School Classes

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average size of maintained primary school classes taught by one teacher in January.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1993—the latest date for which information is available—the average size of single teacher classes in maintained primary schools in England was 26·6.

Quangos

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the grants given to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations by his Department in each year from 1985.

Mr. Boswell: The grants given to the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department are listed in the table. Those made to the research councils and to the Sports Council, formerly sponsored by the then Department of Education and Science and now by the Office of Public Service and Science and the Department of National Heritage respectively, are published in the appropriation accounts, copies of which are in the Library.

Home Students

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time home students in the United Kingdom are over the age of 50 years.

Mr. Boswell: In the academic year 1992-93, there were 5,400 full-time, home-domiciled higher education students aged 51 and over in the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Fast Food Industry (Wages)

4. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring is undertaken by his Department of wage levels in the fast food industry.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on earnings of workers in catering, including the fast food industry, is collected as part of the new earnings survey.

Railway Engineering Industry

13. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the jobs lost in the railway engineering industry since April 1992; and how many of those losses have occurred in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the form requested.

Departmental Efficiency

14. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve the efficiency of his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have embarked on a programme of market tests. Early results are good news for the taxpayer, with savings of 52 per cent. on typing services, 33 per cent. on reprographic services and 42 per cent. on security services.

Industrial Relations

15. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on industrial relations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Hunt: Thanks to this Government's reforms of industrial relations and trade union law, the number of strikes is the lowest for over a century.

Health and Safety Executive (Grant Aid)

16. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made as to the effect of the proposed cut in grant aid to the Health and Safety Executive on charges to industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply to the hon. Members for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) and for Leeds, East (Mr. Mudie).

Statutory Minimum Wage

17. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effects on employment levels of a statutory minimum wage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The introduction of a statutory national minimum wage of the kind proposed by the Labour party makes economic nonsense. It could cost up to 2 million jobs and would irreversibly damage the labour market.

The Government's policies are designed to create the conditions for an effective and flexible labour market.

Employment, Warwickshire

18. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current levels of employment in Warwickshire; and what they were in 1983 and 1987.

Miss Widdecombe: Information by county as opposed to regions is only available from the periodic censuses of employment. Employment in Warwickshire rose from 176,900 in September 1984 to 180,700 in September 1987, and to 186,600 in September 1991.

Industrial Relations

19. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent record on strikes.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1979 the United Kingdom lost 1,270 working days per thousand employees; in 1992 we lost 24.

Employment (Construction)

20. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many construction jobs have been lost since the beginning of 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the exact form requested but between March 1990 and September 1993 employment in the construction industry in Great Britain fell by 424,000.

Statutory Working Week

21. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has made about the cost to United Kingdom industry of a statutory 35-hour limit on the working week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A compulsory 35-hour weekly limit would cost United Kingdom industry up to £20,000 million. It would be disastrous for competitiveness, jobs and the economic recovery.

Youth Training

22. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special measures he plans to offer training and employment opportunities to young people in local communities with particularly high rates of unemployment.

Miss Widdecombe: Unemployment need not be an option for young people because this Government guarantee a training place for 16 and 17-year-olds who have left full-time education and do not yet have a job.

Our plans also include the introduction of modern apprenticeships offering young people high quality work-based training leading to higher level qualifications.

If employers respond, as we hope they will, modern apprenticeships will treble to over 40,000 a year the number of young people who qualify at national vocational qualification level 3 or above through our programmes in England.

23. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of youth training.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1983, over 3½ million young people have benefited from high quality vocational training by participating in youth training and its predecessors. The increasing availability of youth credits and the introduction of modern apprenticeships will encourage even more young people to train, and to higher levels.

Building Sites (Accidents)

24. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents occured on building sites in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures for the most recent year available, 1992-93, show that 15,885 injuries, including those to members of the public, arose from accidents in the construction industry reported to the relevant enforcing authorities. This is lower than for the previous four years 1988-89 to 1991-92 at 21,509, 22,872, 22,337, and 19,772 respectively.

Employment Service

25. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the north of England have been placed in work by the Employment Service in the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 79,600 job placings were made by the Employment Service in the north of England in the 12 month period ending 3 December 1993. More than 70,000 of these placings were of unemployed people. Over 19,000 were people unemployed more than six months, and 2,200 were unemployed people with disabilities.

Apprenticeships

26. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the current number of apprenticeships in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the labour force survey suggest that in summer 1993, nearly 190,000 people were undertaking some form of trade apprenticeship in England and Wales.

Health and Safety

27. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the change in the number of health and safety inspectors over the last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Over the 12 months to 1 December 1993, the number of health and safety inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive has increased by 70 from 1,533 to 1,603.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Data Protection Act 1984, the Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act.

The Department is committed to observing the data protection principles when it obtains and processes personal data. Where the Department contracts with a third party for the processing of personal data, the contracts stipulate that the Act must be complied with.

The registrar's powers to promote compliance with the principles apply to both the owner of the personal data and the service provider. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act. Further arrangements for him to discharge his duties effectively are not considered to be necessary.

Access to Work

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what support will be available to a disabled person whose employer refused to contribute as proposed under the access to work scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In reaching final decisions about the details of the access to work scheme, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Henley are considering carefully a range of representations made by disability and employer groups, including representations about the proposed employer contribution. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State hopes to announce decisions soon.

Girocheques

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for 3Employment (1) what irregularities there have been in the delivery of unemployment benefit girocheques in the Doncaster area during the past four months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) by what method unemployment benefit girocheques are currently delivered to the Doncaster area.

Mr. Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the method by which unemployment benefit girocheques are delivered to the Doncaster area and what irregularities have occurred in their delivery over the last four months.

It may be helpful if I explain that the Employment Service (ES) is in the process of updating it's benefit payments computer system. The National Unemployment Benefit Computer (NUBS 1) has been in operation since the mid eighties. We are currently replacing it with NUBS 2; this process will be complete by the end of September 1994.

For people on Training for Work, Learning for Work and Community Action, payments are made by a different system, the Employment Service Payments system (ESP).

NUBS 1 girocheques are processed at Reading, and NUBS 2/ESP at Washington, Tyne and Wear. The Royal Mail service for each of these is different.

It is the objective of the ES to achieve delivery of a girocheque to clients within three working days of attending the local office to make the declaration which generates a payment. Clients are given this information in writing when they first attend to claim benefit.

Under NUBS 1 girocheques are produced in postcode order and are sorted on the Reading site by Royal Mail staff. They are then transported by rail, road or air depending on the destination. Many of the destinations are served by "direct bags" which go directly to the local Royal Mail delivery office.

The NUBS 2 girocheques are postcode sorted at the point of despatch (Washington) and delivered direct to the Royal Mail delivery offices via Royal Mail Streamline courier service. This ensures that bags containing the girocheques do not enter the Royal Mail system until the bags reach the destination town and it is only then that they are opened.

ESP girocheques are sent direct to clients from Washington via the normal First Class post. To support the use of First Class post, offices are loaded onto the Area Computer Centre closest to their own locality.

Close liaison is maintained between NUBS/ESP management teams and their Royal Mail counterparts to ensure that delivery systems support the ES business objectives and, where problems occur, remedial action is urgently introduced.

During the last four months there have been 15 delays in the receipt of girocheques reported in Doncaster. Eleven of these were ESP payments and four were NUBS 2. In each case the girocheque was delivered within three days. It appears that clients have reported non receipt after two days as a delay.

At Mexborough, there have been nine reported delays in receipt of NUBS 1 giros since September 1993. All of these were caused by split responsibility for Mexborough postcodes between Rotherham and Sheffield sorting offices. It has now been arranged for Royal Mail staff at Reading to perform a more precise identification of mail to ensure that it goes to the correct sorting office in future. Again it is confirmed that none of the delays exceeded three days between signing and receipt.

I hope this is helpful.

Paternity Leave

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to arrange paternity leave for fathers upon the birth of a baby to their wife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. Matters such as this are best dealt with by agreement between the parties concerned, taking account of their particular circumstances.

Labour Statistics

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for employment how many people in the United Kingdom are in work, as a percentage of the total population of working age; and what information he has as to the figure in each other EC country.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is as follows:

Total employment as a percentage of the population aged 15 to 64; 1991[1]

	Per cent.
Denmark	76
Portugal	71
United Kingdom	69
Germany	65
Netherlands	63

Ireland	52
Spain	49

Source: OECD, except United Kingdom (Employment Department).
[1] 1991 is the latest year for which comparable data are available.

Poly Aluminium Chloride

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what regulations exist laying down safety standards for the production and handling of poly aluminium chloride and aluminium chlorohydrate.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992 require employers to make appropriate arrangements to control risks to the health and safety of their employees whilst they are at work. In addition, where there are specific risks from the production, handling or other use of chemical substances, the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988—COSHH—will apply. These include requirements for exposure to these compounds to be prevented or, where this is not reasonably practicable, adequately controlled.

Industrial Relations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines he has issued to large companies concerning their responsibilities under the provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The statutory procedure for handling redundancies, originally enacted in the Employment Protection Act 1975, was incorporated into the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidated) Act in October 1992. The provisions are explained in the Employment Department's leaflet "Redundancy Consultation and Notification". Information and advice is also available from the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS).

Memory Lane Cakes, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representations he has received concerning the announced redundancies at Memory Lane Cakes, Maesycoed road, Cardiff;

(2) what notification he received from Memory Lane Cakes, Maesycoed road, Cardiff, under the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, concerning redundancies over the Christmas and new year period.

Miss Widdecombe: Information given to the Department under the redundancy handling provisions is provided in confidence.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of information technology services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Scott: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of benefit savings achieved in 1992-93 when the child support unit was acting as a shadow agency taking responsibility for the collection of existing child maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The child support unit achieved benefit savings of £313 million.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the Child Support Agency takes into consideration for housing expenditure loans which have been taken out in order to provide handicapped accommodation.

Mr. Burt: Where a loan is taken out to purchase a property, the interest and capital repayments are taken into account in calculating the parent's essential expenditure. If the parent or his partner is disabled, there is no upper limit to the amount allowed. The costs of a loan are also allowed where it is taken out for improvements to a property which a child support officer considers reasonable in the circumstances.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration has been given to introducing a level of disregard of income from invalidity benefit and disabled living allowance for Child Support Agency assessments.

Mr. Burt: Disability living allowance, which recognises the special care and mobility needs of disabled people, is disregarded in full in the assessment of child maintenance. Invalidity benefit, which is payable to people who have been incapable of work for more than 28 weeks through illness, is taken into account in the same way as net earnings would be if the parent were working.

Our proposed increase in the "protected income" provided for in the assessment of child support maintenance liability means that an absent parent whose only source of income is invalidity benefit will not be required to pay maintenance.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many copies of "The Proposed Changes to Child Support Maintenance" were published; when they were printed; and at what cost.

Mr. Burt: Five hundred thousand copies of "The Proposed Changes to Child Support Maintenance" were published. These were printed at the beginning of January at a total cost of £21,691—zero VAT.

Students (Council Tax)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of making students eligible for council tax benefit.

Mr. Burt: The vast majority of students are not liable for council tax because they live in student-only accommodation, such as halls of residence, which is exempt for council tax purposes. Only a minority of students will be liable for council tax where they share accommodation with people who are not also students. Many of them are currently able to claim help through council tax benefit if they are vulnerable students, for example, lone parents and disabled students, or part-time students. Council tax benefit can also be claimed by the partners of students and any liable student may claim second adult rebates if he or she satisfies the normal conditions of entitlement.

No information is held about the number of students who are liable for council tax but are not eligible to claim council tax benefit and it is not possible, therefore, to estimate the additional cost of allowing all students access to council tax benefit.

Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contribution his Department made to the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in terms of financial support, practical suport for particular events and the provision of information.

Mr. Hague: We have worked closely with the Department of Health, which had overall co-ordinating responsibility for the year. We provided a total of £79,000 to support the funding for the year, together with an officer on secondment to the secretariat at an approximate cost of £11,000. Officials have sat as members of both the European Community and the United Kingdon advisory committees to oversee the varied programme of events. The Benefits Agency produced a new client group leaflet to inform older pensioners and their carers of their benefits rights as part of its continuing improved customer care provisions for older people and, working with the voluntary sector, organised a co-ordinated programme of information activities nationwide.

Disability

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that moneys, not taken up by applications to the independent living fund 1993 in the current financial year, will still be earmarked for the living expenses of severely disabled people.

Mr. Scott: The independent living—1993—fund receives a grant in aid from the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland.

Payments to the fund are made on a monthly basis according to the most recent estimates of its present and future commitments.

Normal Government accounting rules apply to any unallocated provision.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of each component of (a) disability living allowance and (b) attendance allowance in the Doncaster area.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Administration

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the administration from Northern Ireland of Department of Social Security benefits to Doncaster; if this procedure is currently under review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: No social security benefits for people in Doncaster are administered from Northern Ireland.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the number of people who draw their state retirement pension while continuing to work.

Mr. Hague: it is estimated that approximately 663,000 people in the United Kingdom receiving state retirement pension also have income from earnings.

Source: 1990 and 1991 family expenditure surveys.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of pensioners who will not receive the full 50p and 70p increases in the pension in compensation for VAT on fuel because they neither qualify for a full state pension nor claim income-related benefits.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested.

At 31 March 1993, 937,610 retirement pensioners resident in Great Britain received a pension at less than the standard rate, 135,940 of whom were in receipt of income support, and both benefits were paid by a combined order book.

Information regarding the number receiving income support and retirement pension at less than standard rate where payment is made separately is not available.

Information regarding the number receiving retirement pension at less than standard rate and an income-related benefit other than income support is not available.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the number of people who retire from paid employment each year.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the proportion of (a) men and (b) women who deferred drawing their state pension in each year since 1988 for which figures are available.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested.

The table shows the estimated percentage of men aged 65 to 69 and women aged 60 to 64 in Great Britain who were not in receipt of retirement pension, invalidity benefit or widow's benefit in the years 1988 to 1993. Included in the percentage figures are those who did not have underlying entitlement to retirement pension and therefore were not deferring drawing state pension.

Year	Percentage of men aged 65-69 in Great Britain not in receipt of Retirement Pension or Invalidity Benefit	Percentage of women aged 60-64 not in receipt of Retirement Pension, Invalidity Benefit or Widow's Benefit

1990	2	26
1991	3	25

Housing Benefit

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much is paid in housing benefit, to how many households, each year in (a) Ealing, (b) London and (c) England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the tables.

Housing Benefit expenditure and recipients

Notes:

Expenditure figures have been rounded to the nearest million.

Caseload figures are averages and rounded to the nearest thousand. They also include estimates for non-responding authorities.

Information is supplied for rent rebate and rent allowance cases only—rate rebate cases are excluded from the figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds currently receive housing benefit in the Doncaster area; and what percentage this represents of those in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

Housing Allowance

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum amount of weekly housing allowance paid to a single unemployed person in London.

Mr. Burt: From a 1 per cent. sample of cases, the maximum weekly amount of housing benefit found in 1992 in London, where the claimant was single and unemployed, was £134·21.

Notes:

(i) The data has been obtained from a 1 per cent. sample of cases, therefore, the figure is the maximum in the sample and the highest amount payable may not have been included.

(ii) "Housing Allowance" has been assumed to mean housing benefit.

(iii) "Unemployed" has been defined as those in receipt of unemployment benefit.

(iv) "London" has been defined as the inner and outer London boroughs.

Data Sources:

The housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system and the income support annual statistical inquiry. The enquiries are a 1 per cent. sample of cases in Great Britain in May 1992.

Fuel Bills

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by location, for each of his Department's properties in the Doncaster area, the annual fuel heating bills by year for the last four years.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Thorne Caller Office	This is a building jointly occupied and as the Department is the minor occupier no figures are available.

Notes:

1. Prior to April 1991, fuel and utility charges for the Government estate were met by the Property Services Agency and details are, therefore, not held by this Department.
2. Fuel bills include a range of energy use, such as hot water, lighting and air conditioning and it is therefore not possible to identify the heating element of each bill.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Scott: This Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-1993 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Family Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current estimate of eligible households in the Doncaster area which do not claim family benefit; what means are used to improve the take-up rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Take-up figures for family credit are not available on a regional basis. The latest estimates for take-up of family credit for Great Britain for 1991 are that 64 per cent of families eligible to receive the benefit were claiming it, and that 71 per cent of available benefit was being claimed. [1]As at 24 December 1993, 2,876 families in Doncaster were receiving family credit.

There have been family credit advertising campaigns every year since 1989 which have stimulated claims and increased awareness. Over this period, the case load has increased from 280,000 in 1989 to around half a million now. The 1993 campaign was aimed at helping the unemployed understand how in-work benefits could help them to return to work. We have introduced special fast track procedures for people just starting work which enable the vast majority of urgent claims to family credit to be cleared, and payment issued, within one week. These special arrangements, in both employment and DSS local offices, help with completing the claim form and ensure that people starting work are aware of family credit. The family credit helpline, launched in April 1993, receives over 30,000 calls a week.

A continuing aspect of family credit awareness is the personalised message in the child benefit order book—or notification of automatic credit transfer payment—which tells the family concerned how much income they can have and still be eligible for family credit. A further stimulus to take-up of small amounts is the introduction from October 1993 of lump sum awards of family credit for awards of £4 a week or less. This provides one-off payments of up to £104, encouraging more people to claim and helping with back-to-work expenses.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation, London

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claiming unemployment benefit are living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in each of the London boroughs; and what are the costs to the Exchequer at the latest available date.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Raynaud's Disease

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific help with increased heating and fuel bills will be available to those with Raynaud's disease after the imposition of VAT on fuel.

Mr. Burt: Those with Raynaud's disease may be entitled to receive any of the wide range of social security benefits which are available, subject to individual circumstances. Details of the extra help in respect of VAT on domestic fuel were given in reply to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 30 November 1993 at columns 437-38.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by parliamentary constituency in London the number of people who will be affected by the decision to reduce the entitlement to unemployment benefit from 12 months to six months.

Mr. Burt: Information on the rates of benefit received by unemployed people residing in a particular parliamentary constituency is not available and no estimate can be made of the numbers in each London constituency who may be affected by the introduction of jobseeker's allowance in April 1996.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the numbers of (a) males and (b) females leaving the unemployment register in the latest statistically convenient recent time period (i) because of loss of unemployment benefit without succeeding to eligibility for income support while remaining without work and (ii) loss of eligibility for income support due to spouse finding work.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

TRANSPORT

Supplementary Grant

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for each (a) county council, (b) metropolitan district and (c) London borough a summary of the transport supplementary grant made available for each of the past five years, broken down into (i) committed major schemes (gross), (ii) newly supported major schemes, (iii) bridge works, (iv) principal roads carriageways, (v) local safety schemes, (vi) packages, (vii) scheme specific, including bus priority, (viii) bus priority alone, (ix) minor works, (x) European regional development fund schemes and (xi) Industrial Development Act schemes;

(2) if he will list for each (a) county council, (b) metropolitan borough and (c) London borough in England a summary of the transport capital expenditure settlement for local authorities for each of the past five years, broken down into (i) committed major schemes gross, (ii) newly supported major schemes, (iii) bridge works, (iv) principal roads carriageways, (v) local safety schemes, (vi) packages, (vii) scheme specific, including bus priority, (viii) bus priority alone, (ix) minor works, (x) European regional Development fund schemes and (xi) Industrial Development Act schemes.

Mr. MacGregor: I am placing the information in the Library. Tables 1 to 5 show the amounts of expenditure accepted for transport supplementary grant under the various categories. Grant is payable at 50 per cent. of accepted expenditure.

Airport Regulation

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the system of economic regulation of airports.

Mr. Norris: I have asked officials to review the system of economic regulation of airports established under the Airports Act 1986. This review will include examination of the role of the CAA and MMC, the frequency and cost of reviews of designated airports, and the benefit of any alternative systems. The aim is to produce a discussion paper in spring 1994.

Christmas Drink-drive Campaign

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the results of the Christmas drink-drive campaign (a) in 1993 and (b) in previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The results this year show continuing good progress in reducing drink-driving.

I am very grateful to the police for the excellent support they have given. In England and Wales they conducted nearly 11 per cent more breath tests than in the 1992 Christmas campaign. I am also grateful to all those who supported the campaign through sponsorship or publicity at national and local level.

Final figures for England and Wales show that the proportion of drivers tested who were over the legal limit was 6·8 per cent., compared with 7·2 per cent. in the 1992 Christmas campaign and 7·9 per cent. in the 1991 campaign. This is a significant reduction, bearing in mind that progress must become more difficult as the problem is reduced.

It is clear, therefore, that if we are to keep up this rate of progress we must maintain our efforts to get the message across that drinking and driving wrecks lives.

Light Rapid Transit Schemes

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the bids for financial assistance for light rapid transit schemes that he is currently considering.

Mr. Freeman: Bids for financial assistance for light rapid transit schemes are submitted by local authorities as part of the annual local authority transport expenditure round. The outcome of the 1993 bidding round, covering expenditure in 1994-95, was announced on 15 December 1993, Official Report, columns 699-706. Bids for expenditure in 1995-96 will be invited later this year.

Light rapid transit schemes may be eligible for grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968. Applications for section 56 funding are under consideration in respect of light rapid transit schemes in Birmingham—Midland Metro—Leeds—Leeds Supertram—and Nottingham—Greater Nottingham light rapid transit.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budget provision he has to support light rapid transit schemes in the current and future financial years.

Mr. Freeman: There is no budget provision specifically reserved for light rapid transit schemes. Future proposals for funding of such schemes will be considered as part of the package approach to local transport expenditure.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the light rapid transit schemes to which he has made financial contributions; and if he will detail the total amount contributed and the amount paid in each financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have made funding available for the Manchester Metrolink and South Yorkshire Supertram schemes, and for some preliminary expenditure in connection with Midland Metro. The figures are as follows:

(£ million)

	1988-89 and 1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	[1]1993-94
Manchester Metrolink
Credit approval	16·88	31·25	23·00	6·00	—
Grant	5·88	27·68	20·75	1·75	—
Midland Metro
Credit approval	—	—	0·75	3·46	—
Grant	—	—	0·40	0·44	—
SY Supertram
Credit approval	—	8·70	14·10	22·60	35·30
Grant	1·10	2·95	6·40	20·50	14·50

[1] Original allocation subject to adjustment in the course of the year.

As part of the local authority transport settlement announced on 15 December 1993, Official Report, columns 699-706, we have made further provision of £54·71 million for the funding of South Yorkshire supertram in 1994-95.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to cut the amount of uncollected vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Key: The number of VED evaders brought to book has steadily increased in recent years following the implementation of the recommendations of an efficiency scrutiny, the introduction of new technology, and the continuing programme of joint local campaigns with the police. Last year over 435,000 evaders were penalised with £37·5 million in revenue recovered. In addition, an estimated 180,000 evaders relicensed as a direct result of enforcement action, recovering an extra £14 million. This trend is set to continue.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many convictions there were in each of the last 10 years in respect of non-payment of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Key: The figures for successful prosecutions and out of court settlements are set out in the table.

	Out of court settlements	Successful prosecutions	Total cases successfully completed
1984-85	123,000	167,000	290,000
1985-86	136,000	179,000	315,000
1986-87	159,000	186,000	345,000
1987-88	173,000	183,000	356,000
1988-89	185,000	187,000	372,000
1989-90	190,000	180,000	370,000
1990-91	223,000	163,000	386,000
1991-92	243,000	177,000	420,000
1992-93	242,000	193,000	435,000
[1]1993-94	237,000	213,000	450,000

[1] Projected.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff, and how much staff time, was invested in tackling non-payment of vehicle excise duty in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: The staff figures, expressed in man years, are as follows:

	Man years
1984-85	900
1985-86	908
1986-87	943
1987-88	973
1988-89	975
1989-90	973
1990-91	983
1991-92	936
1992-93	957
1993-94	992

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the amount of vehicle excise duty uncollected in each of the last 10 years; and what estimates he has made for the current and future years.

Mr. Key: Estimates of the revenue loss through evasion of vehicle excise duty in Great Britain are as follows:

	Revenue loss £ million	Car VED rate £
1984-85	80	90
1985-86	85	100
1986-87	90	100
1987-88	95	100
1988-89	100	100
1989-90	105	100
1990-91	105	100
1991-92	105	100
1992-93	130	110
1993-94	145	125 130

Estimates are derived from periodic roadside surveys. Details of the most recent survey can be obtained from the transport statistics report "Vehicle Excise Duty Evasion in Great Britain in 1989-90", which is available in the House of Commons Library. The next survey is planned for later this year.

Airports (Baggage Reconciliation)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the names of all airports in the United Kingdom where trials on potential baggage reconciliation technology have taken place over the past five years, or are currently taking place, the date on which each trial commenced and was completed, the nature of the technology involved, the company undertaking the trial, the commissioning organisation for each trial, and whether the results of the trial were published or made available to his Department; and if he will place details of the trials in the Library.

Mr. Norris: Though the Department of Transport has stated its requirements for baggage reconciliation, known as accounting and authorising for carriage, it is not the commissioning agent for trials of baggage reconciliation technology as its requirements can be met in a number of ways. Technology trials are therefore conducted as a result of commercial arrangements between airports, airlines, handling agents and the suppliers of baggage reconciliation systems. To the Department's knowledge, such trials have taken place or are under way at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Manchester airports, and there may be or may have been trials at other locations.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality and security, the Department is not able to provide the details requested of the trials without the consent of those involved.

Chelmsford Bypass

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to begin on widening the A12 Chelmsford bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Subject to the present review of the trunk road programme we hope to consult the public about our proposals for widening the A12 Chelmsford bypass later this year. Further progress will depend on the successful outcome of subsequent statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

ENVIRONMENT

Franchise Rights

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the role of local authorities in the operation of markets;

(2) what plans he has to abolish market franchise rights.

Mr. Curry: The Deregulation Bill published today includes provision for the abolition of the rights of local authorities which own market franchises to object to any proposal to establish a new market within a six-mile radius of their own.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet representatives of the National Association of British Market Authorities to discuss the abolition of market franchise rights.

Mr. Curry: Ministers will be happy to meet representatives of this association to discuss our proposals for legislation on this issue.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses his Department has received in response to the consultative paper on market franchise rights; how many of the responses were in favour of the proposal and how many opposed; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Curry: The Government have received a total of 2,322 individual responses to this consultation document, of which 273 supported our proposal. The categories of responses received and the numbers in each category were as follows:

	Support	Oppose	Neutral
Local authorities	8	174	2
Market traders	240	1,568	—
Others (including consumer groups and private individuals)	25	340	8

Copies of the responses from those bodies that agreed that their comments could be made public will be deposited in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the names of the organisations which responded to the consultation paper of 16 August on market franchise rights;

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of responses to the Government's consultation paper of 16 August on market franchise rights;

(3) how many responses he has received in response to the consultation paper of 16 August on market franchise rights; how many supported the proposal; and how many opposed it;

(4) if he will meet representatives of the National Association of British Market Authorities before he comes to a conclusion on the future of market franchise rights;

(5) if it is his intention to include the future of market franchise rights in the forthcoming Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 16 December 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms Short).

North Circular Road (Land Contamination)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took when he issued exchange land certificates in November 1990 for land on and immediately adjoining one of the exchange land sites for the north circular road east of Falloden way, of a report commissioned in 1988 by Barnet council on the contamination of the land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The 1988 report is unknown to both my Department and the Department of Transport. A small area of contamination was discovered in June 1993 during preparation of the land to be given in exchange for land required for the trunk road improvement between east of Falloden way and east of high road, Finchley. As a result, the whole site was systematically tested. The Department of Transport has sent the report of the test, including recommendations for the treatment of the land, to the London borough of Barnet and its response is awaited. The treatment of the exchange land for the adjacent improvement of the trunk road at Regents Park road is the subject of negotiations with the borough.

Habitats and Species Directive

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates of the meetings planned by his Department with the statutory nature conservation advisers Scottish National Heritage, the Countryside Council for Walks and English Nature on the subject of the transposition of the EC habitats and species directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) by my hon. Friend the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside, on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 821.

Biodiversity

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many countries had by 29 December 1993 ratified the biodiversity convention drawn up at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Atkins: On the basis of notifications to the United Nations legal office in New York, 38 countries and the EC had ratified the biodiversity convention by 29 December 1993.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the United Kingdom will ratify the Rio summit's biodiversity convention.

Mr. Atkins: We have made it clear that we intend to ratify the biodiversity convention subject to satisfactory progress towards securing safeguards against our concerns about its financial provisions. We have made some progress towards such safeguards and are considering what further progress can be made before we take a final decision on ratification. In the meantime, we remain fully committed to the aims of the convention as demonstrated by our "Action Plan on Biodiversity", to be published later this month, and by the Darwin initiative.

Imported Waste

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts of industrial and household waste were imported during the last 12 months for which information is available; and what quantities of this waste were buried or processed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The only data available are for hazardous wastes covered by the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. In the 12 months ending April 1993, the United Kingdom imported 46,948 tonnes of hazardous waste, 98 per cent. of which was imported into England and Wales.

None of the imported waste was landfilled without treatment. Twenty-four thousand one hundred and eighteen tonnes received some form of treatment to reduce the hazard before landfilling, 19,168 tonnes were incinerated and a further 3,662 received some other form of treatment of which 3,474 tonnes were recovered or reprocessed.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has with regard to the disposal of radioactive waste at Lumms lane, Agecroft in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Atkins: The only company currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960—now 1993—to dispose of low-level radioactive waste at Lumms lane is Magnesium Elektron Ltd.—MEL—which is authorised to dispose of solid waste to the on-site landfill, liquid waste to the River Irwell and gaseous waste to the atmosphere. Environmental monitoring data are collected from around MEL's landfill site as part of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's national environmental monitoring programme. I will arrange for a copy of the annual report of this programme to be made available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 6, what deadline has been set for the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to reply on nuclear waste substitution.

Mr. Atkins: No deadline has been set for the committee's advice.

Waste (Brazil)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Sao Paulo State Environment Protection Agency in Brazil with regard to the return to the United Kingdom by the Produquimica company of Brazil of a consignment of copper, arsenic and cadmium wastes in December 1993.

Mr. Atkins: I presume that the question refers to material exported by London Metals Ltd. to the Produquimica Company in Brazil, which was recently returned to the United Kingdom.

My Department has received no information or other communication directly from the Sao Paulo State Environment Protection Agency—CETESB. However, information received indirectly may be summarised as follows.

The Produquimica Company has claimed that it returned the material to the United Kingdom on the grounds that the terms of the original contract had not been fulfilled. CETESB joined in recommending re-export on these grounds: at this stage its own analysis of the cargo was not complete. The shipment left Brazil on 21 December 1993.

Subsequently, CETESB carried out an analysis of a sample from the cargo, which showed its composition to be largely zinc—44·9 per cent.—with some copper—8·25 per cent.—a substantial amount of moisture—14·3 per cent. —and trace amounts of metals such as cadmium and arsenic—in total about 1 per cent. CETESB concluded that the material should be classified as "ash and residues, principally containing zinc". Under Brazilian regulation No. 138—of 22 December 1992—such residues can be imported into Brazil only after prior authorisation from IBAMA—Federal Environment Agency—and DECEX—Department of Foreign Trade. Produquimica is not registered with IBAMA. CETESB therefore took the view that the import was in breach of this regulation, and formally demanded the return of the cargo to its place of origin. This demand was made only after the shipment had already left Brazil.

Thorne and Hatfield Moors

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he now expects the agreement between Fisons and English Nature over Thorne and Hatfield moors to be signed;

(2) what information he has on the legal complexities preventing the signature of the proposed agreement between Fisons and English Nature over the future of Thorne and Hatfield moors.

Mr. Atkins: Conveyancing work and other legal matters have been time consuming but conditions associated with the proposed lease back are now mostly resolved. English Nature and Fisons hope to conclude matters shortly.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of the total budget for English Nature was spent on work on Fison's peatlands on Thorne and Hatfield moors in each of the years since 1991;

(2) how much money was spent by English Nature on work on Fisons' peatlands on Thorne and Hatfield moors in each year since 1991.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested, which includes money spent on the Thorne Moors national nature reserve owned by English Nature, is set out:

Year	Expenditure on work on Thorne and Hatfield moors £	Percentage of total budget Per cent.
1991-92	3,077	0·01
1992-93	70,401	0·2
[1]1993-94	40,148	0·1

[1] To 11 January 1994.

Condoms (Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the pollution effects of used condoms discarded into the sewage system.

Mr. Atkins: The discharge of used condoms and other sewage-related debris in effluent has unsightly effects. Most of this material is intercepted and dealt with effectively by the sewerage system. Improvements planned for outfalls and treatment works will further reduce this form of pollution.

Radwell Motorway Services Station

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the outcome of the planning inquiry into Radwell motorway services station to be announced.

Mr. Baldry: The inspector's report into this planning appeal has yet to be received, although I understand it is almost complete.

Depending on the complexity of an appeal, we normally expect to be able to issue a decision within eight weeks of receipt of a report. In this case, I expect the Secretary of State's decision to be issued by early April.

Co-operative Housing Associations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the allocation of Housing Corporation approvals to co-operative housing associations in London over the financial years 1990-91 to 1994-95, indicating the financial allocation, the number of homes to be created and the proportion of the total programme allocated to co-operatives in each year.

Sir George Young: The table below sets out the requested information on allocation of Housing Corporation approvals to co-operative housing associations in London over the financial years 1990-91 to 1994-95. The Housing Corporation also makes significant and increasing allocations to other housing associations for housing which, when developed, will be either owned or managed by co-operative housing associations.

For 1993-94 and 1994-95 figures are for allocations.

Local Authorities (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority in Northamptonshire the total value of asset sales, excluding houses and flats, for each year since 1986-87.

Mr. Baldry: The information is given in the table.

Waterways

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those rivers and waterways recommended by the National Rivers Authority for priority clean-up under the Water Act 1989; and which of these waterways will receive treatment during the next six years.

Mr. Atkins: A list of the water quality schemes in England and Wales recommended by the National Rivers Authority has been placed in the Library of the House. These schemes are still under review as part of the wider review of water company investment and charges by the Director General of Water Services.

Protected Species

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of licences issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to destroy protected species in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Atkins: Details of licences issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in respect of wild birds are contained in the reports by the United Kingdom to the European Community on derogation under article 9 of the directive on the conservation of wild birds—79,409/EEC—for the years 1991 and 1992. Figures for 1993 are not yet available. Copies of the derogation report are held in the Library of this House.

Set out is a table of licences issued in England, Scotland and Wales in 1993, and those issued in Scotland and Wales in 1991 and 1992. The figures for England for those years cannot be provided without disproportionate costs being incurred, as English Nature—the licensing authority—only has manual records prior to 1993.

Licences under section 16 are also issued by the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. I will write to the hon. Member when details are available.

Imported Building Materials

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by value the major 25 imported building materials in the latest year stating the import as a percentage of the United Kingdom market; and what were the comparable figures by value and import penetration five years ago.

Mr. Baldry: The table gives the estimated value of building materials imported during 1992, the latest year for which comprehensive information is available, together with the equivalent figures for 1988. Reliable information on import penetration will not be available until the information on United Kingdom production has been harmonised with overseas trade using the new PRODCOM classification; the first results of which are expected to be available this autumn.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by each urban development corporation since their inception on acquiring land and buildings; and what money has been received by each urban development corporation for the sale of land and buildings.

Mr. Baldry: Expenditure and receipts in respect of the acquisition and sale of land and buildings for each urban development corporation from inception until 31 March 1993 are as follows:

Council Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council leaseholders there are in each local authority.

Sir George Young: Information on the number of council leaseholders in each local authority is not held centrally.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of applications for council housing now held by local authorities in England.

Sir George Young: Local authorities provide information on the numbers of households on their council housing waiting lists on their annual housing investment programme—HIP1—returns.

At 1 April 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 1,208,800 households were reported as being on council housing waiting lists in England.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with the Department of Health on the progress of the homeless mentally ill initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Officials of my Department meet with those of the Department of Health from time to time to discuss issues relating to the homeless mentally ill initiative, and in particular the contribution which the Housing Corporation is able to make to the provision of move-on accommodation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people are estimated to have used each of the cold weather shelters so far this winter.

Sir George Young: As part of the rough sleepers initiative, the Government are funding seven cold weather shelters this winter, providing a total of 353 places until 31 March 1994 for people who would otherwise sleep rough on the streets of central London, as follows:

Location	Bedspaces		Managing organisation
	Male	Female
St. John Street, EC1	76	15	English Churches Housing Group
Tudor Street, EC4	30	—	Salvation Army
Albert Street, NW1	—	25	Camden Borough Council
Soho Square, W1	20	20	Centrepoint Soho
Page Street, SW1	60	10	St. Mungo's Association
Tooley Street, SE1	50	10	Crisis
John Street, WC1	26	11	Riverpoint

The shelters have had high occupancy rates since they opened early in December. On the night of Thursday 13 January, 313 bedspaces were occupied. More detailed information about the people using the shelters will become available from reports which the managing organisations are due to send to the Department by 31 May 1994.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now received the audited accounts of Lambeth council's direct labour trading divisions; and what conclusions he has reached as to whether each of those divisions shall continue to provide services to the local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The London borough of Lambeth has provided my right hon. Friend with accounts relating to the council's direct labour organisations—DLOs. These cover the financial year ending 31 March 1993 and earlier years, going back in the case of some activities to 1985-86.

The accounts have been certified by the authority's internal auditors but await certification by the district auditor. The internal auditor has qualified some of the accounts in respect of matters already made public in reports issued by the authority's former chief executive and the district auditor.

The accounts were specifically required as a result of directions given, on 23 July 1993 by my right hon. Friend, under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Subject to any changes which might be required by the district auditor the accounts show that the following defined activities met any necessary financial objectives; sports and leisure management, welfare catering, other cleaning, refuse collection and street cleaning, building cleaning, and grounds maintenance.

Losses were made in relation to general highways work. Under the terms of the relevant direction, the authority must cease carrying out the work, except for work of an emergency nature, snow clearance and gritting, as from 1 April 1994. Losses were also made on new construction work. The authority has now ceased to carry out such work.

Heavy losses have also been recorded for building maintenance work. The relevant direction already required work to be retendered by 1 April 1994 and my right hon. Friend's consent will be required before any new building maintenance work can be awarded to the authority's own DLO.

Lambeth has been notified of my right hon. Friend's views on these matters.

Protected Tenancies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households have protected tenancies in (a) Ealing, (b) London and (c) England.

Sir George Young: There is no information available centrally on the number of protected tenancies in Ealing. Provisional estimates from the first half year of data collection from the new survey of English housing are that in 1993 there were around 70,000 protected tenancies in Greater London and 350,000 in England.

Central Heating

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district council in England (a) the number of houses without central heating and (b) the proportion of the area's housing stock such homes constitute.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the number of houses without central heating in each district is not available. The number of households without central heating in each district can be found in Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, General Register Office for Scotland, "1991 Census, Housing and Availability of Cars, Great Britain", London: HMSO, 1993—table 3, Housing characteristics —copies of which are in the Library.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many low-income households will have received assistance under the home energy efficiency scheme programme by 2000; and how many low-income households will remain unassisted at that date at the current level of funding.

Mr. Atkins: On current plans the total number of households receiving grants under the home energy efficiency scheme—HEES—in the United Kingdom is expected to be almost half a million a year in the three years from 1 April 1994. Because Government expenditure plans for later years have yet to be agreed, it is not possible to make a firm estimate of the number of households which will receive assistance by the year 2000.

Nor can a realistic estimate be made of the number of households which will remain unassisted in the year 2000. The number will depend not only on the numbers of households eligible for and assisted under HEES. It will reflect the number of households which already have basic insulation measures and those which will be insulated by the year 2000, either by householders themselves or through the other schemes which are improving energy efficiency.

Housing Management

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum number of local authorities' properties that can be included in proposed compulsory competitive tendering of housing management packages.

Sir George Young: The local government Acts do not set limits for contract sizes for compulsory competitive tendering. We have indicated that we would not normally expect comprehensive area-based housing management contracts in large authorities to exceed 5,000 dwellings. It would, however, be acceptable good practice for small authorities with up to 7,500 dwellings to proceed on the basis of one contract, provided that reasonable competition can be secured.

Environment Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), of 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 1106, what was the voting record of each member state on (a) the packaging directive and (b) the UN framework convention on climate change.

Mr. Atkins: The common position on the packaging directive was agreed by qualified majority vote without the agreement of Germany, Denmark and the Netherlands. As my hon. Friend the Member of Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) stated in the answer he gave on 17 December last, although the United Kingdom strongly supports Community ratification of the climate change convention, we abstained on the formal resolution because of doubts about the choice of legal base.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is his intention that in an area reviewed by the Local Government Commission short-term start-up costs will be offset by future savings.

Mr. Baldry: We have said on our guidance to the commission that change to the structure of local government should be worthwhile and cost-effective over time. Cost-effectiveness cannot be measured purely in financial terms, but for most review areas we would expect structural change to produce financial savings.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Local Government Commission is precluded from recommending an option which results in transitional costs which are not offset by future savings.

Mr. Baldry: The policy guidance which we issued to the commission in November 1993 provides that the commission "is not precluded from recommending an option which would be marginally more expensive than the status quo if the extra cost would be outweighed by other considerations."

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how any net transitional or ongoing costs are to be met in areas reviewed by the Local Government Commission if future ongoing savings are not identified;

(2) how the additoinal ongoing costs in respect of options, put forward by the Local Government Commission in areas reviewed, which are more expensive than the status quo, are to be met by the new local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: We expect recommendations which would be more expensive than the status quo, or which would not lead to ongoing savings, to be the exception. We shall look at the issue of any additional ongoing costs in the light of particular recommendations. We are currently considering the treatment in years after 1994-95 of all aspects of transitional costs.

Waterlogged Soil

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Housebuilders Federation, the Council of Mortgage Lenders, the National Federation of Housing Associations and local authority associations concerning the implications for housing and planning policies of the confirmation of the positive correlation between winter waterlogging of soils and the level of infant mortality; and what further action he proposes to take.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority on the relationship between the level of infant mortality and winter waterlogging of soils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for commissioning research into the positive relationship between winter waterlogging of soils and higher levels of infant mortality.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has no plans to commission such research.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on land drainage policy in relation to the effect of winter waterlogging on the level of infant mortality.

Mr. Atkins: Land drainage policy is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue the latest details about statutory action taken against local authorities in relation to compulsory competitive tendering of local council services following publication of the position as at the end of September 1993.

Mr. Baldry: The table lists the authorities against which statutory action was taken in the period 1 October to 31 December 1993. It also gives a cumulative figure for the number of notices and directions given under the Local Government Act 1988 and the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 for 1993 as a whole, and since 1989 when the anti-competitive provisions were brought into effect.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his proposed notional amounts for capping in 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have received a small number of representations from authorities, including new information and revised data, which we are considering carefully. However, we have now reached preliminary views on all these representations, and we are today informing authorities of our current proposals reflecting these preliminary conclusions. I am arranging for a table showing our current proposals for notional amounts to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 29 November to the hon. Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight), Official Report, column 380, if he has reached any decisions on the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Cleveland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have today written to Sir John Banham, chairman of the Local Government Commission, giving my decisions on the commission's recommendations for Cleveland as set out in its report "Final Recommendations on the Future Local Government of Cleveland and Durham".

After considering the commission's recommendations and the representations made, I have concluded that effective and convenient local government in Cleveland would be achieved by abolishing Cleveland county council and establishing four unitary authorities for the area—commission recommendation 1—and that this would reflect the identities and interests of local people. I have accepted in principle that the county of Cleveland should be abolished, but I shall defer a final decision until I have reached decisions on the commission's forthcoming recommendations for Durham and North Yorkshire.

The remaining recommendations for Cleveland have been accepted as submitted, except that I am still considering the proposal that I direct the commission to undertake a further parish review.

In agreeing with the establishment of unitary authorities based on existing districts, I have given careful consideration to representations which I received about the implications for those services and functions currently performed on a wider basis. My decision is based on a presumption that the authorities which are to become unitary will work together to plan for these services and functions, and will forge working links with other bodies such as health authorities.

The boundaries of the four proposed unitary authorities, which I intend to establish in April 1995, correspond to those of the existing district councils. Where the boundaries of unitary authorities and existing authorities coincide in this way I propose as a general rule to consult the local authorities concerned about the desirability of holding elections for the whole council in the May preceding the 1 April reorganisation date. Accordingly, I am now consulting the majority and minority groups on each district council, and Cleveland county council, to seek their views about whether or not elections should be held in May 1994. I will make a further announcement about the outcome of that consultation.

An order giving effect to the commission's recommendations for Cleveland, with the aforementioned modifications, will be laid before the House in due course. A copy of my letter to Sir John Banham has been placed in the Library.

Dearne Valley City Grant Project

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects that all toxic materials lying within the Dearne valley city grant area will have been removed or property contained;

(2) what is the total area of land reclaimed as part of the city grant project in the Dearne valley; and what area of derelict land remains to be reclaimed;

(3) what has been the total payment from central funds in support of the city grant project for the Dearne valley to date; and what is his estimate for the total spending in the current year and in 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The three current city grant projects in the Dearne valley involve the reclamation of about 220 acres of derelict land. One site has now been fully reclaimed, and the reclamation of a second site is expected to be completed in about three months time. The remaining site accounts for around 80 per cent. of the total area covered by these projects and its reclamation is expected to be completed by the end of 1994. On completion of the projects, the toxic materials will either have been removed from the sites or contained in an appropriate manner.

Grant payments by my Department in support of the projects have to date totalled £6·9 million. In 1993-94 payments are expected to total about £2·4 million, with around a further £1·1 million to be paid in 1994-95.

Housing (Flood Risks)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of the construction of housing on river flood plains exacerbation of recent floods in the south and east of England.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

In December 1992, the Ministry together with the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office, issued updated guidance to local planning authorities on the need to take account of flood risk due to increased run-off from new developments and the need for measures to be taken to alleviate this as a condition of granting planning permission. The National Rivers Authority provides advice to local planning authorities on application for developments in flood risk areas.

The Ministry has an ongoing programme of research into the flood response of rivers to rainfall and the development of design procedures which can take into account changes within river catchments such as urbanisation. Changes in flood run-off can be assessed in a number of ways, including by reference to 1975 flood studies report by the Institute of Hydrology, which has been substantially updated through Ministry-funded research. It is for the National Rivers Authority and the other responsible flood defence bodies to assess the causes of flooding on individual rivers using these techniques.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Goodlad: The diplomatic service operates five loan schemes for staff. In all cases, beneficiaries sign an undertaking to repay, and unless otherwise stated officers repay by deduction from salary.

The schemes and their objectives are as follows:

(i) Housing Assistance Scheme

DS officers returning from service overseas to an appointment in the United Kingdom are faced with the problem of needing to find rented accommodation, or buy a property at a time not of their own choosing: officers are eligible for a salary-related advance, subject to a maximum of £10,500. Repayments are deferred for the first three years, and then repaid over a maximum of nine years.

(ii) Overseas Allowances

In order to assist staff in purchasing equipment and establishing their household overseas, advances of allowances are available to officers which are repayable over two years. Advances of up to one month's cost of livi.g allowance—COLA—may be taken by staff who have completed a posting in the United Kingdom: for some difficult postings a three-month advance of COLA is available. Advances of six months representational allowances are available to heads of mission and other senior grade staff.

(iii) Car Loans

Officers need private cars overseas for domestic and operational reasons. A salary-related advance is available to officers appointed overseas after a tour of duty in the United Kingdom, repayable over two years.

(iv) Recreational Advances

This is a small advance made available to junior staff by our missions overseas to help them with the initial cost of joining a local sports club. The loan is repaid to the accountant at the overseas mission within one year.

(v) Season Ticket Advances

This advance is available to staff in the United Kingdom to purchase an annual season ticket for home to office journeys. This enables the Department to widen the recruitment catchment area, and alleviates recruitment and retention problems.

The following loans have not been paid by the due date and recovery action is in hand:

Scheme	Year	Number of loans	Amount £
Housing	1989	1	1,279
Housing	1991	1	3,000
Car	1993	1	531
TOTAL	—	—	4,810

The Overseas Development Administration operates three loan schemes, the objectives and the arrangements for which are similar to those for the diplomatic service.

(i) House Purchase

To assist staff who are transferred to a new location in UK at the Department's behest.

(ii) Overseas Salary Advance

Available to staff and technical co-operation officers on first taking up an overseas appointment to purchase a new vehicle and to stock up on essential equipment.

(iii) Season Ticket/Bicycle Advances

To assist staff with home to office travel.

The following staff loans were not repaid. In both cases, staff resigned without prior notice. ODA initiated recovery action, but on the basis of legal advice, this was not pursued.

Scheme	Year	Number of Loans	Amount £
Season Ticket	1990	1	547
Season Ticket	1991	1	213
Total	—	—	760

Two overseas salary advances paid to aid personnel—technical co-operation officers—have failed to be recovered since 1990. One officer has agreed to repay £7,848 over a three-year period. The other has an outstanding balance of £3,400 and recovery action is being pursued by the Treasury Solicitor.

The outstanding loans due to the Department are a minute proportion of the total advanced and recovered without difficulty. Outstanding loan recovery forms a very small part of the responsibilities of a number of officers: it is not possible to quantify in financial terms the amount of manpower expended on pursuing loans with a disproportionate amount of research.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department or the Overseas Development Administration; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A total of 2,410 Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by Foreign and Commonwealth Ministers. The cards cost £778·25. The other information is not centrally recorded or readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EC Development Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 6 December, Official Report, column 76, what were the voting figures recorded in the meeting of the European Community's Development Council held on 2 December.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The resolutions of the Development Council on 2 December were adopted by consensus, as is the normal practice.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's Iraq note prepared in the summer of 1990.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave in reply to a question from the Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 154.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Global Commission on Population and Development

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who are the members of the global commission on population and development; how many meetings the commission has held; what is the proposed timetable for its work; and what is the Overseas Development Administration's contribution to its work.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Two meetings of the Independent Commission on Population and Quality of Life have been held. The commission will conduct regional consultations and other activities during 1994 and aims to launch its final report in June 1995. The ODA is providing a grant of £150,000. This includes covering the costs of seconding an ODA population adviser to the commission secretariat for two years. The commission members are:

Anders Wijkman—Director General of the Swedish Agency for Research Co-operation with Developing Countries (SAREC).

Alexander N. Yakovlev—Vice-president of the international fund for socio-economic and political research, Moscow.

Ex-Officio, Pierre de Senarclens, Executive Secretary of the Commission, professor of international relations, Lausanne university, Switzerland.

Family Planning

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions for 1994 are being made to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations Population Fund and the World Health Organisation Human Reproduction Programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Decisions on the 1994 contributions to these agencies will be made shortly. I will write to my hon. Friend once the agencies have been informed.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations have taken place with United Kingdom and other non-governmental organisations on constructing an EC policy on family planning projects in developing countries; and how many and which non-governmental organisations in the United Kingdom and in other member states have been consulted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: ODA officials have participated in initial discussions with officials of the European Commission and other member states on the need for an effective consistent EC policy on reproductive health and family planning. The Government would welcome the views of United Kingdom non-governmental organisations once discussions start on substantive issues of policy and strategy.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the total bilateral disbursements on population activities, and to which countries, for 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: New bilateral commitments totalling £11·2 million were made to Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Kenya and Malawi in 1993. The figures for bilateral disbursement in 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations have taken place with United Kingdom non-governmental organisations on the issues to be considered by the April 1994 third preparatory committee meeting for the international conference on population and development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the second preparatory committee meeting for this conference, there have been five meetings of the NGO forum convened to engage

United Kingdom NGOs in United Kingdom preparations for the conference and three workshops. The Government are, as a result, well informed of the views of United Kingdom non-governmental organisations on issues to be considered by the third preparatory committee meeting.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and which budget lines in the EC development budget are allocated for expenditure on population and family planning projects in developing countries; what was the budget allocation in 1991, 1992 and 1993 for population and family planning projects; and what is the projected budget for 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: One EC budget line, B7-5050 "Financial assistance to family planning programmes in developing countries" is expecially devoted to financing of population projects. In addition, another budget line B7-5047 "Mother and Child Health" includes family planning. A number of other EC budget lines for co-operation with developing countries also finance family planning projects, but it is not possible to disaggregate spending from those lines.

The allocation—in million ecu—for budget line B7-5050 was 1.5 in 1991; 2 in 1992; and 4 in 1993. Five million ecu has been allocated in 1994.

TRANSPORT

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the marine accident investigation branch on the loss of the Braer will be published.

Mr. MacGregor: The report of the marine accident investigation branch's investigation into the loss of the Braer will be published tomorrow, 20 January. Copies of the report will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The report of my Department's marine pollution control unit on the loss of the Braer and the lessons to be drawn from it, which has already been made available to Lord Donaldson's inquiry, will also be published tomorrow and copies of it, too, will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Bob Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what agreement has been reached with Eurotunnel concerning the extension by 10 years of the channel tunnel concession period.

Mr. Freeman: I have today placed copies of the agreement in the Library of the House.

Rail Freight

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether surplus BR freight assets will be made available to companies wishing to operate their own rail freight services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's freight businesses will need to retain sufficient assets to enable them to operate safely, effectively and economically and to discharge their obligations to customers.

However, where assets are identified as surplus to operational requirements, these will be offered for sale by British Rail on a competitive basis. Companies or individuals interested in purchasing such assets should register their interest with British Rail's vendor unit.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much money his Department has set aside in its 1994-95 budget for making freight facilities grants under the Railways Act 1993; how much of this sum has been allocated to date; and who has been told to date that they will receive such grants;

(2) how much section 8 grant was paid to encourage the transport of freight by rail in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; how much it is estimated will be paid in 1993-94; and how much is budgeted for such grants in 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure on freight facilities grants under both section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 and section 36 of the Transport Act 1981 has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1990-91	3·500
1991-92	1·239
1992-93	1·718

As grant can be claimed only on receipted invoices submitted during the construction of the rail or inland waterway facilities, it is too early to estimate how much will be expended in 1993-94.

Under the Railways Act 1993 both the existing rail and inland waterway freight facilities grants will be considerably enhanced and a new track access grant for freight service operators introduced. All three measures will be effective from the commencement of the new fiscal year on 1 April 1994 and administered from a single budget which, in 1994-95, has been set at £13·3 million with a present estimate of £43 million over three years. As formal applications cannot be considered until after this date it is too early for my Department to award any grants under the new provisions and I am not in a position to say how the funds will be taken up. Any commitments falling in 1994-95 as a result of previous awards under section 8 of the 1974 act would be met from the new single budget but the amount due will be determined largely by the timing of claims.

Stratford International Station

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had on the case for Stratford international passenger station being developed; what work his Department has done on the transport implications of such a station for Essex, Suffolk and Norfolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I have received representations from the promoters of the station at Stratford, from Ipswich borough council and Norwich city council, and from a number of other organisations, individuals and hon. Members. The comparative analysis in Union Railways' October report includes forecasts of patronage at each prospective intermediate station on the rail link, taking into account likely origins and destinations and the results of detailed transport modelling. We are considering Union Railways' report, together with the representations received, and will announce our decisions shortly.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the route of the high-speed channel tunnel rail link and the stations to be built along the new line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement in the next few weeks.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if a condition will be imposed on companies obtaining franchises to run rail services to provide facilities for through ticketing with providers of other rail services.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if a condition will be imposed on companies obtaining franchises to run rail services to collaborate with other providers of rail services to offer cheap fares at off-peak times.

Mr. Freeman: No. We expect franchise operators to offer discounted off-peak travel as British Rail does now, because it will be in their commercial interest to do so.

Newcastle Bypass

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the diagramatic representations of starting and end points for journeys based on road traffic surveys in respect of the Newcastle upon Tyne Cradlewell bypass scheme, set out in the same format as the published documentation contained in annex B of the Newcastle city council's case for the Newcastle western bypass scheme.

Mr. Key: The Cradlewell bypass is a local road scheme promoted by Newcastle city council from which the required information should be sought. The Newcastle western bypass was promoted by my Department as a trunk road proposal.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the key assumptions underpinning the cost-benefit analysis for the Newcastle upon Tyne Cradlewell bypass scheme;

(2) what assessment he has made of the conformity with his Department's guidelines of the cost-benefit analysis for the Newcastle upon Tyne Cradlewell bypass scheme prepared by Newcastle upon Tyne city council.

Mr. Key: It is not practicable to organise a comprehensive check on the background information supporting every application for transport supplementary grant—TSG. The standard of the Cradlewell bypass submission was within the normal parameters for schemes of this type. The system relies on good practice by local highway authorities. The Department operates a series of scheme audits by independent consultants. It will eventually look into all aspects of TSG submissions, including the reliability of cost and other information and whether the forecast scheme benefits have been realised. This is done on the basis of a sample cross section of schemes. Any significant shortcomings that this initiative throws up will be addressed by refining the control the Department applies, and the advice it offers.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the key assumptions underpinning the cost-benefit analysis for the Newcastle upon Tyne Cradlewell bypass scheme;

(2) if he will place a copy of the cost-benefit analysis for the Newcastle upon Tyne Cradlewell bypass scheme in the Library; and if he will provide the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East with a copy.

Mr. Key: This information is held by Newcastle city council as the scheme promoter.

Bypass Guidelines

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are given by his Department to local authorities in respect of the publication of the cost-benefit analysis for bypass schemes.

Mr. Key: The Department gives no guidance to local authorities about the publication of cost-benefit analysis on any of their road improvement schemes. This is a matter to be decided by the authorities themselves. There is no requirement for authorities to publish any background information to their schemes outside the statutory framework of current legislation.

The annual transport policies and programme submissions which the Department invites authorities to make are available to the public. They contain considerable detail about each major scheme for which the authority seeks transport supplementary grant—TSG. The Department specifies the information it needs to assess applications for TSG in an annual circular issued both to local highway authorities and to district councils that do not have that status. The circular is on sale to the public. The latest edition is local authority circular 2/93, issued on 29 April 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are given by his Department to local authorities when preparing cost-benefit analysis for bypass schemes.

Mr. Key: All local highway authorities are expected to familiarise themselves with the Department's cost-benefit analysis—COBA—system. They are advised in annex B to the annual transport policy and programme—TPP—circular to consult the COBA user manual. There is no specific advice on the application of COBA to bypasses.

Medway Bridge

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what statutory power a rail and road bridge over the Medway could be planned and constructed currently.

Mr. Freeman: Parallel bridges over the Medway are being planned for the M2 widening scheme and the channel tunnel rail link; the bridges can be built sequentially or at the same time. It is possible to provide for both approaches either through joint approval in a hybrid Bill, or with separate approval of the road scheme under Highways Act order procedures.

A1(M)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to delay any current or further plans for the expansion of the A1(M) in Hertfordshire and conduct an assessment of road schemes on an equal basis with other modes of transport.

Mr. Key: Our aim is to achieve a balance between the various modes of transport so that each can make its proper contribution to a safer, more environmentally friendly and more efficient transport system. We therefore seek to ensure, for example, that road and rail projects are assessed on a consistent basis using, where relevant, a common set of assumptions about the value people attach to improvements in their journey times.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's strategy, planned timetable and traffic forecasts for widening the A1(M) from junctions 6 to 8 to four lanes in each direction and the future of the section from junctions 4 to 6; and what assessment has been made of whether the proposed expansion of junctions is necessary to facilitate connections with the planned east-west route.

Mr. Key: The priority of the schemes to widen the A1(M) in Hertfordshire is being considered in the current review of the road programme and the timetables for widening will reflect the outcome of the review. Our proposals for the section between junctions 6 and 8 were the subject of public consultation in October last year. They are designed to cater for traffic flows in 2012 ranging from 85,000 to 115,000 vehicles per day. The junction arrangements which were shown are not dependent on the proposed east-west route but account has been taken of possible options for it. Responses to the consultation are being considered.

Aircraft Movements

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of annual aircraft movements that take place over the east London area including the boroughs of Redbridge, Newham, Barking and Dagenham and Havering.

Mr. Norris: No such estimates are made by my Department, nor by any other body as far as I am aware.

Metropolitan Trunk Roads

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much transport support grant was allocated for expenditure on metropolitan trunk roads for each year since 1979 for use by (a) local authorities and (b) the former Greater London council until its abolition.

Mr. Key: Local authorities are not allocated TSG for national trunk roads, whether or not in metropolitan areas.

Coaches

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will allow the running of coaches to a weight limit of 18 tonnes while retaining the existing rear axle load; what maximum tyre load is permitted where the front axle tyres fitted are standard 156 rate; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which that effective load distribution is ensured in those circumstances.

Mr. Key: No. The maximum load for a tyre with load index 156 is four tonnes. Correct load distribution, which is critical to ensure axles are not overloaded, is largely determined at the initial design of the vehicle when axle weight limits are set by the manufacturer in compliance with legislation. These weights are enforced by the vehicle inspectorate at weighbridge and other checks.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the possibility of allowing coaches with a weight limit of 18 tonnes to use a limited network of trunk roads and motorways where the strengthening of bridges is not required.

Mr. Key: I have considered the possibility of permitting certain operations, including motorway coaches, to be allowed higher weights. Until the bridge assessment programmes currently being carried out by my Department and local authorities are completed there remains the problem of feeder roads to motorways. Few journeys can be completed entirely on motorways and it is difficult to envisage how a scheme for higher weights on motorways alone could be effectively enforced to protect potentially vulnerable roads.

Thames Transport

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times the working party exploring the Thames transport potential has met; what reports it has published; and if he will name its current members.

Mr. Norris: The River Thames working group which I chair has met twice. It is currently analysing the substantial number of responses received from a wide-ranging consultation exercise and expects to produce a report of its findings and recommendations in the summer.

The current members of the group are David Bayliss, director of planning, London Transport; David Jeffery, chief executive, Port of London authority; Eric Sorensen, chief executive London Docklands development corporation; and Robin Clement, deputy chief planner, London Planning Advisory Council. Dick Barker represented London First until recently; I hope to make an announcement shortly about his successor. Officials from the Departments of Transport and of the Environment also attend.

Inner City Transport Investment

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to publish the study carried out by Dr. Margaret Grieco of Oxford university on the impact of transport investment on the inner-city economy.

Mr. Freeman: None. I understand that the author is making her own arrangements for the report to be published.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments his Department has carried out into the costs of highway maintenance attributable to use by heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Key: Heavy vehicles using the trunk road network are continually monitored in order to evaluate the wear and tear on the roads. The need for maintenance results primarily from traffic wear and tear although other aspects such as climatic effects and aging of road materials have an influence.

The vast majority of road wear and tear is caused by vehicles over 15kN unladen vehicle weight such as heavy goods vehicles—HGVs—and buses—PSVs. No precise breakdown of the cost of heavy goods vehicle related maintenance is readily available but in 1993-94, of the £700 million that we expect to spend on maintaining the trunk road network, less than half is attributable to traffic wear.

A6(M) Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the line of route of the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Key: Although the line is fixed, revised proposals were published in November 1991 to take account of the forecast of increased traffic and changes recommended by the inspector in his report of the 1987-88 inquiry. In February 1992 a draft compulsory purchase order was published. The revised proposals included a modification of the junction with the A6(M) and the A627 Offerton road which has provoked substantial opposition from the local authority and local residents.

As a result, we have reviewed our proposals in this area resulting in further changes. The draft orders will need to be withdrawn and fresh ones published. Our review is almost complete and we expect to publish the fresh orders this summer.

Excessive Loads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to prevent commercial vehicles entering England with excessive loads.

Mr. Key: Enforcement against overloading of commercial vehicles will continue to be undertaken at ports, with the agreement of port authorities, and at other inland sites within the vicinity of ports. Where driver self-weigh equipment is available operators and drivers are encouraged to use the facility to check-weigh and to help avoid vehicles leaving ports in an overloaded condition.

International goods vehicle traffic will also continue to be routinely checked at inland enforcement sites. Arrangements are currently being negotiated with Eurotunnel for checking channel tunnel traffic prior to leaving France.

British Rail

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the targets and performance against targets in respect of (a) punctuality and (b) reliability of each of the divisions of British Rail serving the (i) South Yorkshire, (ii) Humberside, (iii) North Yorkshire and (iv) West Yorkshire areas in each month from January 1992.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows. British Rail performance data are published on a four-weekly, rather than a calendar month, basis. The following tables run from period 11 of the 1991-92 financial year—commencing 29 December 1991—to period 10 of the 1993-94 financial year ending 1 January 1994.

Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) in which programmes and events for the European year of older people and solidarity between Generations he has been directly involved;

(2) what contribution his Department made to the European year of older people and solidarity between generations in terms of financial support, practical support for particular events and the provision of information.

Mr. Norris: The Department has a continuing programme of initiatives to improve services, facilities and information for older people as pedestrians, public transport users and motorists. These initiatives were promoted by the Department at national and local events throughout the year.

During 1993 the Department published an information leaflet aimed at older drivers with practical advice on continuing to drive safely. Two million copies were distributed with the help of the Saga group and through doctors' surgeries. A "stuffer" leaflet on the same topic was also distributed to 30 million car owners with their vehicle excise duty reminders.

In addition, the Department continued to promote, through research, guidelines and advice to local authorities, operators and individuals, the needs of older people for improved bus design and access to bus services and the safety of older pedestrians.

Motor Cycling

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the method of enforcement will be for the proposed stage II noise limits of motor cycles.

Mr. Key: There will be two aspects to the enforcement of the stage II noise limits. In the case of new motor cycles, the manufacturer will have to seek and obtain a valid type approval certificate to the noise directive prior to sale and registration. The date of mandatory application of these limits has yet to be agreed by the EC Council of Ministers.

As far as in-use enforcement is concerned, on 10 January I made regulations which require that both original and replacement silencers for motor cycles be marked as complying with a relevant EC directive or—for replacement silencers—an equivalent British standard. I am also now drawing up regulations to control the supply of replacement silencers at point of sale.

Heavy Vehicles

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many bridges on the trunk road system are not capable of supporting a gross vehicle weight of 18 tonnes;

(2) how many bridges on the motorway system are not capable of supporting a gross vehicle weight of 18 tonnes.

Mr. Key: Our records show that there are three underbridges on motorways and 65 underbridges on all purpose trunk roads in England in which parts of the structure have been assessed as having inadequate capacities for carrying vehicles of 18 tonnes gross weight with the required margins of safety.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Norris: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report".

Airport Security

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has received from the communications and transport deregulation task force to justify its statement on the cost and cost-effectiveness of airport security.

Mr. Norris: The statement to which the hon. Member refers is in his recent report "Deregulating Disaster". He quotes an early draft by the task force which suggested that the Department approaches airport security with an "overly belt and braces approach at huge cost to industry".

In its final report, to be published shortly, the task force recommend that security measures must be commensurable with the level of threat and that the aviation industry should be fully consulted in the measures adopted. We accept this view.

A590

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has, and over what time scale, for improvements to the A590 road between the M6 and Barrow.

Mr. Key: The Secretary of State announced last August a review of the road programme to establish more clearly defined priorities within it. The review is now in progress and the aim is to announce the conclusions in time for the launch of the Highways Agency in April.

The timing of any schemes in the programme for improvements to the A590 between the M6 and Barrow is dependent on the outcome of this review.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held centrally and could be given only at disproportionate cost.

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Norris: There are three loans outstanding on the votes of my Department. They are:

Humber bridge—built under provision of the Humber Bridge Act 1959, as amended. As at the 30 September 1993, the total debt outstanding is £359,307,192.

Second Mersey tunnel—built under provision of the Mersey Tunnel Act 1965, as amended. As at 30 September 1993, the total debt outstanding is £24,388,785.

Tyne tunnel—built under provision of the Tyne Tunnel Act 1964, as amended. As at 30 September 1993, the total debt outstanding is £13,162,996.

Payments against these loans are made regularly in two instalments each year. The administrative costs of such payments are less than £300 per year.

My Department also makes loans to staff under their terms and conditions of service. These include loans covering the cost of season tickets, and assistance with house purchase where staff are moved under compulsory terms.

M62 Relief Road

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations have been received from the Bury, South constituency against the proposed M62 relief road.

Mr. Key: So far, some 2,500 representations have been received from Bury, South, from a total in excess of 5,000. These figures include an element of duplication.

Vehicle Reverse Alarms

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he has plans to review the present 2,000 kg weight limit below which reversing alarms may not be fitted unless that vehicle is a bus, a works truck or engineering plant;

(2) how many representations he has received concerning regulation 99 of the Vehicle Construction and Use Regulations 1985 in respect of vehicle reverse alarms; and if he will provide a statement on the future of this provision.

Mr. Key: During 1992 and 1993, 15 letters were received on this subject. Eight of these were requests for information or from those with a commercial interest, two were complaints about noise nuisance and the rest questioned whether the provision should not be made compulsory and/or extended to other categories of vehicles.

I shall be reviewing this matter when I come to consider certain other amendments to the Construction and Use Regulations on vehicle noise.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria were used in arriving at the 2,000 kg weight limit below which a vehicle reversing alarm may not be fitted unless it is a bus, a works truck or engineering plant.

Mr. Key: Reversing alarms are permitted to be used as an aid to safety on those vehicles where we consider the driver's vision might be obscured by the shape or size of the vehicle. The prime responsibility for ensuring that reversing is carried out safely rests, however, with the driver; and he or she should follow the advice of the highway code.

Minibuses and Coaches (Safety)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the British Government's current position on the statutory introduction of passenger seat belts on coaches manufactured within the European Union;

(2) what progress he has made in asking the other members of the European Union to introduce the statutory installation of passenger seat belts on coaches manufactured within the European Union; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received on improving the safety of passengers travelling on minibuses or coaches; what the Government's current position is on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We have been discussing with the European Commission for some years the desirability of amending the directives which deal with the fitting of seat belts in coaches. To date, however, there has not been the support necessary from EC member states for the Commission to make seat belt fitment on all seats a mandatory requirement.

We have received a great number of representations from a wide range of organisations and individuals, making various suggestions which they feel would improve the safety of minibus and coach travel.

We are currently reviewing the full technical and cost implications of seat belts in coaches. Until this review is complete and we have full reports on the tragic accidents which happened last year, it would not be wise to consider making further regulations in this area.

St. Avon

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to seek to ensure that the circumstances leading to the incident in which St. Avon ran aground at Browndown, Gosport on 21 July 1993 do not recur.

Mr. Norris: Following consideration of the grounding of the steam tanker Avon and other accidents, advice on preventive measures has been drafted and will be issued shortly in the form of a merchant shipping notice.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all statements made by Ministers in his Department, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible start and/or completion date for refurbishment of the west coast main line, the date on which each such statement was made, and the possible start and/or completion date which was mentioned.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 January 1994]: On 1 December 1993, my right hon. Friend announced the Government's decision that the modernisation of the west coast main line would be taken forward as a privately financed project. Railtrack would invite expressions of interest from the private sector to work with it in devising new performance standards for the route. At the same time, he announced plans for a competition in late 1994 to select a private sector consortium to modernise the line and maintain it for a defined period.

Marine Accident Investigation Branch

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each report of the marine accident investigation branch concluded in 1993; and which of those were published.

Mr. Norris: Investigations carried out by the marine accident investigation branch, and reports published on its behalf by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, are listed in the summary of investigations which is produced three times a year. A copy of each summary is placed in the Library.

Crossrail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all statements made by Ministers in his Department, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the crossrail project, the dates on which each such statement was made and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

Mr. Norris: The then Secretary of State wrote to the chairmen of British Rail and London Transport on 9 October 1990 about crossrail and the Chelsea-Hackney line. The associated press notice said that crossrail was expected to open in 1999.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all statements made by Ministers in his Department, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the channel tunnel rail link, the dates on which each such statement was made, and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

Mr. Freeman: The list is as follows:

18 May 1990

The Minister for Public Transport, in debate on private Members' motion, at column 1179

"I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), who sought to put this debate in the context of the channel tunnel opening in three years' time and a rail link being a decade away, even with the fastest possible agreement on the route, and its design and structure."

9 October 1991

Press Notice—from text of a letter by the right hon. and learned Member for Edinbugh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) to Sir Bob Reid

"Inevitably, the start of a construction of the rail link is some way ahead. On present forecasts, existing capacity is not expected to be exhausted until around 2005. It means account can be taken of demand for rail services through the Channel Tunnel once it opens. This will help to give a more precise view of when the extra capacity of the new line might be needed."

14 October 1991

Statement by the right hon. and learned Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands, at columns 25-26

"Inevitably, the start of construction is still some way ahead; but so is the need for the line. BR's own forecasts are that the capacity of the existing network is expected to be sufficient to meet the demand until around 2005. It will be possible to take account of the actual demand for rail services through the Channel Tunnel, once it opens. Overall, the choice of the eastern route rather than the southern route will not have any material effect on when the new line might come into operation. Suggestions that a decision has been taken not to begin construction before 2000 are incorrect. No such decision has been taken."

22 March 1993

Statement by Secretary of State for Transport, at column 611

"Provided that we press ahead quickly, it should be possible for the railway to be completed by around the turn of the decade."

23 November 1993

PQ by hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims)

Q: "To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when he now expects construction of the Channel Tunnel Fast Link to commence."

A: "Construction is expected to begin shortly after the enactment of a hybrid Bill, which the Government aim to have ready by autumn 1994; the Bill's introduction will depend upon the parliamentary timetable and the private sector's views."

Deregulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of all organisations with which his Department has held meetings regarding the deregulation initiative as it affects his Department, together with the dates on which such meetings were held and the persons present.

Mr. Norris: It would not be possible to publish such a list. The Department holds a large number of meetings about legislation with a wide range of people. Deregulation is a central plank of the Government's legislation policy. It is a consideration in all meetings about legislation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish a list of all material sent to his Department by the communications and transport deregulation task force, together with the dates on which such material was received by his Department;

(2) if he will publish a list of all meetings held between Ministers or officials in his Department and the communications and transport deregulation task force, the dates on which each meeting took place and those who attended each meeting.

Mr. Norris: The Department has had a large number of dealings, both oral and written, with the task force. The task force's recommendations, along with those of all the other task forces, will be published shortly.

Roads

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of all potential DBFO-design build finance and operate—road projects which have been identified by his Department; and when construction of each project is planned to begin.

Mr. Key: We shall announce the first DBFO schemes as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations with which Ministers or officials have held meetings to identify potential DBFO road projects, the dates on which each meeting took place; and what future meetings are planned.

Mr. Key: We have held a number of meetings with construction companies and others to help to identify potential DBFO schemes. The meetings have been conducted on a confidential basis.

Airport Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to act on the conclusions of the air accident investigation branch that airport safety is threatened by confusion between his Department, the Civil Aviation Authority and the Health and Safety Executive over responsibility for vehicle safety and staff safety training;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that a mechanism is in place at every airport to take immediate action on staff complaints about serviceable vehicles; and that vehicles used at airports are checked regularly for roadworthiness and have appropriate vehicle test certificates;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that all staff at airports have proper safety training;

(4) what response he has made to the report of the air accident investigations branch published on 7 January on the fatal accident affecting a member of the ground staff at Edinburgh airport, and what action he is taking to ensure that its recommendations are implemented at every airport without delay.

Mr. Norris: These questions relate to a tragic accident at Edinburgh airport on 11 March 1993 in which a tractor driver was killed by the propeller of a stationary aircraft. The air accidents investigation branch has made safety recommendations to the CAA, BAA plc and the Airport Operators Association—AOA. Appropriate action has been taken, or is in hand, by those organisations.

The CAA initiated an aerodrome apron safety management working group with members drawn from BAA, AOA, the British Air Transport Association and the British Airline Pilots Association, with the following terms of reference:

i. To determine the best practice in safety management and procedures and their application in apron safety management.

ii. To establish model safety management standards and procedures from which airport operators can prepare the systems and procedures for their airports.

iii. To determine the most appropriate measures to effect audit control over the safety management systems and procedures at airport.

The working group is meeting on a monthly basis to expedite its progress. The CAA is also in active discussion with the Health and Safety Executive.

BAA plc advises me that it has remedies in place or in progress relating to the detailed points emerging from this accident and these will apply equally to all its airports. It took action where possible at the earliest moment. The AOA has already brought these matters to the attention of its members.

M2 Widening

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the increase in the cost of widening the M2 between junctions 1 and 4; and if he will reconsider the proposal and the necessity for the project.

Mr. Key: Since the scheme for widening the M2 between junctions 1 and 4 entered the roads programme, the cost has increased from £43 million to £156 million. This increase has been mainly due to an increase in standard from dual three lanes to dual four lanes over most of the length, the addition of a second Medway bridge, strengthening of the existing bridge, major remodelling at junctions 2 and 3, and further structures. The scheme has also been extended 1·5 km to the west of junction 1 to include a short length of the A2.

The M2 widening scheme is part of the current road programme review.

EDUCATION

Pupil Costs

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost per pupil at (a) Nun Monkton school near York and (b) Green Hammerton school.

Mr. Forth: For the financial year 1993-94, the budget shares allocated to Nun Monkton Church of England primary school and Green Hammerton Church of England primary school under North Yorkshire local education authority's scheme for the local management of schools amounted to £3,446 per pupil and £1,779 per pupil respectively.

Primary Education

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list local education authorities in order of spending per primary pupil with the actual amount spent per pupil for the last available year; and what spending per primary pupil represented as a percentage of spending per secondary pupil in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table for 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available.

Notes to the table:

1. Figures are in outturn prices and are derived from local education authorities' returns of their net institutional expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department of Education.

2. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

3. "N/A" indicates not applicable; Corporation of London LEA has no secondary schools.

Mr. Tim Brighouse

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assistance is being given from public funds or by involvement of Government personnel to him in his defence against the legal action launched by Mr. Tim Brighouse in relation to remarks made by him about Mr. Brighouse in October 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: This is being treated as a personal, not a Government, matter.

Higher Education (Drop-out Rate)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research has been commissioned by his Department on the drop-out rate from higher education both before and after the introduction of student loans; and what account this research takes of drop-out rates in different socio-economic groups, and parental income brackets.

Mr. Boswell: Higher education drop-out rates are published in the Department's annual report. Table 26 in the last report—Cm 2210—showed that drop-out rates have remained broadly steady over the period from 1982-83 to 1990-91. The figure for 1991-92 is 17 per cent.

Information about the socio-economic group or parental income bracket of students who drop out is not collected centrally. No specific research has been commissioned on drop-out rates before and after the introduction of student loans.

Grant-maintained Schools

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in which local education authority areas grant-maintained schools now educate (a) more than 10 per cent. but less than 75 per cent. of primary or secondary pupils, (b) more than 75 per cent. of primary or secondary pupils and (c) less than 10 per cent. of primary or secondary pupils; and if he will give the current percentage figures for each area.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated proportions of maintained school pupils attending self-governing—grant-maintained—schools in each local education authority area in January 1994 are as follows.

Footnotes to tables:

1. The percentages in the tables are based on provisional data derived from the DFE's January 1993 schools census.

2. The self-governing schools included in these calculations are those operating by 5 January 1994.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what materials have been distributed to schools during the last year to promote grant-maintained status; and what is the cost of the preparation, production and distribution of this material.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has not distributed any materials promoting grant-maintained status. It does, however, provide booklets containing factual information to help parents and governors make informed decisions about whether grant-maintained status is right for their schools and to tell them how to acquire it. A total of 2·9 million such booklets have been distributed over the last five years, mainly to schools. Expenditure on these in the first nine months of this financial year included £164,000 for production and £8,000 for their distribution. The identification of all preparation costs would entail disproportionate expense.

FE College Corporations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce a compulsory register of members' interests for members of the governing bodies of further education college corporations.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend sees no need for such a register. The instruments of government for further education corporations provide that, except with the approval in writing of the Secretary of State, no member shall take or hold any interest in any property held or used for the purposes of the institution. Further, a member who has any financial interest in the supply of work or goods for the institution, any contract or proposed contract concerning the institution, or any other matter relating to the institution, and is present at the meeting of the governing body at which such a matter is to be considered, is required to disclose his or her interest and is precluded from taking part in the discussion or vote on the matter.

Examination Papers (Access)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to allow parents and schools access to marked external examination papers on written request.

Mr. Robin Squire: The GCE and GCSE examination bodies are independent of Government. It is for them to decide whether to alow external access to marked examination papers. Where candidates are dissatisfied with their results they may appeal through their school or college to the relevant examination body and, if necessary, to the Independent Appeals Authority for School Examinations.

Outdoor Activity Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his Department's estimate of the number of commercial outdoor activity centres currently operating in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: Precise figures are not available, and the exact number of centres is likely to vary from time to time. It is estimated that about 3,000 are currently in operation.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many outdoor activity centres will be inspected by the Health and Safety Executive over the next two years.

Mr. Forth: As part of the special programme of inspections announced by my right hon. Friend on 11 November 1993, the Health and Safety Executive are planning to inspect about 100 centres over the next two years.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many orders have been made using the powers of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, section 5(10); which trusts have been given such additional powers; and what was the nature of those additional powers.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of information technology services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Sackville: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When information technology services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where information assembled by the Centre for Mental Health Services Development about the costs of current mental health services in the nine authorities considered to be providing a comprehensive community-based service is available in published form.

Mr. Bowis: I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Surgical Dressings

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list NHS expenditure in the latest available year on surgical dressings and bandages, broken down into country of manufacture.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Savage

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order an independent inquiry into the death of Mr. Peter Savage in Doncaster royal infirmary.

Mr. Sackville: As a result of Mr. Savage's death, the trust asked Mr. Philip Gill, a former district coroner in west Yorkshire, to undertake an independent inquiry into the procedures followed by Doncaster royal infirmary for admission, investigation and treatment of confused patients. His report was published in December 1993, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Alder Hey Hospital

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting time for children needing orthopaedic treatment at the Alder Hey hospital in Liverpool.

Dr. Mawhinney: Alder Hey hospital is part of the Royal Liverpool childrens hospital national health service trust. Information on this trust's waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", which is published twice yearly. The latest published figures are for September 1993 and copies are available in the Library.

Population Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the population for each county in the United Kingdom, according to the census taken in each year in (a) 1971, (b) 1981 and (c) 1991; and what are the absolute and percentage differences between the 1971 and 1991 figures.

Mr. Sackville: Census figures for each county of England and Wales are published in the report "1991 Census, Historical Tables, Great Britain", copies of which are available in the Library. However, these census figures are affected by people missed from the census and by other factors. The most satisfactory comparisons are those based on the Registrar General's mid-year population estimates of resident population. These figures will be placed in the Library.

Figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement concerning the funding arrangements of the Medicines Control Agency listing all external agencies or companies that supply funds.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control agency—MCA—has, since it was established in 1989, been funded by fees from applicants for and holders of product licences, wholesale dealers licences and manufacturers licences. The MCA also receives fees for inspections of manufacturers and wholesale dealers premises. Ministers review MCA fee levels annually and widespread consultation takes place on the Government's proposals for the following year. The proposed fee levels, amended as necessary in the light of consultation, are then laid before Parliament for approval. Over 2,700 companies and external agencies paid fees to the MCA in 1992-93, a list of them will be placed in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the orders made under sections 5 to 11 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 for the NHS trusts in the Northern region.

Mr. Sackville: Copies of orders made under section 8 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 will be placed in the Library. All other orders made under sections 5 to 11 for NHS trusts in the northern region have been made under statutory instrument and are therefore already in the Library.

Press Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of staff and the cost of the Department's press office for each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The number of staff employed in the main press office for each year since 1989 is as follows:

	Number
1989-90	14
1990-91	15
1991-92	14
1992-93	15
1993-94	14

The cost of the press office and staffing figures for 1988-89 are not available in the form requested.

Workload Supervision

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what routine supervision is exercised by her Department over hospital and health authority workload and caseload performances in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Management Executive—NHSME—holds regional health authorities—RHAs—to account for their performance on the basis of agreed corporate contracts. Corporate contracts reflect both national and regional priorities and purchasing plans agreed by district health authorities, family health services authorities and, where appropriate, general practitioner fundholders. Performance is monitored through formal submissions—corporate contracts and quarterly returns—and continuous reviews between the NHSME's performance management teams and regional managers. This review process culminates in annual meetings held between the chief executive of the NHSME and each regional general manager and chairman. Issues outside corporate contracts are also raised with RHAs as appropriate to ensure performance is satisfactory.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish for each service that has been market tested in her Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the £300,000 public funds loaned by Mr. M. Davies while director of finance to West Midlands regional health authority to the company FIP has been recovered; and what interest on that sum was paid by FIP

Dr. Mawhinney: The loan to the financial information project is being repaid to West Midlands regional health authority by instalments on a quarterly basis. The first payment of £50,000 is due on 28 February. Interest on the loan is being charged in line with the health service prices index.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to instigate prosecutions for corruption in respect of the affairs of the West Midlands regional health authority as discussed in the 57th report from the Committee of Public Accounts of Session 1992-93, HC 485.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for West Midlands regional health authority and the police to determine what action needs to be taken over alleged corruption in the affairs of the authority.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid to Mr. M. Davies when he resigned from his post as director of finance of West Midlands regional health authority; how much of this was performance related; and what were the reasons for these payments.

Dr. Mawhinney: When Mr. Davies resigned from West Midlands regional health authority, he had a contractual entitlement to six months notice, and was paid two months extension of contract for untaken leave, a total of £36,702. He also received £6,222 for cumulative performance-related pay.

Influenza Vaccine

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made as to the adequacy of supply of inflenza vaccine in the London area; what steps she is taking to ensure adequate supplies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information about the supply of influenza vaccine to particular areas is not available centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 17 January at columns 391-92, for details on the general supply of vaccine.

Child Resistant Closures

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she proposes to take to speed the pharmaceutical industry's development of a child resistant closure for liquid medicines.

Mr. Sackville: Some liquid medicines are already in child resistant containers. There are, however, technical difficulties in developing a closure which is effective for all types of liquid medicine containers and which could be adopted across the pharamaceutical industry and by pharmacists. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain and representatives of the pharmaceutical industry are in discussions to help speed up the development process.

Mental Illness Grant

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding will be available for the mental illness specific grant for the year 1994-95; and what are the planning figures for the following years;

(2) what plans she has to extend the mental illness specific grant beyond 1995.

Mr. Bowis: On 28 December 1993, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced that the mental illness specific grant will be increased to £36 million in 1994-95, supporting expenditure of over £51 million, and that it is planned that the grant will continue for at least another three years.

The 1993 public expenditure settlement provided for planning figures of £37·262 million and £38·262 million for 1995-96 and 1996-97 respectively. The planning figures are subject to discussion in future public expenditure rounds.

AIDS

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support the Government will be giving to London boroughs for their work in HIV and AIDS in 1994-95 and beyond; and what conclusions she has arrived at in reviewing this assistance.

Mr. Sackville: Funds will again be available in 1994-95 through the AIDS support grant scheme as a contribution towards local authorities' expenditure on HIV and AIDS. There are planning figures for the two subsequent years, which are subject to discussion in future public expenditure rounds.

The grant has made a valuable contribution to fostering joint co-operation in supporting people with HIV or AIDS and to limiting the spread of the virus.

Young People, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds there were in the Doncaster area in each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The population estimates requested, relating to Doncaster metropolitan district, are shown in the table.

Estimated mid-year resident population of Doncaster: Persons aged 16 to 17

Thousands

Year	Age 16	Age 17
1988	4·1	4·3
1989	3·9	4·1
1990	3·7	3·9
1991	3·6	3·8
1992	3·6	3·6

Abortion

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of terminations of pregnancy in (a) the North Devon health authority and (b) the East Berkshire health authority were carried out under the NHS in the last year for which figures are available; what would be the additional cost if the North Devon percentage applied nationwide; and what steps she is taking to establish reasons for geographical differences on the proportion of terminations of pregnancy carried out under the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The proportion of terminations of pregnancies for the two health authorities concerned for 1992 is as follows:

	[1]Total	[1]NHS funded	Per cent.
East Berkshire HA	1,157	120	10·4
North Devon HA	307	292	95·1

[1] These statistics are based on the (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys Abortion Monitor (AB 94/2) due to be published on 20 February 1994.

The cost of a termination of pregnancy in the national health service varies according to factors such as gestation and length of stay. It is not therefore possible to provide any meaningful estimate of the additional cost if the North Devon percentage applied nationwide. Arrangements for purchasing abortion services under the NHS are the responsibility of individual district health authorities in the light of their assessment of local needs and priorities.

Pain Clinics

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pain clinics are at present being operated by the NHS; and what is the average waiting time before patients are treated.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Social Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to encourage social care professionals to raise concerns about bad practice; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is the responsibility of both employers and professionals to ensure that any evidence of bad practice or misconduct is investigated appropriately and without delay.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to commission work on the definition of national standards in social care; who is undertaking the work; when it will be completed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We intend to issue a tender specification for a study of possible standards in the delivery of social care. We expect to do so before Easter.

Smoking

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount was spent by Government on discouraging smoking in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the amount spent by the Health Education Authority on discouraging smoking over the last five years on behalf of the Government.

Financial Year	Amount spent on discouraging smoking £
1988-89	1,318,000
1989-90	4,151,000
1990-91	3,435,000
1991-92	4,175,000
1992-93	5,438,000

Overall figures for spending within central Government on discouraging smoking could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to allow special hospitals to apply for trust status.

Mr. Bowis: We will decide on this in the light of our conclusions on the proposals in the Reed working group report.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the Reed report on special hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: It will be published when we have completed our consideration of its proposals on the future of high security psychiatric services.

Ashworth Hospital

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instruction was given to doctors following the Swann report into over-use of drugs at Ashworth hospital and on the reduction of drug levels; how this instruction was implemented; and what were the results.

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for the Special Hospitals Service Authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mrs. Anne-Marie Nelson.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members currently appointed to the national health service Supplies Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The chairman is Sir Robin Buchanan, and the other non-executive members are Mrs. Alison

Cook, Mr. Eric Greenhalgh, Mr. James Hammond, Mr. Fred Hoult and Miss Catherine McLoughlin. The executive members are Mr. Terry Hunt, Mr. Evan Sutherland, Mr. Richard Chantler, Mrs. Roxanne Sutton and Mr. Chris Uden.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members currently appointed to the registered homes tribunal.

Mr. Bowis: The members currently appointed to registered homes tribunals are:

Written Questions

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of answering a written parliamentary question in her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The current average cost of providing an answer to a written parliamentary question is estimated at £97. This information was provided in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993 at column 391.

Administrators

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrators worked in the NHS and trust hospitals five years ago and the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 2 December 1993:] The information available is shown in the table. Many of the administrative and clerical staff directly support medical and other professional staff. The figures for managers need to be treated with caution because much of the increase arises from the reclassification of existing staff. The number of managers has been deliberately increased since the mid-1980s—not just since the reforms—because the service was previously undermanaged.

WALES

Enterprise Zone

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made towards establishing an enteprise zone in Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Local authorities in the area are preparing an outline case for an enterprise zone.

Institute of Welsh Affairs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of the Institute of Welsh Affairs to discuss their recent proposals for the future of Wales; what new measures he is considering in the light of these proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I met representatives of the Institute of Welsh Affairs in July to hear of developments since the publication of its report, "Wales 2010: Creating Our Future". My officials continue to keep in close touch with the institute on further developments.

Schools Inspection

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total value of tenders placed in the financial year 1993-94 for the inspection of secondary schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for school inspection rests with the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales. I am informed that the total price of contracts let by OHMCI for the inspection of secondary schools in Wales so far this financial year is £1,510,617, including VAT.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Redwood: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers to ensure that all holders of personal data on computer are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out, the data protection principles and the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, apply to both the owner of the personal data and the service provider. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1990-91 the running costs of Ministers' official cars have increased by 12 per cent.—including the VAT increase in April 1991—resulting in additional costs in 1993-94 of £13,000. Further minor increases are attributable to changes in patterns of usage.

Strategic Planning Guidance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding strategic planning guidance in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received representations from various organisations about strategic planning guidance in Wales both in correspondence and at meetings.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report". On an individual basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Badgers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county the number of badgers shot and gassed in each year since 1988; and what percentage of those badgers were subsequently shown to have tuberculosis.

Mr. Redwood: The number of badgers killed, following trapping during state veterinary service badger removal operations, in Wales since 1988 is as follows:

Year	Number of Badgers killed	Number positive
1989	5	0
1990	9	1
1993	10	0

The figures relate to the county of Dyfed. No badgers have been killed by the state veterinary service in any other county in Wales since 1988. The legal gassing of badgers ceased on 26 June 1982.

DEFENCE

Artillery Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department holds on the trading relationship between Allivane International Ltd., Allivane International Group or Aerotechnologies Ltd. of London and Glasgow, with the Chartered Chemical Industries Pte. Ltd. of Singapore in regard to the sale and manufacture of artillery shells.

Mr. Aitken: My Department holds no information on any trading relationship between these companies and the Chartered Chemical Industries Pte. Ltd. of Singapore.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department holds on the trading relationship between Royal Ordnance and the Chartered Chemical Industries Pte. Ltd. of Singapore in regard to artillery shells.

Mr. Aitken: My Department holds no information on any trading relationship between Royal Ordnance and the Chartered Chemical Industries Pte Ltd. of Singapore.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on matters in regard to the proliferation of plutonium and other nuclear materials discussed at the NATO summit in Brussels on 10 and 11 January.

Mr. Hanley: The NATO summit declaration, to which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister referred in his statement of 12 January, Official Report, columns 177-79, sets out in paragraph 17 the alliance policy on proliferation. A copy of the declaration has been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department prepared proposals for the second preparatory committee meeting for the fifth review and renewal conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty held in New York from 17 January.

Mr. Hanley: My Department continues to be closely involved with the United Kingdom's participation in the work of the second preparatory committee.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research is currently being conducted by his Blacknest verification laboratory into establishing a robust verification procedure to monitor a comprehensive nuclear test ban; and what resources are committed annually to such verification research.

Mr. Aitken: The Atomic Weapons Establishment, of which the Blacknest laboratory is a part, has been contracted by the Ministry of Defence to carry out work on the verification procedures necessary to monitor a comprehensive nuclear test ban. Expenditure on unclassified work in this area is likely to be about £1·5 million per annum.

Landing Platform Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the best and final offer accepted from VSEL in respect of the landing platform helicopter carrier since 11 May 1993; and what is the reason for any subsequent adjustments.

Mr. Aitken: VSEL has contracted to provide a vessel which meets the Department's requirements as set out in the procurement specification. As the design progresses, it is normal for alterations to the details of the specification to be discussed. These discussions are still ongoing and any changes to the specification will be rigorously controlled to ensure that cost estimates are not exceeded and value for money is achieved. My Department is not renegotiating the contract with VSEL.

Royal Naval Engineering College

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of recarpeting work carried out at the Royal Naval engineering college in Plymouth during the last 12 months.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost of recarpeting work carried out during the last 12 months is £10,000.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of replacing and installing perimeter fencing and lighting at the Royal Naval engineering college in Plymouth since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost of replacing and installing perimeter fencing and lighting since 1990 is £330,000.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of building, maintenance and refurbishment work carried out at the Royal Naval engineering college in Plymouth during the last two financial years.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost of building, maintenance and refurbishment work carried out during the last two financial years is £1,557,000 in financial year 1991-92 and £2,798,000 in financial year 1992-93.

Royal Navy (Visits to South Africa)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made recently for Royal Navy ships to visit South Africa; what was the purpose of each of those visits; and which of those visits has been in connection with the sale of arms.

Mr. Aitken: The only visit of Royal Navy ships to South Africa to have been arranged in recent years is that of HMS Norfolk and the tanker RFA Grey Rover. This visit will take place later this month. The purpose of the visit is to re-establish relations between the Royal Navy and the South African navy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Hague: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the total cost to the Benefits Agency in 1993 of those Christmas cards sent out by senior executives in their official capacity.

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the total cost to the Benefits Agency of Christmas cards issued by its senior executives in an official capacity.

The senior executives of the Benefits Agency (BA) are myself, as the Chief Executive, and my Directors, who form the Benefits Agency Management Team.

A number of greetings cards were issued by myself and my Directors to managers, staff and outside organisations, but the cost of these cards and any postage costs incurred were funded, in the main, by the individual concerned.

The Agency also produced "official" Christmas cards which appeared in two designs and were of a functional nature, carrying a number of Freeline and Helpline telephone numbers, which are on the reverse of the card. These cards were available to all staff within BA and their intended purpose was one of liaison and information. It was felt that there was a good opportunity at Christmas, by way of a simple greetings card, to issue a reminder to the organisations with which the Agency has contact.

A number of these "official cards" were issued by myself and my Directors, to government officials and outside bodies and organisations. Where possible such cards were distributed, along with other items of official mail, within the internal courier system at no extra cost to the Agency. Where postage costs were incurred these were restricted to second class postage.

The cost to the Agency of Christmas cards issued by myself and my Directors in an official capacity, including postage, was £48·96.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Job Seeker's Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent the job seeker's allowance will be financed by the national insurance fund.

Mr. Burt: Payments of the job seekers allowance which are made on the basis of national insurance contribution records will be met from the national insurance fund.

Young People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds in the Doncaster area applied for severe hardship payments in each year from 1988; and what percentage of applicants were successful.

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about Severe Hardship Payments to 16 and 17-year-olds in the Doncaster area.

The information requested in this question is not available in the format required and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. This is because the statistics kept cover the number of applications, rather than the number of individuals who have claimed. Some customers may have made more than one application. Also, the statistics collected do not distinguish between 16 and 17-year-olds.

However, I have provided figures from the earliest date available, 1989, in the attached appendix, relating to successful applications for Severe Hardship Payments.

I should point out that the statistics relate to Benefits Agency Districts and are not routinely collected to show the number of claims specific to a town. The statistics given for Doncaster relate to the Benefits Agency's Doncaster East and Doncaster West offices.

16/17-year-olds severe hardship applications—Doncaster district office

Year	Total applications	Number successful	Percentage successful
1989	97	64	66
1990	103	68	66
1991	349	263	75
1992	541	382	71
1993	650	543	84

Disability

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) disability living allowance, (c) family credit, (d) income support, (e) invalidity benefit and (f) sickness benefit in (i) Barking and Dagenham and (ii) Redbridge.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M Bichard to Mr. Mike Gapes, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about benefit recipients in Barking, Dagenham and Redbridge.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because Benefits Agency District boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries. However, I have provided figures relating to Barking Benefits Office, which covers the Barking and Dagenham area, and Ilford District Office, which covers the Redbridge area. I should point out that both those offices deal with areas other than Barking, Dagenham and Redbridge. The statistics provided, therefore, include a small number of people who do not live in those areas.

I should also explain that Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance are centrally administered benefits. To obtain figures for specific areas would result in disproportionate cost.

Statistical data for each of the benefits is collected and collated over different periods and timescales. The figures provided are the latest available for each benefit.

The numbers of people receiving Income Support, at November 1993, are as follows:

	Number
Barking Benefits Office	38,230
Ilford District Office	60,239

The numbers of people receiving Family Credit, at 24 December 1993, are as follows:

	Number
Barking Benefits Office	934
Ilford District Office	992

The numbers of people claiming Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit, at the last working day of December 1993, are as follows:

	Number
Barking Benefits Office
Sickness Benefit	2,025
Invalidity Benefit	4,083
Ilford District Office
Sickness Benefit	2,766
Invalidity Benefit	4,529

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled persons are employed on (a) a full-time basis and (b) a part-time basis in Benefits Agency local offices in the Doncaster area; and what

Mr. Burt: The responsibility for Benefits Agency staff is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of disabled people employed in the Benefits Agency's offices in the Doncaster area.

There are 320 staff employed in the two offices in the Doncaster area: Doncaster East and Doncaster West. Of the 245 who work full time, nine are registered disabled, and this represents 2·81 per cent. of all staff. Of the 75 staff who work part time, none are registered disabled.

Information is not available for disabled staff who are not registered.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where is the weather station which provides the recordings to enable cold weather payments to be made to citizens resident in Doncaster; what reviews he is currently carrying out to change the location of the weather station in relation to Doncaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the Library. There are currently no plans to change the weather stations covering the Doncaster area.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Investors Compensation Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from hon. Members since January 1990 on the operaton of the investors compensation scheme; what discussions he has had with the officers of the scheme arising from such discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have received a number of such representations. The Securities and Investments Board has recently consulted about the funding of the scheme and is currently consulting about a number of minor changes to the rules. While the rules are a matter for SIB and decisions in individual cases are matters for the board, I am very conscious of the valuable work carried out by the scheme.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers have been in post each year since 1979, solely involved in the detection of the illegal import of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The only customs staff whose duties are solely involved in the detection of illegal imports of drugs are those who work in the customs investigation division and local collection investigation units. The relevant numbers are:

Year	Number
1979-80	121
1980-81	133
1981-82	152
1982-83	183
1983-84	201
1984-85	212
1985-86	262
1986-87	297
1987-88	376
1988-89	395
1989-90	420
1990-91	568
1991-92	576
1992-93	582
[1]1993-94	591

[1] estimate

In addition, all staff employed on anti-smuggling duties at ports and airports have a prime responsibility in the detection of the illegal importation of drugs as well as of other prohibitied and restricted goods.

Non-elected Authorities

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was spent by central and local government and within central Government by non-elected authorities, for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Nelson: Information on gross domestic product and central and local government expenditure is readily available on the CSO database in the following series—identified by their database code:

EBAO: GDP at market prices adjusted for the distortion caused in the abolition of domestic rates

ABAC: Central government contribution to general government expenditure

ABAD: Local authority contribution to general government expenditure.

The database can be accessed on-line by the House of Commons Library.

Information on non-departmental public bodies is available in the annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies".

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount corporation tax receipts have been reduced in each of the last five years by the offsetting of costs associated with tobacco advertising, including sponsorship, against taxable profits.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information is not available.

Income Tax

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would have been the average percentage loss of income due to an increase of 7p in the pound in income tax, instead of the measures imposed in the March and November 1993 budgets, for the 10 per cent. lowest income group and the 10 per cent. highest income group.

Mr. Dorrell: The distribution of income tax can be analysed using the annual survey of personal incomes which records information about individuals who have some tax liability. On the basis of a projection to 1994-95 of the 1991-92 survey the income net of income tax of the top 10 per cent. of taxpayers would fall by about 4·1 per cent. as a result of a 7p increase in the basic rate of income tax. The bottom 10 per cent. of taxpayers pay tax only at the lower rate and would be unaffected by a change in the basic rate.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractors (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer's departments are currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Tax Relief

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend extra-statutory concession A25, claims for tax relief, to include taxpayers restrained by the time limit relating to the setting back of retirement annuity relief and similar statutorily imposed time limits.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to extend extra-statutory concession A25. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, he may wish to write to me.

English Courses (VAT)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the revenue raised from levying value-added tax on fees paid by students undertaking English as a foreign language course in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: No estimates are available.

Unofficial Economy

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to estimate the size of the unofficial economy; and what this represents as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Nelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Caernafon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 January 1993 at column 618.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give in cash terms the level of the net public sector debt for each year since 1979 together with his forecasts using the prediction contained in the Red Book for each year until 1999 using either end of financial year dates or other convenient dates.

Mr. Nelson: The table shows data for net public sector at end-March for each year from 1979 to 1993, plus projections for 1994 and 1995 consistent with the Budget forecast.

Net public sector debt (end-March figures)

[1]Forecast.

Projections for 1995-96 to 1998-99 for net public sector debt as a percent of GDP are shown in chart 2.3 of the 1994-95 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". These projections show net public sector debt peaking at around 44 per cent. of GDP at end-March 1997, and falling thereafter. They are illustrative and depend on the assumptions made about growth of the economy.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Nelson: A total of 1,175 official Christmas cards were sent by Ministers and 2,497 by civil servants in the Treasury in 1993. These cards cost £1,028·16 to buy. No record is available of the methods used to deliver the cards which would enable an accurate assessment to be made of postage costs. Equally no record is available of staff time involved in signing, addressing and placing the Christmas cards in envelopes.

Sporting Services (VAT)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for finalising legislation which would exempt from value-added tax sporting services supplied to people taking part in sport or physical education by non-profit-making bodies and local authorities.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 12 January, at column 189.

Taxation

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) of 15 December 1992, Official Report, columns 120-26, and provide latest estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95, including figures for the community charge and council tax as appropriate.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 January 1994]: Updated figures for 1992-93, including estimates of community charge payments, and the latest estimates for 1993-94 and 1994-95 for direct and indirect taxes excluding local taxes are given in the tables on a similar basis to that provided to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 15 December 1992. No estimates of council tax payments for specimen households in 1993-94 can be provided until the 1993 family expenditure survey is published.

Notes to tables:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.
3. In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.
4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are assumed to be £347·70 a week in 1992-93, £359·90 a week in 1993-94 and £374·30 a week in 1994-95, based on illustrative earnings growth assumptions of 3½ per cent. in 1993-94 and 4 per cent. in 1994-95.
5. The estimates of most indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. Estimates of VAT on domestic fuel and power are based on equations using results from the 1991 family expenditure survey, uprated using a similar methodology. These estimates are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.
6. Estimates of the burden of the community charge has been derived from the 1991 and 1992 Family Expenditure Surveys. All respondents were assumed to pay the community charge to which they were liable. The calculations include water charges in order to put the estimates on a comparable basis to the estimates for earlier years. Community charge payments are net of transitional relief and community charge benefit. Since community charge payments vary widely between households with similar incomes, estimated charge payments are only approximate.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a full list of all statements made by Ministers in his Department, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the channel tunnel rail link, the dates on which each such statement was made, and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), in his Budget statement of 16 March 1993, Official Report, column 194, said that he hoped to see the new line completed around the end of the decade.

Crossrail

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a full list of all statements made by Ministers in his Department, and/or press notices issued by his Department, which referred to a possible completion date for the crossrail project, the dates on which each such statement was made and the possible completion date which was mentioned.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 January 1994]: I am not aware of any such statements or press notices.

Private Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the 10 companies included in the survey commissioned from KPMG Peat Marwick by the Securities and Investments Board recently, on the transferring of assets from occupational to private pension schemes.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The survey was commissioned by SIB. I understand that the firms included in the survey—10 LAUTRO regulated firms, eight IMRO regulated firms and 43 members of FIMBRA—were chosen as firms representative of those involved in the selling of personal pensions. Because the study was intended to establish the extent of compliance in the industry as a whole it would be unfair and misleading to single out those firms included in the survey by publishing their names.

Air Passenger Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigation his Department intends to undertake into the effect of air passenger duty on air fares within the United Kingdom; what estimate he has made as to the impact on business and leisure use of air transport, particularly to the airports operated by Highlands and Islands Airports; and what evidence he has received from other European countries as to the impact of such taxation on transport.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 January 1994]: Air passenger duty is expected to increase return air fares within the United Kingdom and to other EC countries by £5; and to other destinations by £10. For the purpose of analysing the effects of the duty we have assumed airlines will fully pass on the duty to passengers in the form of higher fares. The price elasticity for business journeys is estimated to be –0·3; for non-business journeys to be –1·25. Overall, the tax is expected to reduce demand for air travel by around 2½ per cent. There is insufficient information available to estimate the impact of the tax on airports operated by Highland and Islands airports. No information has been received from other European countries on the impact of the introduction of such taxation on transport.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

DAF Leyland

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the 1990, 1991 and 1992 accounts of DAF Leyland were filed at Companies House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This matter is for Companies House. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. D. Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 17 January 1994:

You tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade, when the 1990, 1991 and 1992 accounts of DAF Leyland were filed at Companies House."

As this is a matter which is my responsibility as Chief Executive and Registrar of Companies House, I am writing to you direct.

There is no company currently registered under the name of DAF Leyland. I presume that the company in which you are interested is Leyland DAF Limited. I should point out that there are in fact 13 companies on the register with the name Leyland DAF in their title, but for the purposes of this reply I have concentrated on the two major companies within the group, Leyland DAF Limited and Leyland DAF Holdings Limited.

Leyland DAF Limited and Leyland DAF Holdings Limited both delivered accounts for the period ending 31 December 1990 on 10 October 1991. Failure of the directors of these companies to deliver accounts for the period ended 31 December 1991 were followed up with the companies in accordance with normal procedures.

I was subsequently notified that an administrative receiver had been appointed for both companies on 3 February 1993. The receiver submitted the relevant receivership documents. The companies will not now be pursued for statutory documents but the receiver has an obligation to send me accounts of the receipts and payments to cover the first 12 months of the receivership and six monthly periods thereafter. A report from the receiver was delivered to Companies House for both companies on 2 September 1993.

Should the companies survive the receivership and emerge as active and wishing to remain on the register, the directors will be obliged to deliver outstanding statutory documents including those which became outstanding prior to the appointment of the receiver.

I hope this reply has covered the points tabled in your question. If you are interested in any other company within the Leyland DAF group please do not hesitate to let me know.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update to the present the answer given to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 17 October 1990, Official Report, column 837, on export credits to Iraq.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is contained in the answer that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 12 January at column 236.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what benefits have accrued to United Kingdom business from exhibitions at the Baghdad international arms fairs.

Mr. Needham: I assume the question refers to the international exhibition for military production held in Baghdad in 1989 in which a number of British companies participated. It is for the companies themselves to say what commercial benefits accrued as a result.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the most recent United Kingdom-Iraq joint committee on trade was held; what matters were discussed; and what was decided.

Mr. Needham: The most recent UK-Iraq joint commission was held from 27 to 30 November 1989. It reviewed the implementation of the agreement on economic and technical co-operation signed on 24 June 1981. A financial protocol was signed for ECGD supported medium-term credits, up to a value of £250 million, in respect of the export of capital goods and services to Iraq by United Kingdom companies. In the event, however, loan agreements in respect of this sum were not signed and none of the £250 million, therefore, was utilised by Iraq.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has sent a copy of the Kemp report on the ECGD to the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Needham: A copy of the Kemp report which reviewed the status options for ECGD has not been sent to the Scott inquiry since it does not fall within the categories of documents requested by the inquiry.

Export Credits Guarantees Department

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the nature of his Department's responsibility for and oversight of the ECGD since it was sold.

Mr. Needham: The short-term business of ECGD, formerly operated by its insurance services arm, was privatised on 1 December 1991. The privatised company has to meet the regulatory requirements of the DTI pertaining to private sector insurance companies. ECGD continues to be a separate Department of the Secretary of State, principally concerned with credit insurance support for capital goods and project exports, typically sold on medium and long terms of credit. The Government have agreed to provide various supplemental reinsurance facilities to the private sector through ECGD to ensure that sufficient capacity is available to meet the needs of United Kingdom companies exporting on short terms of credit.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department retains records of ECGD activities prior to its privatisation.

Mr. Needham: The Secretary of State retains the right of access to records held by NCM Credit Insurance Ltd. to satisfy ECGD's requirements in terms of its trading and appropriation accounts, its public accountability obligations and to ensure the company complies with the terms of agreements entered into with ECGD in the context of the privatisation.

British Coal

Mr. Lester: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what total amount of subsidy towards the cost of production has been paid by the Department to British Coal since the 1993 coal White Paper;

(2) what conditions need to be met in order to claim a subsidy from the Government to British Coal towards the cost of production from a particular mine;

(3) how many requests his Department has received from British Coal since last March for a subsidy to a mine or group of mines; and how many have been accepted.

Mr. Eggar: The coal subsidy is available to both British Coal, and private sector producers, in support of genuinely additional sales of deep mined coal for electricity generation, at world market related prices. Applications are considered on a case-by-case basis, taking into account a range of factors including, the price paid for the coal, which should be related to world market prices, current and projected production costs at the pit, the financial performance of the pit and the position of competing producers, as it is important to ensure that United Kingdom opencast producers are not unfairly disadvantaged.

The Department of Trade and Industry has received a number of bids for subsidy since March 1993. Details of individual applications are commercially confidential, but so far, two offers of subsidy have been made to British Coal, in support of sales from Ellington colliery. Both offers are subject to EC clearance.

The subsidy is payable in arrears in line with actual deliveries made. To date, no subsidy has been paid to British Coal. Details of the total amount of subsidy awarded will however be made available to Parliament in the normal way.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the consultants commissioned by him to report on the restructuring and privatisation of British Coal; what are their terms of reference; when each piece of work was commissioned; and when it was completed.

Mr. Eggar: Details of consultants appointed by the Department on privatisation and associated restructuring are as follows:

Consultant	Date	Scope of work
NM Rothschild	30 May 1991	Provision of financial advice in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry.
Clifford Chance	19 June 1991	Provision of legal advice in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry.
John T. Boyd	5 August 1991	Provision of advice on technical matters related to evaluating the potential for improvements in mining productivity and costs in the United Kingdom coal industry and other similar matters that may be specified in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry.
Touche Ross	12 June 1991	Provision of accounting and regulatory advice in connection with the privatisation of the coal industry.
RPS Consultants	12 July 1993	Identification of and advice on environmental liabilities.
Dewe Rogerson	28 July 1992	Provision of marketing advice for privatisation.
Wardell Armstrong	5 August 1991	Provision of advice on technical matters related to minerals leasing and licensing.
Peter Williams	7 January 1992	Provision of advice on coal mining safety matters in connection with the privatisation of British Coal.

The consultants' work is continuing as work on privatisation progresses.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost including expenses of all consultancies he has commissioned on the restructuring and privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure on consultancies in connection with the privatisation of British Coal for 1991-92 and 1992-93 was £3·3 million, including VAT, and £3·5 million, including VAT, respectively. Provision for 1993-94 is £13·5 million, including VAT. The consultancies budget for 1994-95 has still to be decided.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Eggar: The Department did not have an official Christmas card last year. The use of Christmas cards by the Department's executive agencies is a day-to-day operational matter for their chief executives, but I understand that in 1993 the following DTI agencies sent out official cards: Accounts Services Agency, Companies House, Laboratory of the Government Chemist, National Engineering Laboratory, National Physical Laboratory, National Weights and Measures Laboratory, Patent Office, Radiocommunications Agency and Warren Spring Laboratory. Details of these and any other mailings of Christmas cards are not held centrally.

Consultancies

Ms Abbott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Eggar: My Department does not classify consultancy contracts in terms of the type of organisations awarded them and the information requested cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

AKZO-Nobel Industrier

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer the proposed merger between AKZO and Nobel Industrier to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. This merger falls to be considered under the EC merger regulation. I understand the concerns that my hon. Friend has expressed about this transaction and I can assure him that these were taken into account in the full comments which the United Kingdom has passed to the EC Commission. A decision as to whether a detailed investigation should be undertaken is a matter for the Commission.

Ofwat Customer Services Committees

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria are used in determining nominations for the chairmanship of regional Ofwat customer services committees.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services.

Jetstream Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the agreement of GATT on the future prospects for the sale of Jetstream aircraft overseas.

Mr. Sainsbury: No new agreement on civil aircraft —a category which includes aircraft of all sizes, aero-engines and equipment—was concluded at the end of the Uruguay round. The parties involved agreed to retain the status quo, and to continue negotiations for a further year on the basis of a text drafted by the chairman of the relevant GATT sub-committee. It is therefore unlikely that Jetstream's sales prospects will be affected in the short term.

In the long term, our aim is to put into place an agreement which controls all forms of government support to the aerospace industry in a balanced way. Such an agreement would be of benefit to Jetstream as well as to the rest of the United Kingdom aerospace industry.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action he will take to recover the levy paid to Nuclear Electric in the current financial year following the publication of the most recent figures regarding the cost of decommissioning nuclear power stations;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect on costs of decommissioning power stations recently published by the nuclear industry on the validity of the estimates on which the fossil fuel levy was based; and what plans he has to reduce or end the levy.

Mr. Eggar: The fossil fuel levy enables the full costs of nuclear generation in England and Wales, including making provision for the costs of decommissioning Nuclear Electric's stations, to be met. The sums to be raised by the levy over the period 1990-1998 were determined in 1990 in the light of Nuclear Electric's best estimates at that time of the full costs of its stations and in the light of reductions in these costs which Nuclear Electric aimed to achieve. This is reflected in the fact that the amount raised for Nuclear Electric from the levy is schedule to decline in real terms up to 1998, providing the company with an incentive to reduce its costs. The levy arrangements in respect of nuclear power are due to end in 1998.

The House of Commons Trade and Industry Committee made certain recommendations in respect of the levy in its report "British Energy Policy and the Market for Coal" (HC 237). The Government will take account of these recommendations in their review of the future prospects for nuclear power.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how GATT will affect the ability of Rolls-Royce in Coventry to compete with other aero engine manufacturers.

Mr. Sainsbury: no new agreement on civil aircraft—a category which includes aero-engines—was concluded at the end of the Uruguay round. The parties involved agreed to retain the status quo, and to continue negotiations for a further year on the basis of a text drafted by the chairman of the relevant GATT sub-committee. Thus, the competitive position of Rolls-Royce will not be affected immediately.

In the long term, our aim is to put into place an agreement which controls all forms of government support to the aerospace industry, in particular the high levels of indirect support which the United States aero-engine industry receives. Such an agreement would help Rolls-Royce to compete on an equal basis in world markets.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what request he has received from Rolls-Royce for launch aid.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to confirm or deny whether applications for support have been received from particular companies, as any such applications are treated as commercially confidential.

Digital Audio Broadcasting

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether any decision has been reached on the allocation of radio frequency spectrum to allow the introduction of digital audio broadcasting into the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have decided to make available the frequency band 217·5 MHz to 230 MHz to enable terrestrial digital audio broadcasting—T-DAB—services to begin in the United Kingdom. Broadcasters and equipment manufacturers will now be able to make plans for sound broadcasting services and for the production of receivers with more certainty.

The various interests which were brought together by the President of the Board of Trade in February in a DAB forum, which has the aim of promoting plans for the introduction of this important new development into the United Kingdom, will also now be better placed to take investment and other decision, taking into account factors such as the benefits to listeners and the potential for business opportunities which will be created within and outside the United Kingdom.

The DAB forum has enabled the various interests to make significant progress in planning for the introduction of DAB including the technical details, the business issues and the regulatory environment. This has built on the success of the Eureka project in which the United Kingdom—(notably the BBC—played a leading role, and has helped the United Kingdom remain in the vanguard of this exciting new challenge and opportunity for broadcasters and manufacturers.

The Government's decision to make available scarce frequencies in a prime location in the radio spectrum to allow services to start up is a further demonstration of our commitment to play a full part in enabling the devolopment of DAB in this country for the benefit of United Kingdom industry as well as United Kingdom listeners.

Regulations (Impact Costs)

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the cost impact of complying with proposed regulations is to be assessed with regard to small businesses.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are introducing today a small business litmus test as part of the compliance cost assessment procedure to ensure that the cost impact of proposed regulation on small businesses is fully taken into account. The test will normally take the form of a requirement for departments to consult two or three small firms typical of the sector affected by the regulation and discuss with them what the impact would be. Departments may apply an alternative test if this would give a better and clearer picture of the impact. The results of the test are to be included in the compliance cost assessment on the proposed regulation.

I am arranging for a note of the full terms of the small business litmus test to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

EC Aid Programmes

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place a copy of his response to the European Commissioner's consultative document on the future of Rechar and other EC-wide aid programmes in the Library.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 12 January at column 240.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts made provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Sproat: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Unicorn Heritage plc

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the reasons for his decision to declare as unrecoverable the grant made to Unicorn Heritage plc to promote the royal heritage exhibition.

Mr. Sproat: The writing-off of debts relating to grants paid under the section 4 grant scheme is an administrative procedure that does not require the intervention of the Secretary of State. In the case of Unicorn Heritage plc, the English tourist board was informed by the company's liquidators that there was no prospect of the debt being paid. The board accordingly recommended to my Department that the debt should be written off. My Department accepted the board's recommendation and once Treasury approval had been granted, the debt was duly written off. Unicorn Heritage plc was treated in exactly the same way as any other company would have been in the circumstances.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the practices and criteria used to write off grants made by the English tourist board; and if he will make a statement with regard to the write-off of the £200,000 grant for Unicorn Heritage plc awarded in December 1988.

Mr. Sproat: The English tourist board has discretion to seek repayment of any grant made under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 if there is a breach of the grant conditions. Having raised a debt, the board will investigate the likelihood of repayment. If, following these investigations, the board judges that the debt is irrecoverable, it will formally recommend to my Department that the debt should be written off. My Department has authority to write off debts up to a value of £100,000. Debts over £100,000 can be written off only with Treasury approval.

In the case of Unicorn Heritage plc, I am satisfied that the English tourist board investigated thoroughly the possibility of repayment, and that the write-off procedures were correctly applied. Unicorn Heritage plc was treated in exactly the same way as any other company would have been in the circumstances.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what the accommodation at the occupied royal palaces consists of for (a) Princess Margaret, (b) the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, (c) Prince and Princess Michael of Kent, (d) the Duke and Duchess of Kent and (e) Princess Alexandra.

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

HRH the Princess Margaret

2 principal bedrooms
4 principal reception rooms

TRH the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester
Kensington Palace

4 principal bedrooms
7 principal reception rooms

TRH the Prince and Princess Michael of Kent

TRH the Duke and Duchess of Kent

6 principal reception rooms

HRH the Princess Alexandra

In each case, apart from HRH the Princess Alexandra, there is associated staff and ancillary accommodation.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the occupants of the grace and favour accommodation at the occupied royal palaces and of the offices most recently held by each of them.

Mr. Sproat: Occupants of accommodation at the occupied royal palaces are as follows:

	Occupants	Number

Twenty-three of the pensioners are retired employees of the royal household or their widows. The remaining four pensioners were granted accommodation in the past on a grace and favour basis.

Stately Homes

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from English Heritage about the effect on the future upkeep of stately homes of the financial situation of their owners.

Mr. Brooke: I have received no recent representations from English Heritage on the general issue of the effect on the future upkeep of stately homes of the financial situation of their owners, but various aspects of English Heritage's on-going work bear on this issue. For instance, English Heritage's tax review panel is considering the impact of current taxation on owners of historic property, including stately homes. My Department is kept in close touch with that work.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy that all capital building projects financed by revenue from the national lottery will include access and facilities for people with disabilities.

Mr. Brooke: It will be for the bodies identified in section 23 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 to consider applications for national lottery funds. I shall be encouraging them to ensure that capital projects financed from the national lottery take account of the needs of people with disabilities, as required by the building regulations.

Windsor Castle

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the National Heritage what damage has been caused to medieval wall paintings at Windsor castle by contractors; and if he will review the application of listed building controls to inhabited royal palaces.

Mr. Sproat: One chase approximately 8 ft high was made alongside a door architrave for the insertion of wiring, before the evidence of some paintwork concealed behind panelling and limewash was identified. The damage was localised and represented a fraction of an extensive area. Remedial conservation work has been undertaken.

The occupied royal palaces are not statutorily subject to scheduled monument consent or listed building consent because they are Crown property. However, in the case of Windsor castle and Kensington palace, which are scheduled ancient monuments, any proposed development is subject to a similar non-statutory procedure known as scheduled monument clearance. It is also the practice of the royal household to comply with listed building consent requirements at the other occupied royal palaces which are listed but not scheduled. There are no plans to alter these arrrangements.

British Library

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what additional costs have been incurred following the problems with wiring at the new British library building in St. Pancras.

Mr. Sproat: I expect the additional costs incurred in the employment of expert consultants, the direct costs of remedial works and the indirect cost of delay and disruption to be borne by the parties who have contributed to these costs, and not by the Exchequer. It is too early to estimate what the sum involved is likely to be.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Sproat: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report". On an individual contact basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Geese

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many geese, of what species and in which locations, have been culled on the authority of his Department; and if he will give similar details for any proposed future culls.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. Tony Banks, dated 17 January 1994:

Mr. Ian Sproat, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number and types of geese that have been culled in the Royal Parks.

We sought licences from the Department of the Environment last year, under the Countryside and Wildlife Act, to cull 100 Greylag and 200 Canada geese. In the event, we culled 61 Greylag and 107 Canada geese.

We will continue to monitor the situation, in the light of which we may apply for further licences in the future.

Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contribution his Department made to the European year of older people and solidarity between generations in terms of financial support, practical support for particular events, and the provision of information.

Mr. Sproat: Almost all of my Department's executive functions are carried out by its two executive agencies and by its 43 non-departmental public bodies which operate at arm's length from Government. My officials wrote to the chief officers of those bodies in 1992 to advise them that 1993 had been designated European year of older people and solidarity between generations so that they could consider what contribution could be made by their respective bodies within the programmes funded through the Department.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in which programmes and events for the European year of older people and solidarity between generations he has been directly involved.

Mr. Sproat: None; the chief officers of the 43 non-departmental public bodies through which my Department's programmes are delivered and which operate at arm's length from Government, were asked to consider what contributions could be made in support of the year by their respective bodies.

Television, Wales

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will discuss with S4C the feasibility of securing satellite television air time to ensure that all residents within Wales are able to receive Welsh language television programmes.

Mr. Brooke: No. Responsibility for coverage of television services lies with the broadcasters, including S4C, which determine their priorities in the light of the resources available to them.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which communities within Wales which are at present unable to receive a reasonable reception of programmes transmitted by S4C and at least one English language television channel based in Wales could technically be served by a system of low power local relay masts; how many residents could be served by each mast; and how much each mast would cost to erect and maintain.

Mr. Brooke: Information about reception of television services by communities in Wales was given in my replies to questions from the hon. Member on 14 December 1993, Official Report, columns 577-78. The additional information about coverage could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The broadcasters estimate that the average cost of building a low-power television relay station is about £40,000, with maintenance costs of about £3,000 a year.

"Big Story" Broadcast

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what discussions he has had with the Independent Television Commission regarding the espousal of burglary, surveillance and war on the water by Greenpeace in pursuit of the making of Carlton television's "Big Story" broadcast on 6 January;

(2) what action he intends to take following the illegal forced entry to premises by Twenty Twenty Television during the making of Carlton television's "Big Story" broadcast on 6 January.

Mr. Brooke: I do not intend to discuss this with the Independent Television Commission. It would be for it to decide whether any action should be taken. The Broadcasting Complaints Commission can also examine complaints about unwarranted invasion of privacy. Ultimately, it would be for the courts to determine whether criminal activity had taken place.

Film Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what recent representations he has received concerning incentives for investment in film production; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to issue a consultation document on the introduction of incentives to encourage investment in film production; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he last met representatives of the British film industry to discuss the prospects for that industry; with whom he met; and what action he proposes to take as a result of that meeting.

Mr. Brooke: I regularly receive representations concerning possible measures to increase investment in film production. In December, I discussed the prospects of the British film industry with representatives of the Producers Alliance for Cinema and Television and the film producer Mr. Edward Simons. So far as possible future Government action to help the industry is concerned, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 11 January, Official Report, column 70.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Sproat: Some 2,500 Christmas cards were purchased by the Department of National Heritage at a cost of £628·76. Of these, some 1,100 were supplied to Ministers. The remaining cards were available for use by civil servants. Cards were dispatched at normal second class postal rate, or were sent via the Government inter-departmental service. It is not possible to quantify the cost in staff time to sign, address and envelope the cards.

I have asked the chief executive of the Historic Royal Palaces and the Royal Parks agencies to write to the hon. Member about the practices in their agencies.

ENVIRONMENT

London Policy

14. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has had to the consultation document on London policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: So far over 9,000 completed questionnaries from "London: Making the Best Better" have been returned and I have also received over 200 letters in response to the publication. I will publish a digest of the response in March when replies have been analysed by my Department. All completed questionnaires received by mid-February will be taken into account in this analysis.

Local Government Reorganisation

15. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Government's current attitude to local government reorganisation.

Mr. Curry: We are committed to the Local Government Commission's reviews of shire counties in England, which should lead to more convenient and effective local government reflecting the identities and interests of local people.

20. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in favour of local government reorganisation in England.

Mr. Curry: Since issuing our consultation paper on the structure of local government in April 1991 we have received many representations in favour of reorganisation from local authorities, individuals and representatives of the business community, as well as Members of the House. It is not possible, however, to produce a definitive list of all the representations we have received except at disproportionate cost.

35. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress to date made by the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Curry: The Local Government Commission's reviews are proceeding on schedule. It has submitted final reports on the Isle of Wight, Derbyshire, Cleveland, Durham, Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset. Its final recommendations on Humberside, Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire are due on 23 January. It began on 13 December 1993 reviews of all the remaining shire counties in England and has been directed to submit final recommendations on these counties by the end of 1994.

Local Authority Debt

16. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current extent of local authority debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: At 31 March 1993, the total outstanding debt of local authorities in England was £37·6 billion. We shall continue to encourage authorities to reduce their debts.

Affordable Housing

17. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received over the shortage of affordable rented accommodation.

Sir George Young: I and my Department continue to receive a regular flow of representations about the quality and quantity of rented housing. I am glad to tell the hon. Member that we are on course to exceed our commitment to providing 153,000 homes through housing associations over the first three years of this Parliament; the Housing Corporation now estimates that on the latest plans some 178,000 will have been completed by the end of 1994-95.

32. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the amount of affordable housing in inner London.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation recently announced the allocation of £285 million of resources to Housing Association projects in inner London. This will provide over 5,000 additional homes to rent and over 2,000 additional lettings through the tenant incentive and sale programmes.

Local authorities can increase the supply of available housing for rent by reducing the number of vacant and squatted properties. Inner London has made good progress in the last five years, reducing by 7,500 the number of vacant and squatted council dwellings, but there is more to be done.

We expect to provide about £358 million in 1994-95 to assist the repair and regeneration of inner London estates through HIP, estate action and housing action trusts. We will also be funding cash incentive schemes which increase the number of council homes available for letting and we will provide £86 million over the next three years through the rough sleepers initiative, largely to provide homes for single homeless people.

We also have initiatives such as flats over shops, housing associations as managing agents and tax incentives to take in lodgers which increase the supply of affordable housing through private renting.

Bathing Water Quality

18. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what standards he wishes to see implemented for the regulation of the quality of bathing water at Britain's beaches.

Mr. Atkins: The Government wish to see bathing water quality standards which are based on good scientific and medical advice. The forthcoming review of the EC bathing water directive will be an opportunity to ensure that the Community focuses on essential quality and health parameters.

Housing, Birmingham

19. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the impact of the Budget on housing in Birmingham.

Sir George Young: Birmingham housing has done extremely well from the Budget. Resources totalling over £78 million have been allocated in 1994-95 to renovate existing housing and build new. In addition, very large investments have been targeted to renovate some of the worst council estates through the estate action, city challenge and housing action trust initiatives, amounting to a further £60 million.

Respiratory Disease

21. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he is carrying out into the links between air pollution and respiratory disease.

Mr. Atkins: The Government sponsor a substantial body of research on links between air pollution and respiratory disease. Last July the Institute for Environment and Health was established to act as a focal point for research into the links between health and environmental quality generally, including air pollution.

Birds Directive

22. Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites the United Kingdom have been designated under the EC wild birds directive.

Mr. Atkins: Seventy-seven special protection areas have been designated in the United Kingdom. Further designations are expected shortly.

36. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with his opposite number in the Commission of the European Communities in relation to the designation of the lower Severn estuary special protection area under the 1979 wild birds directive.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Local Government Finance

23. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about local government finance since July.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle).

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will calculate the total potential spending by all local authorities in England in 1993-94 if they all spent to the maximum of the capped levels, and the similar total potential spending for 1994-95 according to the provisional figures so far announced.

Mr. Baldry: The aggregates of the maximum budget requirements which could be calculated by English local authorities within the capping principles adopted for 1993-94 and the provisional capping criteria for 1994-95 which my right hon. Friend has announced are respectively:

	£ billion
1993-94	36·790
[1]1994-95	38·097

[1] Provisional.

These figures exclude the receiver for the Metropolitan police district—which is not subject to designation for capping under the provisions of the Local Government Finance Act 1992—local precepts, and appropriations from reserves.

Spending Plans

24. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reduction there is in the spending plans for 1994-95 to 1995-96 compared with his Department's plans in the 1992 autumn statement.

Mr. Gummer: Changes from the spending plans for my Department in the 1992 autumn statement were set out in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", a copy of which is in the Library.

29. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the estimate for spending in 1994-95 and 1995-96 contained in the 1992 autumn statement; what is the current spending plan for those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's spending plans for 1994-95 and 1995-96 were contained in table 2A.5 of the 1992 autumn statement. The latest plans are in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95". Copies of both documents are in the Library.

Waste Incineration

25. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the operation of current legislation on the operation of incinerators for the burning of waste material.

Mr. Atkins: Operators of waste incinerators are required by part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to apply for authorisation of the process and must demonstrate the use of best available techniques not entailing excessive cost—BATNEEC—to prevent or minimise pollution before the authorisation is issued. Guidance is given to local enforcing authorities by my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and for Scotland, and to the national inspectorate—HMIP and HMIPI in Scotland—by the chief inspectors. Both guidance notes and authorisations will be reviewed by the enforcing authorities at not more than four-yearly intervals.

33. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the critical loads advisory group can assist with decisions on the provision of incineration of industrial and domestic waste.

Mr. Atkins: Critical loads maps are published by my Department, and these may be used by the relevant pollution control authorities. The critical loads advisory group is currently investigating methods of improving the resolution of the maps.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

26. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in his plans to extend compulsory competitive tendering to councils' professional services.

Mr. Baldry: My Department is currently consulting local authorities and other interested parties on detailed proposals for extending CCT to local authority legal services. We will begin consulting on other white collar services in the course of this year. I anticipate that legislation will take effect in a phased programme beginning in October 1995.

27. Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in putting out local services to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Baldry: Many blue collar services are already subject to CCT and are coming up for their second cycle of tendering, comprising approximately £2 billion-worth of contracts. CCT will be introduced for further blue collar services and a wide range of white collar services, starting with on-street parking and vehicle management from 1 April 1995 and legal and construction services from 1 October 1995. These are further large areas of council activity involving services amounting to well over £4 billion in value.

Water and Sewerage Charges

28. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy in relation to the preferred method for the charging for domestic water and sewerage services.

Mr. Atkins: The basis of charging is a matter for the water companies. We have said that in our view there is a case for selective use of meters chiefly in areas of significant potential water shortage.

National Parks

30. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with the implementation of the Edwardes committee recommendations for national parks in England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: In 1992 we issued a major policy statement setting out our proposals for the national parks, including a commitment to legislate to establish independent authorities for all 10 parks. Unfortunately pressure on the parliamentary timetable has not allowed us to secure a place in the current session. However, Lord Norrie has recently announced his intention to introduce legislation in the House of Lords to establish independent authorities for all the parks and I am optimistic that the Government will be able to support it.

Minerals Planning Guidance

31. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will have completed his review of minerals planning guidance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We published revised mineral planning guidance for coal mining and colliery spoil disposal for public consultation on 14 December 1993. Comments are required by 18 March 1994. When the comments have been considered we would hope to make any necessary revisions and publish final guidance in the summer.

Standard Spending Assessment, Bournemouth

34. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the standard spending assessment for Bournemouth for 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: Within the proposals for revenue support grant in 1994-95 announced on 2 December 1993, the provisional standard spending assessment for Bournemouth is £18·18 million. We have consulted local authorities on these provisional figures and will reach final decisions shortly.

Housing Quality

37. Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government's policies to improve the quality of housing in outer ring areas of cities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Housing in outer ring areas of cities benefits in the same way as housing in other areas from the Government's policies to secure better value for money from the use of public funds; to encourage investment in the private rented sector, widening choice for tenants and increasing the supply of homes for rent; to promote the growth of owner occupation; and to direct public expenditure more effectively towards those people and areas that most need support.

As far as council housing is concerned, we aim to direct a larger share of spending power to those local authorities with the greatest needs, so outer ring areas with the most serious housing needs will receive greater help. Where local authority estates face particular difficulties, estate action helps local authorities to tackle their management and social and economic problems as well as their physical problems. For a few of the most severely run-down estates housing action trusts have been established to secure comprehensive regeneration—for example, in Castle Vale. The resources for both estate action and housing action trusts for 1994-95 were increased in the Budget; both will be included in the single regeneration budget, which will come into operation from April.

Litter

38. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of Chelmsford borough council's use of the power in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to enforce the law against litter.

Mr. Atkins: The Tidy Britain Group, which monitors local authorities performance under the Environmental Protection Act, tells me that Chelmsford borough council continues to make good use of the powers available to it. By employing litter wardens, adopting the fixed penalty scheme, and fining offenders, it is providing a strong deterrent to prospective litter louts.

Housing Land

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of available housing land broken down by region and estimated in terms of the number of properties.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not available.

The Department does collect information on land in England with outstanding planning permission for residential development, which represents one component of land available for housing. The latest results, for 1991-92, relate to private sector development only and were published in "Development Control Statistics: England 1991-92" which is available in the Library. The table, showing the area of land with planning permission for private housing development in each region of England, and the corresponding number of dwellings, is taken from that publication.

Since 1992, the Department has collected information on outstanding planning permissions for all residential development in England, public as well as private sector. The 1992-93 results will be published by the Department this summer in "Development Control Statistics: England 1992-93".

Lancashire (Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received on the pollution arising from the pollution incident off the coast of Lancashire on 2 January.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit was first informed of the incident on 1 January. Samples of the substance recovered from the Fylde and Cumbrian coasts have been analysed by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist, and indicate that the source of the pollution is likely to be a commercial lubricant additive. Further tests are being carried out to establish the precise cause of the pollution.

Council Housing

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority dwellings, excluding those purpose-built for the elderly and disabled, were (a) started and (b) completed in the latest 12-month period for which figures were available and how many were (i) started and (ii) completed in the comparable 12-month period for 1979-80, for (1) England and Wales and (2) the City of Manchester.

Sir George Young: The available figures for local authorities are as shown:

Local authority housebuilding, excluding purpose-built dwellings for the elderly and disabled

(numbers of dwellings)

	Starts		Completions
	England and Wales	City of Manchester	England and Wales	City of Manchester
1979	43,123	801	61,336	738
1980	24,692	861	65,164	913
1992	1,140	6	1,922	2
12-month period to November 1993	[1]773	—	[1]1,078	6

[1] These cover 76 starts and 96 completions of local authority house building in Wales which include dwellings purpose-built for the elderly and disabled.

Housing associations now have the main responsibility for new building in the social sector and the figures equivalent to those for local authorities are as follows:

(numbers of dwellings)

	Starts		Completions
	England and Wales	City of Manchester	England and Wales	City of Manchester
1979	12,098	62	15,472	365
1980	12,473	227	19,360	94
1992	26,044	553	20,209	238
12-month period to November 1993	[1]34,906	606	[1]29,170	477

[1] These cover 3,070 starts and 2,410 completions of housing association house building in Wales which include dwellings purpose-built for the elderly and disabled.

House building is only part of housing associations' provision of additional social housing. Homes are also provided through a variety of other means including purchases for rehabilitation and, the tenants incentive scheme.

Local Authorities (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by each local authority in Northamptonshire (a) full time and (b) part time in each year since 1983.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is given in the table:

Numbers employed in Local Authorities in Northamptonshire at June of each year

Authority	1983		1984		1985		1986

(i) Education, highways, fire services, law and order and social services are administered by Northamptonshire county council. The other authorities shown are district councils which, amongst other services administer housing, planning and refuse collection.
(ii) Polytechnics and higher education institutions were transferred from the local authority sector in April 1989.
(iii) Further education institutions became the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council in April 1993.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Gummer: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Rates (Transitional Relief)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will list for each district council the actual and percentage reductions in transitional relief from 1993-94 to 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available at individual authority level. The total cost of transitional relief in England in 1993-94 is £399 million; the estimated cost in 1994-95 is £130 million.

Planning Applications

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outstanding planning applications by local authorities are yet to be decided upon by him.

Mr. Baldry: Seventeen.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the Housing Corporation budget is dedicated to (a) shared ownership schemes, (b) tenants incentive schemes and (c) do-it-yourself shared ownership schemes for each year from 1987 to the present.

Sir George Young: The percentages of the Housing Corporation's gross approved development programme —ADP—going to (a) conventional shared ownership schemes—LCHO—(b) tenants incentive schemes—TIS —and (c) do-it-yourself home ownership—DIYSO—from 1987-88 to 1993-94 are as follows:

LCHO, TIS and DIYSO as percentage of gross ADP

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the material deprivation index devised by the School of Advanced Urban Studies at the university of Bristol in the context of his review of standard spending assessments.

Mr. Baldry: The measurement of social and economic deprivation proposed for use in standard spending assessments arising from the review is based on detailed statistical analysis discussed with the local authority associations. The proposed assessments use a wider range of indicators than that devised by the school of advanced urban studies including some outside the census, such as unemployment.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to further amend the formula for the calculation of standard spending assessment.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has consulted on the provisional revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95 including his proposals for standard spending assessments. All the representations which have been received and any other relevant information will be carefully considered before final proposals are brought before the House shortly.

County Hall

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the latest value placed on London's county hall prior to the London residuary body selling it to the Shirayama Corporation of Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Prior to its sale, any valuation of the riverside building of County hall would have been a matter for the London residuary body and potential purchasers. The terms of the contract for the sale of the riverside building were confidential between the LRB and the Shirayama Corporation. But the LRB was required by law to obtain the best price.

Social Index

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment was made of the possible impact on local authorities of the changes to the ethnic definition within the social index.

Mr. Baldry: A wider definition of ethnicity was felt to be more appropriate for the measurement of social deprivation within the revised all ages social index. No assessment has been made of the separate effect of this change within the context of a number of changes proposed as a result of the review of standard spending assessments.

Audit Commission

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members currently appointed to the Audit Commission for Local Authorities and the national health service in England and Wales.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which currently implement a designated sales policy of the type referred to in Mr. John Magill's report on the accounts of Westminster city council; and what action he plans to take.

Sir George Young: The Department does not collect information on voluntary sales undertaken by local authorities in a way which would permit the identification of policies of the type mentioned.

Right to Buy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards are in place to prevent abuse of the right-to-buy scheme by people who are not council tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The right to buy only gives public sector tenants the right to purchase, at a discount, the home in which they live. The tenant purchaser is required to repay all or part of the discount to the vendor authority if, within three years of purchase, the freehold of the property is conveyed, the lease assigned or a new lease granted, or an option to purchase is given to a third party. Any question about the repayment of discount in an individual case is a matter for the vendor authority.

Council House Sales

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority owned homes were sold in each year since 1989-90.

Sir George Young: Details of sales and transfers of local authority dwellings in England in the years 1989-90 to 1992-93 are given in the table.

	To owner occupiers	To Housing associations[1]	Other sales and transfers[1]

Homelessness, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently homeless in Durham.

Sir George Young: Figure for households accepted as homeless by individual local authorities are given in the supplementary table to the quarterly information bulletin "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act 1985: England"; copies of both are in the Library. The latest available statistics are for the third quarter of 1993.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what improvements he has in mind for building regulations in relation to the energy efficiency of building.

Mr. Baldry: Last January the Government issued for consultation proposals for strengthening part L of the building regulations relating to energy conservation. These included:

increasing the standards for fabric insulation;

improving building air-tightness whilst ensuring adequate ventilation;

improving the control and insulation of heating and hot water systems;

the provision of energy ratings for new dwellings using the Government's standard assessment procedure;

new requirements for non-domestic buildings aiming to ensure the provision of efficient lighting with effective means of control, and the provision of air conditioning systems only where they are reasonably necessary—and, where they are necessary, provision for their effective control.

As a result of the responses to this consultation the proposals for air conditioning have been revised and a further consultation exercise ended on 14 January. We are continuing to consider the responses to the other proposals for part L and those to the inter-related proposals for improving part F—ventilation—which were also issued for consultation last year. The intention is to lay revisions to both parts of the regulations before Parliament in the first half of this year and to bring them into force by the end of the year.

Green Belt

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of green belt have been covered with (a) housing and (b) other buildings in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Individual local authorities may be able to provide information about green belt decisions in their areas. Government policy is set out in planning policy guidance note 2, published by HMSO in January 1988. Recently completed research has demonstrated that green belts are effective in containing urban sprawl—"The Effectiveness of Green Belts", HMSO, July 1993.

Housing

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the level of housing grants, (b) the number of council houses built, (c) the size of the council housing stock, (d) the number of families legally accepted as homeless, (e) the number of such families housed in local authority housing and (g) the number of such families housed by nomination to housing associations or other housing for the years 1979-80 to 1993-94 for each local authority in England.

Sir George Young: The available information on housing stock, households accepted as homeless, homeless households housed in local authority dwellings and homeless households housed by nomination to housing associations or in other ways can be found in the annual "HIP1 All Items Print", copies of which are in the Library. The column reference numbers in the prints are as follows:

Traffic Levels

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for which local authorities the figures to be used for calculating the standard spending assessments assume a reduced level of traffic; and what evidence exists that the traffic levels have actually reduced there since the previous figures were calculated.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 January 1994]: The authorities with a reduction in annual average traffic flows on principal roads as calculated for the purposes of 1993-94 and 1994-95 provisional standard spending assessments respectively are listed in the table. The figures used in the calculation of SSAs are estimates of the annual average flow of all motor vehicles on principal roads—excluding principal motorways—for which the authority is the highway authority. They are based on data from the Department of Transport's traffic census.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be offset in the same way as for all employers, by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within the Department's existing running costs baseline.

Noreast Building Management

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out (a) the proceeds from the sale of Noreast Building Management, (b) the amount of money set aside to cover possible redundancy costs and (c) on the latest available figures, the total number of redundancies and the cost involved.

Sir George Young [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The vendor will receive proceeds of £8 million from the sale of the Noreast Building Management business. The agreed limit to the Department's liability for severance payments to Noreast Building Management staff is £29·5 million, covering staff made redundant in the first five years post sale. The Department shares liability pound for pound with the purchaser for severance costs in excess of £25 million—until the cap of £29·5 million is reached. The total number of staff made redundant since sale is 222, at an estimated cost of £9·1 million; of these only one was a transferred member of staff made redundant by the purchaser.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her latest estimate of the effect of common agricultural policy reform upon the cost of the CAP on the average European Union citizen in (a) tax transfers and (b) consumer transfers as indicated by the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) on 12 June 1992, Official Report, column 555.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimates provided by my predecessor at the time of the CAP reform agreement still stand. To provide revised estimates, revised assumptions would need to be made about the situation if the reform had not taken place. There is no basis for making any such assumptions.

Birds (Imports)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when her Department will publish the mortality statistics for imports of birds for 1993; and what plans have been made for the publication of these statistics in future years.

Mr. Soames: We aim to publish the 1993 importation of birds mortality statistics by the middle of this year. Arrangements for publication of future studies will be kept under review.

Tied Cottages

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) male and (b) female agricultural workers live in tied cottages in England and Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No official figures are available for the number of agricultural workers living in tied cottages. However, the results of the sample survey of earnings and hours of agricultural workers indicate that 38 per cent. of male regular hired workers and salaried managers and 7 per cent. of female regular hired workers and salaried managers in England and Wales in 1992 received a house or cottage as payment of wages in lieu of payment in cash.

Horses (Exports)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures there are to ensure that horses exported live to the Republic of Ireland are not subsequently exported to other EC member states for slaughter;

(2) how many cases are known to her of horses being exported to (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) other EC states and (c) elsewhere for slaughter, in each of the last three years; how many horses were involved; and how many of these horses had false documents;

(3) what tonnage of horse meat was exported from Britain to (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) other EC states and (c) elsewhere in each of the last three years;

(4) how many horses were exported live from Britain to (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) other EC states and (c) elsewhere in each of the last three years.

Mr. Soames: Welfare regulations made under the Animal Health Act 1981 require all horses exported to the continent of Europe, except race horses certified by the Jockey club, to be licensed. The Ministry does not license horses exported for immediate slaughter. Any trade in animals from the Republic of Ireland is a matter for the Irish authorities. I am not aware of any horses travelling with false welfare documents.

No horse meat was exported to the Republic of Ireland in 1991-92. Exports of horse meat to other member states were 1,069 metric tonnes in 1991 and 1,010 metric tonnes in 1992. In 1992, seven metric tonnes were sent to other destinations.

The number of horses exported to the Republic of Ireland were 3,042 in 1991 and 2,538 in 1992. Exports of horses to other member states were 2,786 in 1991 and 2,844 in 1992. Exports to other destinations were 2,717 in 1991 and 3,765 in 1992. In 1992, three horses were exported to the Republic of Ireland for slaughter.

Trade data for 1993 are not yet available.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the requirements for IACS applications in England and Wales in 1994.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following the 1993 IACS exercise, I have consulted closely with the industry to ensure that the IACS requirements for 1994 are kept as simple as possible in line with the Government's policy to keep any necessary regulation to a minimum. The arrangements to apply this year reflect the conclusion of those consultations.

A guidance note to enable applicants to prepare the necessary mapping and field information is being sent out; copies should be received next week. The main explanatory booklets should be issued in March. The documentation is designed to be as helpful and easy to follow as possible given the complex nature of the system.

The mapping booklet makes it clear that no maps will be required where applications relate only to forage area and that they will not be required for arable area as long as the land was registered as eligible for future arable payments in 1993 and has not changed significantly since then.

Applicants will need to supply the national grid reference number of each field and the Ordnance Survey map sheet reference in order to comply with the basic area requirements of the EC regulation. Estimates will continue to be accepted, but if areas are over-declared, we are required to apply strict penalties. I strongly urge all farmers to begin obtaining any necessary maps, field numbers and area measurements as soon as possible so as not to risk missing the application deadline.

MAFF argued strongly in Brussels for a United Kingdom deadline later than 31 March 1994 for submitting IACS applications; and will be applying the latest possible date of 15 May.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total payment made under suckler cow premium to United Kingdom farmers up to the last available date in the current financial year; and if she will express this as a percentage of the full payment available in the current financial year.

Mr. Jack: The total payment made to United Kingdom farmers under the 1993 suckler cow premium scheme up to Friday 14 January was £11·66 million. This is about 17 per cent. of the amount to be paid in the current financial year.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of information technology services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Jack: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are in fact necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Lambs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average percentage mortality figure for (a) upland lambs, (b) lowland lambs and (c) all ewes during the lambing season; and what are the main reasons for mortality.

Mr. Soames: Mortality figures for sheep are not collected. Mortality of young lambs varies considerably depending on the weather and other factors but is likely normally to be about 10 per cent. Hypothermia in the first two days of life is likely to be the main cause. For adult ewes, annual mortality is estimated at about 4 per cent. for which there is no single predominant cause.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to undertake research to identify the incidence of subclinically infected BSE cattle.

Mr. Soames: Research into the incidence of subclinically infected BSE cattle would require the development of a practical test to identify the presence of the infective agent in live cattle and this Ministry is already supporting a substantial volume of research aimed at developing such a test.

Fruit

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the safety of fruit which has been waxed or sprayed with fungicide.

Mr. Soames: Fruit which has been waxed or sprayed with fungicide may be sold in the United Kingdom only if it complies with the relevant legislation. Such treatments are carefully evaluated by independent expert committees to ensure they are safe, and the evaluations are subject to review as approriate.

Milk Marque

Mr. Mills: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she plans to initiate the operations of Milk Marque; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Under the Agriculture Act 1993 it is for the Milk Marketing Board to decide what date to propose for the ending of the milk marketing scheme in its reorganisation scheme. The board has agreed that a 1 April date, as it originally proposed, is not now possible. It is considering what later date now to propose. My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales will decide on its eventual proposal along with the rest of its reorganisation scheme in accordance with the terms of the Act.

Badgers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list by county the number of badgers shot and gassed in each year since 1988; and what percentage of those badgers were subsequently shown to have tuberculosis.

Mr. Soames: The number of badgers shot in each year since 1988 in England, and the numbers of badgers that were subsequently shown to be positive for tuberculosis —M.bovis—are listed by county.

Gassing has not been used as an official means of controlling badgers since 1982.

RAF Aston Down

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 852, if she will define the operational role of her Department at Royal Air Force station Aston Down; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 26 October at columns 563-64 and 6 December at column 101.

Yorkshire and Humberside Base Area

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will publish the figures in hectares for (a) set-aside, (b) pulses, (c) oilseed rape and (d) cereals for each year since 1988 which were used to calculate the base area in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 3 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh), regarding the calculation of the base area in England, Official Report, column 850. There is no separate base area for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Cats and Dogs (Transport)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what system of permanent identification will be used for cats and dogs transported between member states under the provisions of the Balai directive from 1 July.

Mr. Soames: The Standing Veterinary Committee of the European Commission is currently discussing what system will be used to identify traded dogs and cats moving between member states under the provisions of the Balai directive after 1 July this year.

Hunting

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide details of the terms and conditions of the licences issued by the Forestry Commission to the Badsworth hunt allowing it to hunt on its lands; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission has not issued a licence to hunt over its land to the Badsworth hunt.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names of the hunts which have been given licences to hunt on Forestry Commission land in the county of Essex; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Forestry Commission has issued licences to hunt over its land in Essex to the following hunts:

East Essex hunt
Essex hunt
Puckeridge hunt
Suffolk hunt
Thurlow hunt

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which hunts have been given licences to hunt in Epping forest.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the City of London corporation which acts as conservators of Epping forest.

Sewage Sludge Disposal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 1 December, Official Report, columns 589-90, when the hon. Member for Don Valley can expect to receive the fourth report of the marine pollution monitoring management group's co-ordinating group on monitoring of sewage sludge disposal sites.

Mr. Jack: Our records show that a copy of the report was sent to the hon. Member in early December last. A further copy has now been sent to the hon. Member, together with a copy of the recently published fifth report of the co-ordinating group. Copies of both publications have been placed in the Library of the House.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Jack: The Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether she will set up a tribunal to consider applications for sheep quotas from the national reserve which do not easily fit into the categories defined by the Government but merit consideration; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The categories of producers eligible to claim on the national reserves reflect the requirements of Community legislation. They were drawn up extremely carefully following extensive consultation, bearing in mind that availability of reserve quota will be restricted. The fullest consideration was given to defining hardship cases. There are no plans to set up tribunals to consider claims of producers falling outside these categories.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value at 1980 and 1992-93 prices of hill livestock compensatory allowances in each year since 1980.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The information requested is given in the table.

Livestock Premium Quotas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out the reasons why the judicial review on livestock premium quotas is being carried out by the European Court of Justice; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 January 1994]: This case turns on the interpretation of Community legal provisions relating to ewe premium and suckler cow quotas. Article 177 of the Community treaty provides that, where a national court considers that a decision on such a question is necessary to enable it to give judgment in a case before it, it may request a preliminary ruling from the European Court of Justice; and must do so if the court is one from which there is no appeal. In this case, both parties to the case agreed with the court that a reference was necessary and the terms of the reference were also agreed. The national court will determine the issue when it has the European Court's response.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Union Flag

Mr. John D.Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to provide a Union flag for the hospital at Tower Hill, Armagh; what arrangements have been made to fly the Union flag at these premises on the designated dates; why it was not flown on 1 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Union flag is normally flown at Tower Hill hospital on the designated dates. A breakdown in the local arrangements for flying the flag resulted in the flag not being flown on 1 January.

Cattle Premiums

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will make payments of the beef special premium and the suckler cow premium; why these payments have been delayed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to press release No. 5/94 dated 11 January 1994 from the Department of Agriculture—Northern Ireland—which sets out the current position on payment of claims under these and other livestock premium schemes. A copy has been sent to the press notice desk in the House of Commons Library.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Sir John Wheeler: The increase in the cost of providing cars for Ministers in 1990-91 and 1992-93 was around £177,000. Some £72,000 was in respect of cars provided by the RUC for Ministers in Northern Ireland and the remainder in respect of cars provided by the Government car service—GCS.

There are two main factors that have led to an increase in the cost per GCS car. The first is the effect of inflation on GCS costs, particularly pay, vehicles and fuel. The second is that, during this period, the GCS restructured its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91.

Radioactivity

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by date of change of status the various areas and locations of those parts of Northern Ireland which came under Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) Orders as a result of the Chernobyl incident; what were the highest levels of contamination measured in each of those areas in (a) vegetation, (b) peat and (c) mineral oils; what are the levels in each area now; when he expects, at the present rate of decline of radioactivity in each area, to be able to lift the remaining restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The change of status of those parts of Northern Ireland subjected to restrictions as a result of the Chernobyl incident is as follows:

	Glenshane Co Londonderry	Belraugh Co Londonderry	Glenwherry Co Antrim
Acreage restricted in September 1986	10,744	2,248	8,620
Acreage derestricted 14 January 1991	247	943	—
Acreage derestricted 11 December 1991	568	—	—
Acreage derestricted 14 January 1993	—	—	1,112
Acreage to be derestricted 19 January 1994	—	—	618
Approximate acreage still under restriction	9,929	1,305	6,890

The highest levels of contamination measured in the restricted areas in vegetation, peat and mineral soils were 2367,1566 and 651 becquerels radiocaesium per kilogramme, respectively. The levels of contamination in peat and mineral soils have reduced by approximately 15 to 20 per cent. Variable changes have been seen in herbage with reductions of up to 50 per cent. depending on location and species. The soil—plant—animal transfer of radioactivity is complex and is influenced by many factors. Hence, it is not possible to predict when the remaining restrictions will be removed.

Measurements of caesium levels in sheep are the best way of monitoring the change in caesium status of the soils and vegetation.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the radioactive substances found in (a) peat, (b) mineral soils and (c) vegetation in Northern Ireland as a result of the Chernobyl incident; for what period of time the various plants found in hill forage retained such substances with particular reference to heather; and what has been the uptake of such substances by deer in the affected areas.

Mr. Ancram: The radioactive substances found in peat, mineral soils and vegetation in Northern Ireland as a result of the Chernobyl incident are isotopes of caesium—caesium-137 and caesium-134. Hill forage, including heather, in the restricted areas in Northern Ireland still contains these substances. The uptake of these isotopes measured in deer in the affected areas has been very low.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Sir John Wheeler: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that the individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act, unless the data are exempt. When IT services are contracted out, the data protection principles and the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, apply to both the owner of personal data and the service provider. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Wildlife Numbers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary for Northern Ireland what recent studies he has made into the number of (a) badgers, (b) foxes, (c) hares, (d) rabbits, (e) grey crows, (f) magpies, (g) otters and (h) feral mink in Northern Ireland; what information he has as to whether each species is increasing, diminishing or stable in population; and what is the impact of each species on farm animals and fish stocks in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: The information is as follows:

(a) Badgers—The Department of Agriculture(NI) is currently funding a study, by Queen's university Belfast, of the distribution and abundance of the badger in Northern Ireland. The results of the investigation are not expected to produce any conclusive evidence about the impact of badgers on farm animals but should provide useful information on badger numbers and habitat.

(b) Foxes—I am not aware of any recent studies into the number of foxes in Northern Ireland.

(c) Hares—I am not aware of any recent studies into the number of hares in Northern Ireland. However, the Department of the Environment(NI) is part-funding a postgraduate student at Queen's university Belfast to undertake a three-year study into the distribution of hares, commencing January 1994.

(d) Rabbits—I have no information on any recent studies into the number of rabbits in Northern Ireland.

(e) and (f) Grey Crows and magpies—The only information the Department of the Environment(NI) has on the numbers of these birds is from the British Trust for Ornithology's common bird census. In the UK as a whole these species increased in numbers by 168 per cent.—magpies—and 164 per cent.—grey crows—during the period 1968-91. The only data for Northern Ireland specifically relate to magpies during the period 1983-92. This revealed an increase in numbers of 27 per cent.

I am not aware of any studies on the impact of each species on farm animals and fish stocks in Northern Ireland.

(g) Otters—Studies completed on an all-Ireland basis in 1981 and 1991 showed that this species is widespread in Northern Ireland, but recorded the presence of otters and made no attempt to assess their abundance.

I am not aware of any studies into the impact of otters on farm animals and fish stocks.

(h) Feral Mink—I am not aware of any recent studies into the number of feral mink in Northern Ireland or the impact of feral mink on farm animals and fish stocks. It is, however, generally believed that mink are now present throughout Northern Ireland wherever there is suitable habitat.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Leavers

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best estimate of the number of people who leave the work force each year; and if he will differentiate between those who leave due to retirement, ill health, unemployment and other reasons.

Miss Widdecombe: Of those people classified as economically inactive—not employed or International Labour Organisation unemployed—in the spring 1993 labour force survey for Great Britain, 1,050,000 said that they had been in employment a year earlier. Reasons given for leaving their last job were: retirement—23 per cent.; ill health—14 per cent.; redundancy, dismissal or temporary job ending—17 per cent.; other reasons—45 per cent. Further, of those people classified as ILO unemployed in spring 1993, 950,000 said that they had been in employment a year earlier. The reasons given for leaving employment were redundancy or dismissal—39 per cent.; temporary job ending—16 per cent.; other reasons—45 per cent.

Economically Active Population

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) men and (b) women are economically active at age (i) 55, (ii) 56, (iii) 57, (iv) 58, (v) 59, (vi) 60, (vii) 61, (viii) 62, (ix) 63, (x) 64, (xi) 65 years and (xii) over 65.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the labour force survey of economic activity rates by age, for Great Britain in summer 1993, are given in the table:

Special Aids to Employment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people in the Doncaster area currently benefit from the special aids to employment scheme; and how many disabled people he expects to lose their jobs once employers have to pay 50 per cent. of the cost of special aids in the workplace.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the current financial year, since 1 April 1993, there have been eight disabled people in the Doncaster area helped by the special aids to employment scheme.

In reaching final decisions about the details of the access to work scheme, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Henley are considering carefully a range of representations made by disability and employer groups including representations about the proposed employer contribution. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce decisions soon.

Bridging Allowances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds in the Doncaster area were in receipt of a bridging allowance at the latest available date, and on that date in each year since 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about bridging allowance.

The information you have requested, taking 16 and 17 year olds together, is provided in the attached table. Unfortunately, separate figures for each age group are not available, nor are the December 1988 and 1989 figures for Doncaster. However, the table provides figures for Yorkshire and Humberside for these dates, together with comparable figures for following years.

Bridging allowance can be paid to young people as long as they are registered at a Careers Office for Youth Training (YT) and have left or lost a job or YT place. Youth Training Bridging Allowance was introduced at the same time as YT to allow a young person to find another YT place if their existing one proved unsuitable. Bridging Allowance is available to young people outside the child benefit extension period.

It is a short term allowance paid for up to 40 days in any 52 week period while a young person finds another job or YT place.

I hope this is helpful.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the current average length of time males aged (a) over 55 years, (b) over 35 years and under 55 years and (c) over 16 years and under 35 years remain unemployed in the Doncaster area;

(2) what is the current average length of time females (a) over 55 years, (b) over 35 years and under 55 years and (c) over 16 years and under 35 years remain unemployed in the Doncaster area.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is given in the table on the "median" durations of unemployment, with respect to computerised records only—the vast majority of all claims —of those claimants whose spell of unemployment was completed in the period between 11 November 1993 and 9 December 1993. At this small area level information on the "mean" duration of unemployment of these claimants is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of adults (a) male and (b) female registered unemployed in the Doncaster area in December (i) 1979, (ii) 1983 and (iii) 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures for comparable travel-to-work areas are available only from June 1983 and are given in the table:

Unadjusted Claimant Unemployment for the Travel-to-Work area of Doncaster

December 1983	12,258	5,857
December 1993	11,856	2,928

Youth Employment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds in the Doncaster area who entered full-time employment in each year from 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Disabled People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list for the last five years the number of disabled individuals in the Doncaster area who have benefited from the Government's present provision of assistance towards (a) special aids to employment, (b) adaptation to premises, (c) fares to work and (d) the personal reader scheme;

(2) what has been spent in the last five years in the Doncaster area on disabled individuals on assistance towards (a) special aids to employment, (b) adaptation to premises, (c) fares to work and (d) the personal reader scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1994:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of disabled individuals and what has been spent in the last five years in the Doncaster area on assistance to people with disabilities on the Special Schemes; (a) special aids to employment (b) adaptation to premises (c) fares to work and (d) the personal reader scheme.

The information you have asked for is not held centrally and I have asked my people to investigate the availability of the details you request. I will send details to you as soon as they are available.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for the Doncaster area the companies that currently display the two-tick symbol denoting them as positive about disabled people and are complying with the criteria required.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question requesting a list of companies in the Doncaster area who currently display the disability symbol (the "two-tick symbol") denoting them as positive about disabled people.

Unfortunately I am unable to enclose the list you request with this reply. As you may know, the disability symbol was first introduced in 1990. It was reviewed towards the end of 1992 and, in order to clarify its meaning and improve its impact, we have introduced changes to the initiative which came into effect on 1 June 1993.

These changes have meant that the earlier symbol users needed to re-examine their practices and, in some cases, to introduce changes before confirming whether or not they would continue to use the symbol. My field disability service has been working to contact all symbol users, discuss the new commitments and confirm which employers would continue under the new arrangements.

Although we have recently compiled a draft list of symbol users throughout the country, we are not yet satisfied that older users of the symbol who are not continuing as symbol users have been fully weeded out. It is, of course, very important that we are able to provide a full and accurate list of organisations using the symbol and we are reluctant to release it, or any parts of it, until we have had a further opportunity to check its accuracy.

The checking process is now in hand and I would hope to write to you again within the next few weeks with a list of current symbol users in the Doncaster area. The national list of symbol users will also be included.

I hope this is helpful.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the current measures he is taking to reduce youth unemployment in the Doncaster area; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: All young people aged under 18, who are not in a job or full-time education, are guaranteed the offer of a suitable youth training place if they want one. On 9 December, the latest date for which information is available, there were five young people in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council area who were covered by the guarantee and had been waiting for a place for eight or more weeks. This is 86 per cent. fewer than in March last year.

The Employment Service and the TEC deliver an extensive programme of employment, enterprise and training initiatives to help employment prospects for unemployed people. In addition to this mainstream provision, the following schemes are available specifically for young people in the 18 to 25 years age group: the Doncaster education business partnership; the careership programme; pre-release courses involving the Employment Service, the careers service and the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders; a mentoring programme; and workshops advising on job search and careers.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Early results have shown some significant savings, and much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, many details are commercially confidential.

Scientists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what data he holds on the numbers of scientists at postgraduate and postdoctoral level leaving their profession for (a) other employment and (b) employment abroad.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not collect statistics on this subject. However a recent report by the Science and Engineering Policy Studies Unit on "The Migration of Scientists and Engineers 1984 to 1992", shows that, while 0·6 per cent. of university staff in these disciplines emigrated in 1992, the rate of recruitment of staff to the United Kingdom from other countries was higher at 1·3 per cent.

Youth Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme or youth training places there were in the Doncaster area in each year since 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is unavailable prior to 1991; however, since the opening of the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council in 1991 the number of YTS or youth training places in the Doncaster area have been as follows:

Year	Places
1991-92	2,348
1992-93	2,464
1993-94	2,394

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17 year-olds are currently on waiting lists for youth training places in the Doncaster area; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: As at 9 December 1993, in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council area, there were five young people who had been waiting more than eight weeks for a place on youth training. This is due to constant co-operation between Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, Doncaster careers service and Doncaster training suppliers.

Science Postgraduates

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of science postgraduates who successfully complete their doctorates within British universities have found employment in the United Kingdom within (a) six months and (b) one year for each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: The percentage of those gaining science doctorates in 1991 who were in employment at the end of that year was as follows:

	Per cent.
Biology	76
Physical Sciences	63
Mathematical Sciences	74
Engineering and Technology	78

These statistics are based on a special analysis of the annual "First Destinations Survey of Graduates" carried out by the universities.

Statistics are not available for other years or on the definitions requested.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in manufacturing industries in the Yorkshire and Humberside region on 1 December (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1989 and (d) 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is shown in the table:

Employees in manufacturing: Yorkshire and Humberside

	Number
December 1979	698,800
December 1983	510,400
December 1989	501,000

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for the Doncaster area, the name of the employers who have been given the Investors in People award and the names of the employers who have made a commitment to meeting the standards; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Employers in the Doncaster area who have achieved the Investors in People award are as follows:

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the median, highest decile/lowest decile, upper quartile, lower quartile and mean weekly and hourly earnings of (a) male, (b) female, (c) manual, (d) non-manual and (e) all full-time workers on adult rates in Yorkshire and Humberside, the north and Great Britain for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested can be found in part E of the new earnings survey for each year since 1979. Details of decile, median and quartile earnings are published in table 116 and average earnings in tables 122 and 123. Copies of the report can be found in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the average weekly and hourly earnings of (a) manual, (b) non-manual and (c) all part-time workers on adult rates in Yorkshire and Humberside, West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, Humberside, the North and Great Britain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is provided in the table:

Mesothelioma

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions his Department has given to the Health and Safety Executive in the light of the Peto report on the projected increase in the number of deaths from mesothelioma.

Mr. Michael Forsythe: I have given no specific instructions; Professor Peto's estimates are based on statistical data provided by the Health and Safety Executive. He has not yet produced a written report.

The HSE and Professor Peto are co-operating in closely analysing the data more fully and determining their possible significance. Consideration is also being given to setting up an epidemiological study to subject the estimates to further investigation.

New Businesses

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of new business start-ups in each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The enterprise allowance scheme —EAS—began in 1982-83. In April 1991, EAS was replaced by the business start-up scheme. The numbers of new business start-ups each year are shown in the table.

Irvine Offices

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much it cost his Department to move the Irvine unemployment benefit office and the Irvine jobcentre into the same purpose-built facility in Irvine.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how much it cost his Department to move the Irvine Unemployment Benefit Office and the Irvine Jobcentre into the same purpose built facility in Irvine.

Since 1990 the Employment Service (ES) has been pursuing a policy of bringing together Unemployment Benefit Offices (UBO) and Jobcentres with the aim of providing a more efficient and effective service to our clients. Already 824 offices have been integrated nationally in this way and ES plan to have 1,100 such outlets by March 1996. Irvine featured as part of this programme of integration and the new office opened for business on 9 August 1993.

The new Jobcentre at Irvine has been acquired on a 25-year lease at an annual rental of £115,400 subject to five-year rent reviews. Capital costs of fitting out were £338,000. Costs will be offset by the disposal not only of both the former UBO and Jobcentre but also premises for the Jobclub which is now accommodated in the new building. Investment appraisal of the new office running costs over a 25-year period demonstrates that it is a cheaper option than retention of the former premises.

I hope this is helpful.

Coltman Precast Concrete Ltd.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he was notified of potential redundancies made by Coltman Precast Concrete Ltd.; whether this notification was made within the time period required under section 193 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992; what other representations he has received in relation to the notice of redundancies; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information supplied under the notification provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 is given in confidence.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number, type and funding of apprenticeships currently in Nottinghamshire, the east midlands and England.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates of the number of apprentices are available from the labour force survey. Latest available figures indicate that, in summer 1993, 12,100 people in the east midlands, and 172,000 people in England were undertaking apprenticeships. Figures for Nottinghamshire are not available.

The labour force survey gives figures by industry, by occupation and by personal characteristics of apprentices. Information on funding is not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are in place to evaluate the effectiveness and performance of training and enterprise councils.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department undertakes regular evaluation of the range of programmes delivered by the training and enterprise councils—TECs—and assesses the contribution of the TEC movement to the performance of those programmes.

The performance of individual TECs against contract is monitored by the Department's regional offices. Information on the performance of individual TECs in delivering Employment Department programmes is used to construct inter-TEC comparison tables. A copy of these tables for 1992-93 has already been placed in the Library.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what view the Health and Safety Commission has expressed to the Minister in the interim report of its review of regulations regarding pre-1974 health and safety regulations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I have placed a copy of the report in the Library, along with a copy of my response to the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission, and I have written to the hon. Member, enclosing a personal copy.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The Department has calculated that the effect on its budget for 1994-95 of the abolition of the 80 per cent. statutory sick pay reimbursement rate will be more than offset by a reduction in employers' national insurance contributions.

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the date and the terms upon which his Department took out a lease on the accommodation currently occupied at Dyson's chambers, Briggate, Leeds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the Employment Service premises at Dyson's Chambers, Briggate, Leeds.

It may be helpful if I explain that it is not Government Policy to disclose details of any of the leases it negotiates, as these are Commercial in Confidence. I can say, however, that the Department of the Environment, Property Holdings, acquired this property for the Government Common User Estate and was able to achieve a substantial rent free period. At the expiration of that period my agency will be paying Property Holdings £400,000 per annum by way of internal rent. The lease commenced on 1 January 1993.

I hope this is helpful.

Unemployment

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 105-106, what is the formal International Labour Organisation definition of unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The International Labour Organisation definition of unemployment as used, for example in compiling labour force estimates, counts as unemployed those people who at the time of interview were without work—that is, working less than one hour per week—were available to start work within the next two weeks, and had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The career development loan —CDL—scheme, run in partnership with three high street banks—Barclays, the Co-operative and the Clydesdale—is the only loan scheme operated by the Employment Department. The objective of the scheme is to provide assistance to people who wish to undertake vocational education or training of their own choice, but who are unable, on their own, to raise sufficient funds to pay for it. The programme helps to encourage individuals to take greater responsibility for their own education and training. Details of the number and value of unrecovered CDLs, where a default notice has been issued, are given in the table for each year since the start of the scheme. The cost associated with recovering defaulted loans are borne primarily by the lending banks. The Department incurs minimal cost—on average, less than £400 per year total costs over the last four years.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made on the effect which the next steps programme will have on equal opportunities in public service employment; and what steps he is taking to monitor the effect.

Mr. Davis: The Government are committed to a policy aimed at ensuring equality of opportunity in civil service employment. It is the responsibility of all agency chief executives to implement that policy effectively within their organisations. Progress on equal opportunities across the civil service, including the agencies where 60 per cent. of civil servants now work, is monitored by OPSS. The latest progress reports on women and ethnic minorities, which continue to show steady improvement including increasing representation in management grades, were published last month and copies placed in the Library of the House. The progress report on disabled civil servants will be published in the spring.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report".

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information as requested is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Scanning Radiometer

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what support his Department is giving to back basic scientific development of the along-track scanning radiometer, which was announced by the Department of the Environment on 21 December 1993.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government make funds available under the science budget to the research councils, which determine their priorities in accordance with the terms of their royal charters.

The Natural Environment Research Council—NERC—will contribute £1·8 million towards the cost of building the advanced along-track scanning radiometer—AATSR. The remainder of the total cost will be provided by the Department of the Environment and the Australian space office.

The AATSR has been developed from two previous instruments: the ATSR1 and ATSR2, towards which the Science and Engineering Research Council—SERC—provided funds of £7·3 million and £12·3 million respectively.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will qualify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in his Department's cost for ministerial cars between 1990-91 and 1992-93; how many cars were involved in each year; how many of these cars are for Government Whips and which Whips have cars personally allocated to them; how many were for Government Whips in 1990-91; and how many were personally allocated at that date.

Mr. David Davis: The increase in the costs borne by the Office of Public Service and Science for ministerial cars between 1990-91 and 1992-93 was due mainly to increases in the prices charged by the Government car service—and restructuring of GCS tariffs—the addition in April 1992 of a vehicle for use of the holder of the second ministerial post established at the inception of the OPSS, and more intensive use of the GCS generally.

In 1990-91 three vehicles were allocated to ministerial use, of which two were allocated for the use of the Chief Whip (Commons) and the Leader of the House and Chief Whip (Lords) respectively. The total number of allocated vehicles was increased to four from April 1992.

Research

Dr. Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for Government spending on research; and what proportions were spent on (i) applied research and (ii) fundamental research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Government research and development activity is analysed into the internationally agreed OECD Frascati categories of basic, applied and experimental development. The latest expenditure figures, for 1991-92, were published in the 1993 annual review of Government-funded research and development and are as follows:

	£ million	(i) Applied Per cent.	(ii) Basic Per cent.
Civil R and D	2,780·9	47·0	48·4
Defence R and D	2,267·0	17·8	nil
Total R and D	5,047·9	33·9	26·7

The remaining R and D is classified as experimental development.

A similar analysis for the outturn year 1992-93 will be published in the forward look of Government-funded science and technology in April 1994.

Bypasses

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what provisions of the citizens charter assist private citizens wishing to ascertain the cost-benefit analysis provided by local authorities to the Ministry of Transport in respect of bypass schemes.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter aims to ensure that there is no secrecy about how public services are run, how much they cost, who is in charge, and whether or not they are meeting their standards. In line with this principle, there are no restrictions on private citizens looking at the results of cost-benefit analysis provided by local authorities to the Department of Transport in respect of bypass schemes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ethnic Minority Grants

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the actual spending by his Department on section 11 grant for 1992-93 for each local authority;

(2) if he will estimate the number of posts which will be lost in 1994-95 as a result of cuts in section 11 funding;

(3) if he will list the actual amount of section 11 grant allocated by his Department to each local authority for the first two quarters of 1993-94;

(4) what is the total allocation of spending by his Department on section 11 grant for 1994-95; and if he will list the individual allocations for each local authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Correspondence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken by him to reply to letters received from official spokespersons of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Mr. Howard: In the period from 1 January 1993 to 31 December 1993 the average time taken to reply to letters received from the hon. Member and his colleagues the hon. Members for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) and for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) was 25 working days.

Prisoners

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were sentenced to a prison term under each offence category for the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the number and percentage who were fine defaulters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. William Ross, dated 19 January 1994:

Prisons

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates in prison establishments within England and Wales were disciplined for the possession of an unlawful drug during 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 19 January 1994:

POSSESSION OF AN UNLAWFUL DRUG

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many inmates in prison establishments within England and Wales were disciplined for the possession of an unlawful drug during 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993. The numbers are 2,650, 2,798, 2,041 and 1,759 respectively. They include those found guilty of inciting or assisting other prisoners to possess controlled drugs. The 1990 figures is part-estimate and the 1993 one is provisional.

Probation

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the extra costs involved in resourcing the probation service to work with people sentenced to less than 12 months' imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Adult offenders sentenced to less than 12 months' imprisonment are not subject to statutory supervision on release, but the probation service already offers supervision on a voluntary basis. If all offenders in this category were supervised on the same statutory basis as offenders sentenced to longer terms, the annual additional cost would be of the order of £13 million.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation orders were made with added conditions, as a proportion of all probation orders made in England and Wales for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The latest published information shows that some 26 per cent. of probation orders commenced in 1992 had additional requirements, but that in the first three months after the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 on 1 October 1992 this rose to 29 per cent.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of persons on (a) probation and (b) community service orders had a previous custodial sentence at the latest available date.

Mr. Maclean: The latest available figures were published in summary probation statistics England and Wales 1992 which is available in the House of Commons Library. The percentage of persons commencing supervision by the probation service with a previous custodial sentence in 1992 were (a) 38 for probation and (b) 32 for community service orders.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to meet the National Association of Probation Officers, the Association of Chief Officers of Probation or the Central Probation Council to discuss changes in the probation budget.

Mr. Maclean: I plan to meet representatives of the Central Probation Council and the Association of Chief Officers of Probation to discuss issues of current concern. I have no immediate plans to meet the National Association of Probation Officers.

Horse Thefts

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many horse thefts have been reported to the police in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by county, the number of reported incidents of horses being stolen in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Community Service

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reduce the minimum age for community service.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans at present to bring forward legislation to lower the minimum age for community service of 16; but I want to consider, as part of the review of national standards for community sentences, increasing the scope for younger offenders to undertake tasks of a reparative nature for the benefit of local communities as part of effective supervision programmes.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase or strengthen community penalties.

Mr. Maclean: I plan to strengthen community penalties through the review of national standards now in progress.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the recommendations made by the firearms consultative committee in each year since it was set up; which of them have been the subject of a circular issued by him indicating that the recommendations should be implemented; what information he has as to whether those recommendations have been implemented; and by which police forces they have been implemented.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A summary of the committee's recommendations is contained in each of its four annual reports, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Revised guidance on the definition of antique weapons and collecting of firearms was issued to chief officers of police following a recommendation made by the committee in its third annual report. In addition, Home Office circulars have been issued which include advice on implementing recommendations made by the committee on revised criteria for approved rifle and pistol clubs and the EC weapons directive.

Details of the other recommendations of the committee which have been implemented were given in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 December 1993—column 657.

The administration of the firearms licensing system is the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. Detailed records of individual force practice are not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all grant allocations made under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for the year 1994-95.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Details of the contracts awarded by the Home Office during the period July 1990 to July 1992 to the specified companies are as follows:

July 1990-July 1992	Total Value

Immigration

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to the immigration department concerning arresting alleged illegal immigrants during their wedding services.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Instructions to the immigration service stress that visits to register offices to detain offenders under the immigration laws are particularly sensitive and should normally be undertaken only where the individual's whereabouts before and after the wedding have been and will be unknown.

I am not aware of any recent case where an immigration offender has been arrested during a marriage service but know of two cases where illegal entrants were detained prior to their intended marriages.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the west midlands inquiry unit's use of early morning raids on the homes of suspected illegal immigrants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have not received any recent representations about early morning visits carried out by immigration service staff attached to the midlands inquiry unit.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Howard: The Home Office is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 competing for quality programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Once it has been finalised, much of the information requested will be published in aggregate form in the "Citizens Charter Second Report". On an individual project basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Prison Population

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are planned in prisoner numbers at HMP (a) Armley, (b) Brixton, (c) Ford, (d) Full Sutton, (e) Hull, (f) Lindholme, (g) Moorland, (h)

Pentonville, (j) Wandsworth, (k) Wolds and (l) Wormwood Scrubs over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about prisoner numbers at 11 prison establishments.

The number of prisoners received by the Prison Service is not directly subject to planning but depends upon the decisions of the courts. In order to cater for expected growth in the population, the Prison Service is planning to build six new prisons and is preparing plans to build new places in existing establishments. Final decisions have not yet been taken on which prisons will have their capacity expanded. These are, therefore, no firm proposals to build new accommodation in any of the establishments you list.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many communications he has received during the consultation on deregulation on (a) the Breeding of Dogs Acts 1973 and 1991, (b) the Pet Animals Act 1951, (c) the Animal Boarding Establishments Act 1963 and (d) the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925; how many were in favour and how many against; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of responses which the Department has received to its consultation letter concerning the deregulation review of certain Acts is as follows:

	In favour of retaining the present controls	In favour of deregulation
The Breeding of Dogs Act 1973 and 1991	11	1
The Pet Animals Act 1951	13	3
The Animal Boarding Establishments Act 1963	11	2
The Performing Animals (Regulations) Act 1925	6	0

Year of Older People

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution his Department made to the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in terms of financial support, practical support for particular events, and the provision of information.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My Department continued its funding of the retired and senior volunteer programme, which was represented on the UK core advisory group for the year, and of the retired executives action clearing house. In 1993 the grant to the retired and senior volunteer programme was £50,000 and to the retired executives action clearing house £41,592. It also funds many other organisations such as the Women's Royal Voluntary Service, which though not aiming specifically at older people encourage volunteering by people of all ages. Ministerial colleagues and I made regular reference in our speeches to the importance of older volunteers.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which programmes and events for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations he has been directly involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Combination Orders

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many combination orders have been made since 17 October 1992; and how many have been breached to date.

Mr. Maclean: Combination orders were introduced on 1 October 1992 by the Criminal Justice Act 1991. Between 1 October 1992 and the end of June 1993 it is estimated that some 5,300 combination orders have commenced in England and Wales probation areas. Information on breaches is not yet available.

Strip Searches

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many strip searches have been carried out in England and Wales in the last five years; and for what purposes strip searches are carried out.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Jean Corston, dated 19 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about strip searching.

Prisons are not required to maintain statistics of the number of strip searches carried out. Strip searching is a routine security measure, carried out under the provisions of Rule 39 of the Prisons Rules 1964, to which all prisoners are subject. It enables prison officers to detect small items of contraband, such as drugs or a weapon, which may be concealed about the person and which might not be discovered in an ordinary rub-down search. The prospect of being strip-searched also acts as a deterrent to concealing such items.

City Status, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to support Doncaster being awarded city status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In England, Wales and Northern Ireland the title of city is an honour conferred by the sovereign, by letters patent, on the recommendation of the Home Secretary. The title is nowadays a very rare distinction, granted only in exceptional circumstances and usually in connection with a royal occasion. Any application for city status on behalf of Doncaster would be considered in the usual way.

Football (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the total number of police officers on duty at Carling premiership and Endsleigh football league matches in England and Wales, the total number of police officers as a percentage of the total attendances for those matches and the total cost of those officers for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not held centrally.

Door Supervisors

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he or his Department have received on a national registration scheme for door supervisors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the past six months, four letters have been received on this matter.

In addition, Home Office officials have met a group of interested parties, to discuss local regulatory schemes. Consideration is now being given to proposals prepared by that group and further discussions will take place shortly.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will bring forward proposals for a national registration scheme for door supervisors;

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a national registration scheme for door supervisors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans to introduce such a scheme.

Fir Tree Grange Probation Hostel

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from magistrates, the police and the probation service concerning his decision to close Fir Tree Grange approved probation hostel.

Mr. Maclean: No direct representations have been received from the police; representations have however been made by Easington magistrates court and by a Member of Parliament and a Member of the European Parliament on behalf of members of Durham probation service. A 234-name petition against closure, including signatories from all three of these areas, has also been received.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who was consulted before the decision was taken to close Fir Tree Grange approved probation hostel.

Mr. Maclean: For reasons of confidentiality it was not appropriate for consultation outside the Department to take place in advance of the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received (a) in support of and (b) in opposition to the closure of Fir Tree Grange approved probation hostel.

Mr. Maclean: (a) None, (b) four, plus a 234-name petition.

Asylum

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the granting of political asylum to Rashid Ghannouchi; if he has now given further consideration to his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Representations expressing concern about this case have been received from several hon. Members, the Government of Tunisia and some members of the public. The decision has been re-examined and I am satisfied that it was correct. There are no present grounds for withdrawing Mr. Ghannouchi's refugee status. I will be writing to the hon. Member in response to his recent letters on this matter.

Royal Veterinary College

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had from the department of veterinary pathology at the Royal Veterinary college in regard to his proposals about aggravated trespass; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a letter from Professor Bleby of the Royal Veterinary college about our proposals. A number of right hon. and hon. Members have also sent copies of this letter to the Home Office. A copy of our reply will be forwarded to the right hon. Member.

Safer Cities Programme

Mr. Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to make an announcement about the selection of areas for the safer cities phase 2 programme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I announced on 29 December that decisions have been made on the first wave of projects to be set up under phase 2 of the safer cities programme and on the organisations which will manage them on our behalf. The competitive nature of the bids received together with the commitment of additional resources from key local agencies means that projects can be set up in all 10 of the shortlisted areas.

After careful evaluation of the tenders two organisations have been chosen to run the projects: Crime Concern and the National Association for the Care and Rehabilitation of Offenders—NACRO. Both organisations have significant experience in crime prevention, project management and working with voluntary agencies.

Crime Concern will manage projects in Blackburn, Burnley, Greenwich, Lambeth, Manchester, Merthyr Tydfil and Plymouth and NACRO in Leeds, Newcastle and Sheffield. Projects will start to come on stream early in the new year.

Further waves of phase 2 projects are planned, but as safer cities funding will be included in the single regeneration budget from 1 April 1994 decisions about future projects will be taken in conjunction with the Department of the Environment.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to draw up a plan for the implementation of the forest principles agreed at the Rio summit.

Sir Hector Monro: Our plan for the implementation of the forest principles agreed at the Rio summit will be published shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to sell off any of the forests owned by the Forestry Commission in the Roxburgh and Berwickshire constituency under its current disposals programme;

(2) if he will list all forests owned by the Forestry Commission in the Roxburgh and Berwickshire constituency.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission is preparing a list of all its woodlands in the hon. Member's constituency, and this will identify those which are currently being considered for sale. I shall send a copy to the hon. Member and I shall also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list Forestry Commission property in the Cunninghame, South constituency and in Ayrshire as a whole.

Sir Hector Monro: There are no Forestry Commission woodlands in the hon. Member's constituency. The commission is currently preparing a list of its woodlands in Ayrshire and I shall send a copy to the hon. Member. I shall also arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Livingston Development Corporation

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of assets owned by Livingston development corporation.

Mr. Lang: The corporation's annual report 1992-93 shows that the value of Livingston's total fixed assets at 31 March 1993 was £238·7 million.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what target for capital receipts from sale of property and land he has set for Livingstone development corporation for the next two years.

Mr. Lang: The provisional targets set are as follows:

£ million

	Housing	Industrial, Commercial and Land	Total
1994-95	7·677	26·900	34·577
1995-96	8·375	42·340	50·715

These will be the subject of further discussion with the development corporation before final targets are set.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: The cost of providing cars for Ministers in my Department increased by £11,877—5 per cent.—over the period 1990-91 to 1992-93. The difference is due to modest cost increases in a number of areas, notably fuel and maintenance costs and salaries and associated staff costs.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Lang: The Data Protection Regstrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protections principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Departmental Files

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish Office files were destroyed last year; and what general subject matter, by category, was contained in them.

Mr. Land: A total of 155,097 files—out of a total of over 1·5 million—were destroyed during 1993 following consultation with the Scottish Record Office. The subject matter covered the full range of Scottish Office functions. The split among Departments is:

	Number
Agriculture and Fisheries	7,904
Environment	15,509
Education	[1]48,002
Industry	5,660
Home and Health	[2]70,616
Central Services	7,406

[1] Includes case files relating to student awards.
[2] Includes case files relating to teacher and NHS pensions.

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners received gross payments in excess of £200,000 per year in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not available for 1991-92 and is available for 1992-93 only on a practice basis. In 1992-93 the average payment per general practitioner within a practice exceeded £200,000 in 12 practices containing a total of 13 practitioners.

All 12 of the practices were dispensing practices and the payments included all payments in respect of dispensing —including payments for the supply of drugs—as well as the usual gross payments in respect of the provision of general medical services.

Museums and Galleries (Attendances)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1993 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1992.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The information is as follows:

	1993	Percentage change since 1992
National Museums of Scotland	1,072,716	+6·70
National Galleries of Scotland	746,508	−1·66

The national museums of Scotland comprise the Royal museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish Agricultural museum, the Scottish United Services museum, the Museum of Flight, the Museum of Costume and the Gasworks museum. The national galleries of Scotland comprise the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art and the Scottish National Portrait gallery.

Special Education Services

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had in relation to proposed local government reform from Mr. Sandy Watson, director of education for Dundee, on behalf of the Scottish Directors of Education, relating to the provision of specialist education services for the handicapped, pupils in music, and other groups, dependent on large-scale education authorities for the current standard of provision.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1994]: I have received a number of representations from Mr. Watson in his capacity as secretary to the professional association of the education directorate, on behalf of the Association of Directors of Education in Scotland in connection with our proposals for local government reform.

In his most recent letter, dated 14 December 1993 written on behalf of the association and other bodies and addressed to all Scottish Members of Parliament, Mr. Watson expressed concern that small authorities with reduced spending power would have difficulty in maintaining professional support services and that special needs provision would be vulnerable. I believe this concern is capable of being satisfactorily addressed within the Government's proposal.

Salmon

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation he has now had, following the report of the Salmon Advisory Committee, about the provision of fish passes and fish screens; and whether he now intends to make regulations on this question under the provisions of the Salmon Act 1986.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 January 1994]: Consideration is now being given to the responses received, in the latter part of 1993, from the wide range of interests consulted on proposals for new Scottish fish pass and fish screen regulations. I hope to lay the regulations before Parliament by the summer.

Scottish Art

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish the submission received from the trustees of the national galleries for Scotland in respect of the proposal to build a new gallery of Scottish art; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish representations received by him in respect of the proposal to build a new gallery of Scottish art; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 17 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend has not yet received any fully developed and costed proposals from the board of trustees and it would therefore be premature for him to make a statement. It will be for the board in the first instance to decide whether or not to publish details of its submission.

My right hon. Friend will certainly taken into account all of the representations received on this issue but it would be inappropriate to publish representations put to him in correspondence, some of which have been marked specifically as "confidential".

Mr. Laurence Peterken

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date a cheque was sent to Mr. Laurence Peterken, terminating his employment; what was the amount of the cheque; what the payment was in respect of; and when this cheque was cashed.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1994]: Greater Glasgow health board sent Mr. Laurence Peterken on 4 November 1993 a cheque for £36,447·45, representing six months' pay in lieu of notice and payment for work undertaken on 1 and 2 November. The cheque, which had already been cancelled, was returned uncashed by Mr. Peterken to Greater Glasgow health board on 23 November.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the appointment offered to Mr. Laurence Peterken on 12 November 1993 of special projects director was conditional on his not accepting the six months' pay in lieu of notice granted by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1994]: When Mr. Peterken was appointed special projects director, he relinquished all claims for payment of whatever kind other than pension payments and outstanding salary and performance-related pay relative to his employment with Greater Glasgow health board. This was a condition of his appointment and it would have applied to any payment in lieu of notice.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hamilton, (Mr. Robertson) of 14 December 1993, Official Report, column 604, what was the sum involved in granting Mr. Laurence Peterken six months' pay in lieu of notice, and for what reason no payment had been made to Mr. Peterken by 14 December 1993.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The sum involved in respect of six months' pay in lieu of notice to Mr. Laurence Peterken was £36,223·50. The cheque, which had already been cancelled, was returned uncashed by Mr. Peterken to Greater Glasgow health board on 23 November in accordance with the conditions relating to his appointment as special project director with the national health service in Scotland. No payment had therefore been made to Mr. Peterken by 14 December either in lieu of notice or as compensation for leaving Greater Glasgow health board prematurely.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the changes to statutory sick pay provision upon his departmental budget for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The abolition of reimbursement for statutory sick pay will be offset, at least in part, by a 0·2 per cent. reduction in employer's national insurance contributions. Any additional costs will be absorbed within my Department's existing running costs baseline.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of savings that have been made in the management of magistrates' courts since the publication of the scrutiny report on Magistrates' Courts in 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 14 December 1993, Official Report, column 543.

Mr. Llew Smith To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what savings on expenditure on the magistrates court service will result from the decisions announced in the White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice".

Mr. John M. Taylor: The purpose of the proposals in the White Paper is to provide clearer lines of accountability, to secure maximum management co-operation with other parts of the justice system and to guarantee the judicial independence of magistrates and their legal advisers, as well as to yield improvements in the efficiency and effectiveness of the service. As the efficiency gains which each magistrates' courts committee —MCC—achieves by implementing the White Paper reforms will depend largely on decisions taken at local level, it is difficult for the Government to estimate with any accuracy the total savings to be made. However, evidence from those MCCs which have already implemented some of the White Paper proposals suggests that, within each MCC, the resulting improvements in value for money exceed the transitional costs.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of magistrates in each county in Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates for each county in Wales on the latest available information, and based on their political affiliations on appointment, is as follows:

	Conservative	Labour	Liberal Democrats	Plaid Cymru	Independent/ Not known
Clywd	128	100	72	17	19
Dyfed	72	48	43	38	36
Mid Glamorgan	84	120	39	8	66
South Glamorgan	135	92	59	9	40
West Glamorgan	108	129	44	5	61
Gwent	115	97	34	2	56
Gwynedd	48	27	28	36	45
Powys	29	20	25	2	19

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the names of members of all the bodies in Wales who select magistrates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The members of the 13 advisory committees responsible for recommending candidates for the magistracy in Wales are as follows:

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the balance of gender among magistrates in each Welsh county.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The balance of gender among magistrates in each Welsh county on the latest available information is as follows:

	Male	Female
Clwyd	188	149
Dyfed	140	100
Mid Glamorgan	186	131
South Glamorgan	176	160
West Glamorgan	208	139
Gwent	171	133
Gwynedd	107	74
Powys	49	47

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of information technology services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Matrimonial Cases

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what instructions have been issued to the civil courts on passing information concerning parties to matrimonial proceedings to the Home Office immigration policy enforcement group; by what authority such instructions are given and such information is passed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: An arrangement was made last November between officials from my Department and from the Home Office immigration and nationality department for the courts to inform them of divorce cases where:

either of the parties involved has previously sought British citizenship, and following their marriage in the United Kingdom, the parties separated on the same day.

The courts are not aware whether parties to cases have previously sought British citizenship, and this information was therefore not supplied. Information under the second heading was supplied to the Home Office, but has not been used by them in connection with any proceedings involving either party. This arrangement has now been discontinued.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department in 1990-91; and if he will quantify the cost of the factors which have led to changes in this cost subsequently.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are two main factors which have led to an increase in the unit cost per Government car service car for Ministers in my Department. The first is the effect of inflation on GCS costs, particularly pay, vehicles and fuel. The second factor is that during this period the GCS reconstructed its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to use the underspend on the criminal legal aid budget (a) to benefit the civil legal aid budget and (b) otherwise.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On the basis of actual expenditure to the end of November 1993, it now seems likely that the total net expenditure on legal aid in the financial year 1993-94 will be £1,225 million compared to a provision of £1,283·2 million. The majority of the shortfall—£37 million—relates to criminal legal aid, where the number of bills paid has fallen short of expectations. Most of the rest of the shortfall relates to civil legal aid where payments made to the legal aid fund in respect of costs and damages have exceeded expectations. The Lord Chancellor has no present plans to change the general policy in respect of legal aid, which is currently being examined as part of the fundamental review of his Department's expenditure. Whether it would be possible or desirable to make any changes to the legal aid scheme would not necessarily depend on prospective spending in a single year, but would have to be based on an assessment of what could be afforded over a period of years.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are in hand to improve the quality of information available to the Government in respect of legal aid costs; and when he proposes to publish the reasons for the increased costs per case for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A number of measures are being vigorously pursued by both the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Legal Aid Board to improve the quality of information on legal aid costs and on the usage of legal aid generally. The Lord Chancellor's Department has launched the legal aid management information systems project—LAMIS—which will provide a more comprehensive and accessible database on legal aid and which will be more relevant to the Department's present and future needs.

Additionally, in conjunction with the Legal Aid Board and Her Majesty's Treasury, the Department is carrying out a comprehensive review of its forecasting methods. The first stage of the review, dealing with the methods used in forecasting expenditure, is almost concluded. The next stage will involve extensive research in order to quantify major factors within the legal aid environment that drive expenditure. In addition, new systems are currently being developed by the Legal Aid Board. These developments include new systems for assessing civil and magistrates courts' bills, and for building case profiles.

The reasons for the increase in costs per case are many and complex. Legislative and procedural changes, the amounts paid to lawyers, and the amount of work done in each case are just some of the major factors which underlie the rise in costs.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what practical steps he has taken to ascertain whether there has been a rise in the number of litigants in person which can be attributable to the changes in legal aid eligibility conditions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has asked courts administrators to gather the observations of court staff on the number of litigants beginning proceedings in person and has made arrangements for the collection of data on cases in which one or both of the parties is unrepresented at the hearing.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has asked the Legal Aid Board to undertake to discover the grounds on which offers of contributory legal aid are refused; and what plans he has to commission such research.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board is planning to carry out research into refusal of offers of legal aid in the financial year beginning on 1 April 1994.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the Lord Chancellor's objectives for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor today published a management statement for the Legal Aid Board; I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. This document sets out the framework within which the board operates; its functions, aims and objectives; its relationship with the Department, and its accountability to Parliament and the Lord Chancellor. It also sets out in some detail the Lord Chancellor's medium-term objectives for legal aid and the role that the board will play in achieving them. To complement this document, the Legal Aid Board has today published its corporate plan for the years 1994-95 to 1996-97.

Convictions (Court of Appeal)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many convictions have been quashed by the Court of Appeal since the introduction of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 on the grounds of (a) unreliable police evidence, (b) unreliable confession evidence, (c) unreliable forensic or other expert evidence and (d) other grounds.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, in the period since January 1985, when the relevant sections of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 came into force, a total of 2,123 appeals against conviction have been allowed in part, or in whole, by the Court of Appeal criminal division.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Portugal

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the Portuguese authorities the death in Portugal of Paul Kenney.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I informed the hon. Member during the Adjournment debate on this matter on 10 Official Report, columns 650-64, that I would send the Portuguese authorities a copy of the Hansard record. This I have now done. We shall continue to press the Portuguese authorities for an explanation.

Consultancies

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Goodlad: The table lists consultancies awarded by the diplomatic and aid wings of the Department to accountancy firms in 1992 and 1993 to consider work practices within Departments. The Department did not award any such consultancy contracts to merchant banks in either year. The table does not include the many consultancies awarded under the aid programme to developing countries or the know how fund.

Members' Gifts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each occasion since 1964 when gifts presented to hon. Members have been transported to the United Kingdom in diplomatic bags.

Mr. Goodlad: The Vienna convention on diplomatic relations does not permit the use of the diplomatic bag for the carriage of non-official items on behalf of persons who are not designated as entitled by the convention. Accordingly, personal gifts presented to hon. Members may not be transported by diplomatic bag.

Records of materials carried by diplomatic bag are destroyed within 12 months of the bag having reached its destination. A scrutiny of the extant records indicates that no exception has been made to these rules in the past 12 months. Data on earlier bag movements are no longer available.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which representatives of Kurdish people he expects to meet during his forthcoming visit to Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: During his visit to Ankara my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to meet a wide cross-section of people from a variety of regions and ethnic backgrounds.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions on arms sales and their use he expects to have during his forthcoming visit to Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As usual on such visits, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs shall seek opportunities to promote the sales of British products, including military equipment for defence purposes.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what journalists' organisations he will meet during his forthcoming visit to Turkey.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs shall meet a range of Turkish media representatives in Ankara. He does not plan to meet any journalists' organisations.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Turkey about the release of detained journalists and the free publication of newspapers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Turkey was heavily criticised for continuing limitations on freedom of expression, particularly in the media, at a Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe meeting in Warsaw in September. Through such international forums and in our own meetings with Turkish Ministers and officials we make plain our concern about this and other human rights issues. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs shall do so during his visit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Educational Broadcasting

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to ensure that schools in rural areas in Wales will be able to pick up frequencies of educational radio programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The BBC has announced plans to transfer the educational programmes at present on Radio 5 to other networks. I understand that the BBC believes that this will improve coverage and quality of reception of these programmes.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of educational broadcasting on television and radio in Wales.

Mr. Brooke: The Government hope to publish a White Paper in the spring setting out proposals for the future of the BBC, including its role in providing educational broadcasting in all parts of the United Kingdom.

S4C and HTV are required to provide educational programmes in their television services. There are no similar requirements on independent radio services, although I understand that two local radio stations have agreed to include some Welsh language education programmes in their services.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many hours were dedicated to Welsh language educational broadcasts on (a) radio and (b) television for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: According to the information available to me, the number of hours dedicated to Welsh language educational broadcasts by the BBC and S4C, in each of the last five years, were:

Year	Radio	Television
1989-90	152	90
1990-91	159	150·05
1991-92	166	133·10
1992-93	167	125·45
1993-94[1]	297	98·3

[1] Includes projected figures for 1994. The figures include both programmes for schools and adult education programmes.

Broadcasting (Restrictions)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to make arrangements to revoke section 10 of the Broadcasting Act 1990 withdrawing notices to the Independent Broadcasting Authority and the British Broadcasting Corporation requiring those organisations to refrain from sending any broadcast matter as directed; how many households in the United Kingdom he estimates are able to receive television and radio broadcasts originating in the Irish Republic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 January 1994]: I have been asked by the Prime Minister to review the broadcasting restrictions; I expect to report to him shortly. We hold no information on the reception in the United Kingdom of Irish television or radio broadcasts; any such reception from terrestrial sources is the result of fortuitous overspill of transmissions and is not protected from interference from other signals.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance with the eighth data protection principle.

The Solicitor-General: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and to the registrar's powers to promote compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that any further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General what statutory provisions apply to the duty of a Minister of the Crown to sign a public interest immunity certificate.

The Solicitor-General: The duty of a Minister of the Crown to sign a public interest immunity certificate arises at common law and not under statute.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Attorney-General if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

The Solicitor-General: For the period 1990-91 to 1992-93 there was an increase in the cost of providing cars for Ministers of £9,700 accounted for primarily by (i) increases in pay, and the cost of vehicles and fuel, and (ii) restructuring by the Government car service of its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

The Solicitor-General: The Departments for which the Attorney-General is responsible are currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form. On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Bromley Council (Fraud)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 767, what has been the result of the inquiry by the Metropolitan police concerning the alleged fraud within (a) the social services department and (b) the environmental health department of Bromley council; and if he has now reached a decision in regard to prosecution.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service awaits the results of further inquiries carried out by the Metropolitan police into the alleged fraud within the social services department of Bromley council and when these are made available a decision will be taken.

The results of inquiries into allegations concerning the environmental health department of Bromley council are currently being considered by the Crown Prosecution Service.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General what restrictions apply to persons appearing before Lord Justice Scott's inquiry being represented by counsel; and under what authority those restrictions have been made.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The procedures of the Scott inquiry are a matter for Lord Justice Scott. They are set out in his note "Proposed procedures for hearings before Lord Justice Scott", announced on 31 March 1992. I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Boswell: During 1992 and 1993 the Department awarded consultancy contracts to the following firms:

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Forth: The level of charges for ministerial cars is determined centrally by the Government car service—GCS. I am informed by GCS managers that there are two main factors which have led to an increase in the cost per GCS car for Ministers in this Department in 1990-91. The first is the effect of inflation on GCS costs, particularly pay, vehicles and fuel. The second factor is that during this period the GCS restructured its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91.

Mobile Classrooms

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy over a number of mobile classrooms being in permanent use due to acute lack of space in the main school buildings; and what financial assistance he intends to give to local authorities to overcome such difficulties by undertaking capital work at the schools involved.

Mr. Forth: The provision of school places, whether in permanent or temporary accommodation, is a matter for local education authorities and school governors. Capital spending levels and priorities as between projects and schools are also a local matter. My right hon. Friend gives high priority in the distribution of capital resources to funding new school places where demand is growing; and the level of funding is based on the new places being in permanent rather than temporary accommodation.

Bentley Drive School, Birchells

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he or one of his ministerial colleagues intends to visit Bentley Drive primary school, Birchells, Walsall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Ministers from the Department have no plans at present to visit Bentley Drive primary school, Walsall.

Walsall Schools (Capital Works)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made that Walsall council has the necessary financial means to undertake capital works in schools.

Mr. Forth: Walsall and all other local education authorities are invited to submit bids for annual capital guidelines, which are then distributed on the basis of our published criteria. Walsall's ACGs reflect the extent to which its bids meet the criteria. In addition to the ACGs —which through basic credit approvals set the level of authorities' borrowing for capital purposes—and any supplementary credit approvals issued, Walsall can also use a proportion of any capital receipts realised, and transfers from revenue budgets, to fund its capital programmes.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools there were in each local authority in England by 1 January; how many in each case had held ballots under section 61 of the Education Act 1988; how many ballots in each resulted in votes in favour of seeking grant-maintained status; and how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The tables provide details of the number of maintained primary and secondary schools in each local education authority area and as at 1 January, the number of schools at which ballots under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988 have been held and the results of those ballots.

Footnotes to the tables:

Column B

1. The figures for number of schools use data derived from the Index for Educational Establishments.

Column C

2. The figures show total number of schools at which one or more ballots have been held.

Columns D and E.

3. The totals are of definitive ballot results. In some cases, where the first ballot had a turnout of under 50 per cent., a second ballot was required to achieve such a result.

4. The combined totals of "Yes" and "No" may exceed the number of schools at which ballots have been held (Column C) because some schools have gone through the complete balloting process more than once, (as distinct from requiring a second ballot to achieve a definitive result).

Column E

5. Includes two tied ballot results.

Schools (Capital Guidelines)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give a breakdown of the schools' annual capital guidelines for 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 showing, in each case, the amounts for (a) commitments, (b) basic need, (c) removal of surplus places, (d) special education, (e) local education authority liability for projects in voluntary-aided schools and (f) general improvements and showing national totals for each.

Mr. Forth: I have placed the information requested in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist for the use by police of informants in relation to their pursuit of fighting large-scale drug traffic.

Mr. Charles Wardle: General guidelines about the use of informants by the police are set out in Home Office circulars Nos. 97/1969 and 9/1992, copies of which are available in the Library. These circulars deal with the police use of informants to investigate all crime and not specifically drug-related crime.

Crime, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the measures he is taking to reduce crime in Durham.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Durham constabulary has resources to maintain a strong and effective police service. At the end of September 1993 the force strength was 1,375 police officers and 539 civilians. This represents an increase in strength of 63 police officers and 39 civilians since 1979. Under the recently announced parish constable initiative, a parish constable was appointed to the Langley parish on 17 January 1994.

The Government have also encouraged the development of effective crime prevention programmes. Nine crime prevention panels are in operation in the area, along with over 900 neighbourhood watch schemes covering over 105,000 households. In addition the Durham Agency Against Crime has been set up locally as a partnership to improve the quality of life for the whole community by supporting crime prevention initiatives. Durham constabulary has seconded an officer to the agency. The recent publication of two major law and order Bills underlines the Government's commitment to firm action against crime on all fronts.

Prisons (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the policy of his Department that information on relevant embassies and support organisations and on specialist provision available within the prison for help for foreign nationals is given to foreign nationals serving sentences in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement and list the prisons where such information is now available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service policy on giving information to foreign national prisoners on relevant embassies and support organisations, and on specialist provision available within the prison.

The Prison Service recognises the particular needs of foreign national prisoners and encourages dissemination of appropriate information to them, including sources of internal and external support.

A considerable quantity of the information outlined in your question is contained in the Foreign Prisoners' Resource Pack which has been distributed to all Prison Service establishments to assist both prisoners and those who work with them. Other information may also be provided by individual establishments or other agencies, but details are not kept centrally.

Bail Hostels

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list where bail hostels are located in each county; and which of these take women.

Mr. Maclean: The current list of bail and probation/bail hostels in England and Wales is as follows—those hostels which take female residents are noted in the third column.

[1]— Denotes hostel which is closed or has yet to be opened.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of persons remanded to a bail hostel during 1992 were charged with a subsequent offence.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken by the Home Office to deal with objections to the sitings of local bail hostels during the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: In June 1990 the Home Office advised probation and voluntary managing committees of the need to assess local opinion as part of the process of developing an approved bail hostel; and in January 1993 the Home Office issued a development guide which stressed the importance of providing opportunities for local consultation and giving proper consideration to the views expressed. From time to time, Ministers and officials have, as necessary, met residents or their representives to discuss the issues raised by hostels proposals.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice will be given to local magistrates who subsequently wished to consider a remand to a hostel in the event of the closure of a specific bail hostel.

Mr. Maclean: It will be for the probation service concerned to bring to the attention of magistrates courts the facilities offered by approved hostels in its own or a neighbouring area.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what objections to proposals to open a bail hostel the Home Office and local probation committees have received during the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: In most cases where a new bail hostel has been proposed local residents and others have made representations against its development, arguing mainly on cost, crime and planning grounds.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of persons remanded to a bail hostel during 1992 were breached for failure to comply with conditions;

(2) how many persons were remanded to a bail hostel in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not readily available in the form requested.

Door Supervisors

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many door supervisors have been prosecuted for violent or drugs-related offences committed while on duty since 1 January 1990;

(2) if he will publish a breakdown, by police authority area, of the number of door supervisors who have been prosecuted for violent or drugs-related offences carried out while on duty since 1 January 1990.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take as a result of representations received by his Department to last year's consultation document on the reform of the licensing laws.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The provisions for a system of children's certificates for suitable bar premises in England and Wales in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill reflect widespread support for that proposal among respondents to the consultation document. Action on the other, more complex proposals in the document, and the responses to them, is under consideration.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a Bill to reform the licensing laws.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no present plans to introduce a Bill concerned solely with reform of liquor licensing law in England and Wales.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Howard: Last Christmas 450 cards were sent by Home Office Ministers; 8,450 by civil servants; and 11,012 by executive agencies. The cost of purchasing and posting these cards was £7,705 and £4,120 respectively. It is not possible to estimate accurately the cost of staff time in sending these out but this would have been minimal.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially motivated attacks are perpetrated by whites on non-whites and by non-whites on whites; and what are the figures expressed as proportions.

Mr. Maclean: Our best source of information is currently the 1988 and 1992 British crime surveys. The British crime survey estimate is that 82 per cent. of all incidents of violence and threats thought by Afro-Caribbeans and Asians to be racially motivated were perpetrated by whites. No information is available about perpetrators of incidents involving white victims, as the British crime survey asked only Afro-Caribbean and Asian respondents about their perception of racial motivation. The 1994 survey will extend these questions to all respondents.

This estimate is among the results contained in "Ethnic Minorities' Experience of Crime and Racially Motivated Incidents"—research and planning unit paper No. 82. This is due to be published in February by the Home Office research and statistics department.

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the procedure for the appointment of lords lieutenant in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) West Yorkshire, (c) Essex and (d) London; if he will give the name in each case, home residence, occupation, and date of appointment of the current (i) lord lieutenant, (ii) vice lord lieutenant and (iii) each deputy lord lieutenant; and how nominations can be made for these positions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Lords lieutenant in England and Wales are appointed by the Queen on the recommendation of the Prime Minister.

Nominations of candidates for lords lieutenant can, when a vacancy occurs, be made to the relevant clerk to the lieutenancy, the outgoing lord lieutenant or the Prime Minister's secretary of appointments. For vice lords lieutenant, recommendations can be made to the clerk to the lieutenancy or the lord lieutenant. The appointment of deputy lieutenants is a matter for the lord lieutenant, subject to the non-disapprobation of the Queen.

A list of the names of serving lords lieutenant, vice lords lieutenant and deputy lieutentants in south Yorkshire, west Yorkshire, Essex and London together with, where available, dates of appointment, is being placed in the Library of the House. Deputy lieutenants are required by section 133(2)(a) of the Reserve Forces Act 1980 to have a place of residence in, or within seven miles of the boundary of, the county or area. Lords lieutenant and vice lords lieutenant would generally be expected to comply with these residential requirements. Details of the occupation of the lords lieutenant, vice lords lieutenant and deputy lieutenants could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member's question of 15 December, Official Report, column 661. I understand that higher pay, vehicle and fuel costs and price restructuring to recover full costs were the main factors in the increased charges for ministerial cars supplied by the Government car service.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure for expenses to community-based drug agencies, paid by prison governors, in the years 1990 to 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 20 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question as to what was the total expenditure for expenses to community-based drug agencies, paid by Prison Governors, in the years 1990 to 1993.

Information in the form requested is not readily available and can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the results of the parliamentary Boundary Commission inquiry for Essex to be published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the outcome of the inquiry is likely to be published in the spring.

Drugs (Holland)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the measures introduced in Holland over the last 10 years to deal with the use of cannabis, cocaine and heroin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We keep in close touch with developments in drugs policy within Europe and further afield, both through the formal European Union, Council of Europe and United Nations drugs forums and through informal contact. My right hon. and learned Friend discussed various aspects of drugs policy with the Dutch Minister of Justice, Mr. Hirsch Ballin, when he visited London in September 1993.

Nothing in the Dutch experience has so far seemed to justify our changing the system of controls provided under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Squatting

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has held with local authorities during the last 12 months about the occupation of council housing stock by squatters; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what date his Department became responsible for issues relating to squatting and what changes of responsibility, (a) in respect of detailed responsibilities and (b) in regard to being the lead department have taken place in the past 10 years;

(3) with what other Departments of State and in respect of which responsibilities, his Department shares responsibility for issues relating to squatting.

Mr. Maclean: Fifty-seven local authorities responded to the Home Office consultation exercise on squatting conducted in 1991-92, out of which our current proposals arose. We have had no further discussions with local authorities on this subject in the last 12 months.

Several Government Departments have an interest in the problem of squatting, and the leading interest may vary according to which aspect of the problem is under consideration. The Home Office is responsible for the criminal law as it relates to squatting and other forms of intrusion on to property. In particular, we have responsibility for the existing criminal provisions related to squatting in sections 6 and 7 of the Criminal Law Act 1977, and for any proposals to extend the criminal law regarding squatting or other forms of trespass. The civil law relating to trespass, including squatting, is a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department. Government policy in relation to housing issues, including homelessness, and to local authorities, is primarily a matter for the Department of the Environment. No changes have taken place in these respective responsibilities over the past 10 years. Other Government Departments with an interest in this subject include the Scottish Office, the Northern Ireland Office, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Electoral Law

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to publish the reports of the working parties into electoral law and procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The working groups set up as part of the post-election review will report shortly and, when the reports are available, my right hon. and learned Friend will place copies in the Library and supply them to others who ask for copies. Representatives of the political parties, returning officers and the local authority associations will be invited to discuss the reports at a meeting in March.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of deaths and serious injuries as a result of domestic fires in each year since 1980.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of fire-related deaths and casualties from fires attended by local authority fire brigades in the United Kingdom are published in table 6 of the annual Home Office statistical bulletin, "Summary Fire Statistics, United Kingdom", copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1982 to 1992 are in the edition for 1992—Home Office statistical bulletin issue 28/93—and for 1981 in the edition for 1991—issue 27/92. The number of deaths from fires in dwellings has declined from 780 in 1981 to under 600 in 1992, although non-fatal casualties have risen from 6,300 to 11,200. Most of the rise is accounted for by an increase in the numbers reported by fire brigades as casualties due to "asphyxiation or overcome by gas or smoke".

Complaints Audit Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 1994, Official Report, columns 338-39, if he will publish the number of complaints about immigration law and practice brought under the existing complaints system, monitored by the new complaints audit committee, and the number of occasions on which disciplinary action has been taken against those responsible for abuses in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of letters of complaint about the conduct and efficiency of immigration service staff in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1992-93	500
1991-92	404
1990-91	337
1989-90	414
1988-89	549

Information about the number of cases in which disciplinary action was taken under the existing system is not readily available.

Probation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the weekly cost of (a) a probation order, (b) community service order, (c) bail hostel place and (d) average prison place for the latest date available.

Mr. Maclean: The weekly costs for 1991-92, the latest year for which comparable figures are available are (a) a probation order, £23; (b) community service order, £22; (c) bail hostel place, £179; (d) average prison place, £442.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation reports, probation orders and community service orders were made or written in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The information published in "Probation Statistics England and Wales 1992" shows that 41,000 probation orders and 43,000 community service orders commenced in 1992 and 197,000 pre-sentence reports were written by the probation service. A copy of the publication is held in the House of Commons Library.

Information for the whole of 1993 is not yet available but the following estimates have been produced for the first three quarters of 1993.

Comparison of first three-quarters of 1992 and 1993

England and Wales	Number of persons/reports 1992	[1]1993

[1] Estimated.
[2] Social inquiry reports prior to 1 October 1992.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources will be made available to the probation service to deal with the projected work load in 1994 and 1995.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's spending plans for the probation service together with work load forecasts are set out in the three-year planning document for the service covering the period 1994-97, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation reports, probation orders and community service orders are projected for 1996; and how many reports and orders were completed in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The projected caseloads in 1996-97 have been published in the "Three year plan for the probation service 1994-97". A copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Doncaster Prison

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which companies were considered by the Prison Service to run the new prison at Doncaster.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 20 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

Five bids to manage Doncasyter prison were received in response to the Invitations to Tender. The companies concerned were Mancare; UK Detention Services Ltd; Securicor Custodial Services Limited; Group 4 Prison and Court Services Limited; and Premier Prison Services Limited.

Bailiff of Jersey

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he has taken of whether the speech of 22 December 1993 made by the Bailiff of Jersey, Sir Peter Crill, to the Rotary club is compatible with his roles as Chief Judge and Speaker of the States; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Bailiff has kindly provided us with the text of his speech on 22 December. In his capacity as Privy Counsellor with special responsibility to the Crown for Jersey, my right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the speech requires no comment or other action on his part.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 947, if he will list the organisations that were consulted before the Government prepared its submission to the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations in August in respect of its obligations under the international covenant of civil and political rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 December 1993 to an earlier question from him, Official Report, columns 680-81.

Local Authority Fraud

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the longest interval between the inception of a fraud squad investigation into local authority fraud and the commencement of a consequent prosecution.

Mr. Maclean: Records are not held in a form which would provide this information.

Patient S

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available copies of the post mortem and pathology reports relating to the case of Patient S whose case was heard by the Court of Appeal on Friday 14 January and who subsequently died on Sunday 16 January.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Primates

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of establishments approved by his Department as suitable sources of primates in accordance with EC Council directive 92/65.

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

Arrangements for the approval of such establishments by the Agriculture Departments in Great Britain, in accordance with directive 92/65/EEC, will be put in place shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japan (Nuclear Energy)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications for existing and future nuclear trade with Japan of the Japanese Atomic Energy Commissioner's report on nuclear policy and non-proliferation strategy released in November 1993.

Mr. Eggar: The report reaffirms the main thrust of Japanese civil nuclear policy, including their continued commitment to the recycling of plutonium and nuclear non-proliferation.

Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Service

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members of the Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Service since 1985, giving details of appointment date and affiliation or employer of the appointee.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes have been made in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 since it came into force.

Mr. Needham: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 was amended six times between its entry into force on 1 January 1988 and 15 December 1989, when it was replaced by the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989. Since then, two further Export of Goods (Control) Orders have been made, one in 1991 and its replacement in 1992.

It would not be possible other than at disproportionate cost to describe all the changes made by these various orders and associated amendments. Changes introduced since 1987 have included wide-ranging relaxations of export controls agreed by COCOM and implementation of agreements reached on significant extensions of controls in the non-proliferation export control regimes, namely, the Australia group, the nuclear suppliers group and the missile technology control regime. A broad end-use control aimed at enhancing non-proliferation controls was introduced and expanded in amendments Nos. 6 and 7 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989, made in 1990 and 1991 respectively.

Car Manufacturers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to require car manufacturers to stamp cars with the date of manufacture and car dealers to state that date on the sale documents.

Mr. Sainsbury: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade currently have any such plans.

By law, all motor cars must at some stage during the manufacturing process, be stamped with a vehicle identification number. Consumers can therefore request dealers to decode this number and provide the date at which it was stamped on the vehicle.

Smokeless Fuel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information his Department has as to dangers to domestic customers using smokeless fuels from (a) European Community countries and (b) other countries; what representations he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has received representations from a number of organisations about the safety of petroleum coke for domestic use. Very few complaints were received from users of petroleum coke. No information was given about the country of manufacture of the fuel. However, all petroleum coke for domestic use in this country is imported, the majority coming from north America.

Over the period from 1989 to 1991, when the majority of the representations were received, my Department investigated various claims that this fuel was unsuitable for domestic use. After examination of the available evidence, it was concluded that the fuel should not pose undue risks to consumers provided that sensible precautions were taken for its use. Accordingly, my Department advised suppliers of petroleum coke that consumers should be provided with written instructions for safe use of the fuel, and, in this regard, reminded them of their responsibilities under section 10—the general safety requirement—of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

The recommended safety precautions are that petroleum coke:

must only be used in an open-grate fire and never in a closed appliance; must always be blended, before use, with another solid fuel that will produce sufficient ash residue to protect the metal parts of the fire.

A fine-mesh fire guard should be used—as with any solid fuel.

Distance Selling Directive

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the effects of the proposed distance selling directive on the tourism industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have had a number of such representations. I agree with them that the proposals in the revised draft of the distance selling directive submitted to the EC Council of Ministers on 22 October would be extremely damaging to the tourist industry. The Greek presidency has however suggested some amendments to this draft which would go some of the way to meeting the industry's concerns. We will continue to have these concerns very much in mind when negotiation of the directive resumes in Brussels.

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Eggar: While the Department has the powers under sections 7 and 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 to make selective financial assistance available in the form of loans, these powers have not been exercised since 1988. However, two earlier loans made under section 7 and totalling £1,147,693 were designated as unrecovered in 1990-91, one of £62,000 in 1991-92 and none in 1992-93. It is not possible except at disproportionate cost to provide the total number and value of all unrecovered loans made by the Department, nor to calculate the annual expenditure on recovering loans.

Electricity Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what research has been undertaken into the costs and benefits of the agreements reached with Electricité de France before, during and after the electricity privatisation process; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to commission an independent inquiry into the benefits and cost to British consumers of the agreements which were reached with Electricité de France about payments made before, during and after the electricity privatisation process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's policy towards trade in electricity across the interconnector was set out in the coal review White Paper—Cm 2235. The commercial arrangements for trade across the interconnector are a matter for those electricity companies that have contracts with Electricité de France. It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to satisfy himself as to the non-leviable status of electricity imports across the interconnector.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning payments made to Electricité de France during the electricity privatisation process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of representations about electricity trade across the interconnector. The background to the arrangements for this trade is set out in the coal review White Paper—Cm 2235—from paragraph 7.95.

Coal Imports

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the latest figures for coal imports for each month in 1993; what is the breakdown for each port in the United Kingdom; and what were the comparable figures for each month in 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Estimated coal imports for 1993 are still subject to revision, but the latest estimates for the periods requested are:

	1992	1993
January	2,217	1,950
February	1,709	1,400
March	2,049	1,300
April	1,445	1,400
May	1,986	1,300
June	1,943	1,400
July	1,801	1,550
August	1,403	1,500
September	1,512	1,800
October	1,250	1,500
November	1,671	1,450
December	1,353	[1]

[1]Not yet available.

A breakdown of coal imports by port for 1993 is not available.

Dishwashers

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce measures to penalise manufacturers of dishwashers who include faults in the design of the machines which impose additional costs to their customers in terms of repairs and maintenance.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 18 January 1994]: Under the Sale of Goods Act 1979 consumers already have a right of redress against suppliers of faulty goods.

Household Goods

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to regulate the after-sales agreements offered by manufacturers of household goods.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The Department of Trade and Industry published a consultation paper on consumer guarantees in February 1992. Further consideration of this issue has been delayed pending the publication, which took place last month, of the EC Commission's discussion paper on the same subject.

Communications and Transport Deregulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will publish a list of all material sent to the communications and transport deregulation task force by outside persons and organisations, together with the dates on which such material was received by the task force;

(2) if he will publish a list of all meetings held between the communications and transport deregulation task force and outside persons and organisations, together with the dates of such meetings.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The eight deregulation task forces, of which the transport and communications task force was one, were independent of Government. My Department provided a secretariat but task force members held their own meetings from time to time and collected evidence for their own use. It is not therefore possible to provide a complete list of meetings with organisations or of material provided in evidence.

Power Lines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the report of the public inquiry into the construction of power lines from Lakenby to Pickton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1994]: My Department has received the inspector's report and will make a decision in due course.

GATT

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what affect the GATT agreement will have on EC regulations affecting British industry.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 January 1994]: Certain changes in EC legislation will be needed to implement the EC's obligations under the GATT agreement. The main ones will be the changes in the common external tariff to give effect to the agreed cuts in tariffs on imports; and changes to EC rules on anti-dumping and countervailing duties to reflect the new GATT rules in these areas.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of how GPT Ltd. will be affected (a) nationally and (b) in Coventry by GATT.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 January 1994]: GATT will produce higher world economic growth through progressive trade liberalisation. This will lead to greatly increased opportunities for exporters and boost job creation, technological innovation and industrial development. Negotiations to secure improvements to the offers made in December are still under way and full details of the tariff cuts in individual sectors are not yet available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what criteria GATT will improve the prospects for British industry.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 January 1994]: British exporters will benefit greatly from higher world growth, the opening up of overseas markets, improved trade rules and a more stable international trading environment. The average cut in bound tariff rates on exports of industrial products from the European Community to the United States is 49 per cent. and to Japan 57 per cent. British services exporters and innovators will benefit from the inclusion of services and intellectual property in the multilateral trading system for the first time. The opening of new public procurement markets will also benefit British suppliers of goods and services. British industry will also benefit from the reduction of tariffs on imports of components and raw materials into the United Kingdom.

Stratford Rail Station

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to publish studies done by his Department into the possibilities afforded to East Anglian economic regeneration by development of an international passenger station at Stratford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 19 January 1994]: My Department has not undertaken such studies.

Electronic Components

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received from Conner Peripherals (UK) Ltd. relating to the Government's policy on import duties on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom from non-European Union countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the import duties imposed by the Government on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom by non-European Union countries;

(3) what representations he has received from the electronics sector relating to the Government's policy on import duties on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom from non-European Union countries; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on changes since 1990 on the import duties levied on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom by non-European Union countries;

(5) what action his Department is taking to safeguard the United Kingdom electronic industry against imports from non-European countries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The common customs tariff charged on imports into the United Kingdom of electronic components and products ranges from 4 per cent. to 14 per cent. There have been no changes in the common customs tariff since 1990.

There have been discussions with a number of United Kingdom electronic sector companies, including Conner Peripherals (UK) Ltd., about the application of the European Community's tariff regimes, in particular the temporary suspension of duty and tariff quota schemes, whereby EC tariffs can be suspended on items not available from within the EC. Following these discussions, an EC tariff quota on imports of hard disk drives was dicontinued with effect from 1 January 1992.

Anti-dumping duties have been imposed by the EC on certain electronic components in response to unfair trading practices which have been injurious to EC industry. However, the Government continue to believe that the reduction or elimination of tariffs is the most effective way of encouraging the overall development of markets and increasing the volume of business.

SCOTLAND

NHS Trusts (Pay)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many cars each national health service trust and health board has bought as part of a payment package for senior personnel in the last year; and what is the average value of such cars.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Glenochil Prison

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what refurbishments are presently taking place at Glenochil prison; and if he will list the contracts awarded with the details of the financial costs of each and the total costs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have asked Mr. E. W. Frizzell, the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, to arrange for a reply to be given to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. John McFall, dated 20 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about refurbishments currently taking place at Glenochil Prison. The information is as follows:

Refurbishment projects	Awarded to	Costs (including VAT) £000s
Replacement of the electronic locking cell system	WHS Ltd.	1,542
Alterations to the wood machine area in the worksheds	Institution's own workforce	8
Damage repairs to 'A' Hall and fitting of new locks throughout the prison as a result of a recent hostage incident	Institution's own workforce	60
		1,610

Prisoners

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many short-term prisoners have, at the half way point of their sentence, been (a) released, (b) charged with a further offence after their release, (c) convicted of a further offence committed after their release, (d) returned to prison to serve out their full sentence and (e) returned to prison on a new sentence since 1 October 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is currently not collected centrally, save that the number of prisoners returned to prison to serve out their full sentence under section 16 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 is being collected on a monthly basis from 1 January 1994. The Scottish Prison Service prisoner records database, to come into operation in summer 1995, will hold some information on releases and previous custodial sentences.

Badgers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by county the number of badgers shot and gassed in each year since 1988; and what percentage of those badgers were subsequently shown to have tuberculosis.

Sir Hector Monro: The badger population in Scotland is widely dispersed in the countryside and does not pose an animal health risk. Consequently, badgers have never been subject to official controls on animal health grounds and it has never been necessary to shoot badgers in Scotland. Gassing as a control mechanism was discontinued in Great Britain in 1982.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Lang: The 1992-93 market-testing programme in the Scottish Office has now been completed and the outcomes are being analysed, in consultation with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report".

Departmental Files

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many files were retained from public scrutiny for a further 25 years; and what was the general subject matter by category, contained in them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the last 12 months, a total of 77 files with special closure periods—longer than 30 years—were transferred by Scottish Office Departments to the Scottish Record Office. They included information that was supplied in confidence and documents containing private information about individuals. As such, they fell within the Government's published guidelines on extended or special closures.

Falkirk and District Royal Infirmary

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what complaints he has received about the operation of the incinerator at Falkirk and District royal infirmary; and what action he will take to ensure that there is no health risk caused by the operation of the incinerator.

Mr. Stewart: Over the last year or so, I have received several complaints about the fumes from the clinical waste incinerator chimney located at Falkirk and District royal infirmary.

On each occasion, inquiries have been made and at this time I am content that the clinical waste incinerator is operating within the statutory requirements. As a safeguard, additional fume monitoring is planned even although the local authority monitoring the situation agree that the emissions are within present guidelines.

Smear Tests

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the amount of time taken by each health board in Scotland to notify patients of the results of smear tests for cervical cancer; (2) if he will make a statement on the guidelines issued by the Scottish Office on the amount of time which should be taken by Scottish health boards to notify women of the results of their smear tests for cervical cancer.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards have been set a target of a maximum of 14 days average for the reporting of results to the patient.

Information is not collected centrally on the time taken by each health board but the current average processing time for cervical smears examined by NHS laboratories in Scotland is 11 days.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the procedures used by Ayrshire and Arran health board in carrying out screening for cervical cancer; and what is the average amount of time taken to notify patients of the results of smear tests within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area.

Mr. Stewart: Cervical screening procedures followed in Ayrshire and Arran health board comply with existing guidance. There is a three-yearly call-recall system in place for all women aged 20 to 60 years and the laboratory staff at Crosshouse hospital participate in an external quality assurance scheme.

Information is not collected centrally on the time taken by GPs, hospitals or clinics to report the results but the national target is 14 days on average.

The current average processing time for cervical smears examined at Ayrshire and Arran health board's laboratory is 10 days.

Sporting Rates

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total revenue accrued to Scottish local authorities through sporting rates in 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Stewart: The total revenue accrued to Scottish local authorities through sporting rates in each of the four years is estimated at around £2 million.

Tied Cottages

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) male and (b) female agricultural workers live in tied cottages in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: There are no official figures of the number of agricultural workers living in tied cottages. The results of a sample survey of earnings and hours of agricultural workers indicate that 48 per cent. of male regular hired workers and 10 per cent. of female regular hired workers in Scotland in 1992 lived in a house or cottage as part payment of wages. These figures may not however accurately reflect the number of salaried managers living in a tied house.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of deaths and serious injuries in Scotland as a result of domestic fires since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures for serious injuries are not available. The available figures are as follows:

	Casualties
Year	Fatal	Non-fatal

1981	126	862

Source: Home Office Fire Statistics based on reports from local authority fire brigades

There has been an encouraging decrease in the number of fatalities since 1989, which may be due to a combination of factors, including implementation of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988—and subsequent amendment regulations—and the active promotion of smoke alarms. While there has in contrast been an increase in non-fatal casualties, this may be connected with a growing awareness amongst fire brigades of the effects of gas and smoke inhalation and a consequent increase in casualty recording.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Office's involvement in the recent consultation by the Department of Trade and Industry into relaxation of the Furniture and Furnishings Fire (Safety) Regulations 1988 and the Night Wear Safety Regulations 1985; and whether his Department favours the relaxation of these regulations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The initial consultation undertaken by the Department of Trade and Industry was restricted to individual companies, trade associations and other organisations—including local authority associations, and consumer and safety groups—which that Department considered might have an interest in the provisions of the particular regulations. Other Government Departments were not invited to comment at that stage. If any proposals emerge, as a result of the initial consultation, for the provisions of the regulations to be amended, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be formally consulted because of his responsibilities for fire safety matters in Scotland.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the latest estimates by the Registrar-General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in Scotland, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures expressed as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is given in the tables. For clarity of presentation, table A includes figures for regions, islands areas and the whole of Scotland. The population figures in table B have been prepared by a method that involves a certain degree of approximation and therefore they must be treated with some caution.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the criteria applied by the Scottish Office in making awards of regional selective assistance; what safeguards exist in the event of the ownership of a company in receipt of regional selective assistance changing; how the Scottish Office polices companies in receipt of regional selective assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The criteria for regional selective assistance include location, investment, jobs, need, viability and private sector financial support. In the event of a change in ownership, an offer of assistance may be transferred to the new owners, or alternatively the grant may be withheld or recovered depending on the circumstances of the case. Throughout the term of each offer of assistance, and always prior to any payment of grant, detailed company progress reports are obtained which have been certified by independent accountants.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what amount of money was received by Conner Peripherals (UK) Ltd. in regional selective assistance in the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what amount of money was received by Amkor Anam (Europe) Ltd. in regional selective assistance before its announcement of the closure of its plant in Irvine.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. member to my answer on 5 November 1993, Official Report, column 239.

M80

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to meet CARE80 concerning the line of route for the M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Officials from the Scottish Office Industry Department roads directorate and their consultants will be meeting members of CARE80 on 25 January. In due course, they will be providing me with a detailed report of all their consultations, including the discussions with CARE80, for my consideration. Thereafter, a final decision will be taken on the proposed route for the M80 and this will be immediately followed by the publication of the draft statutory procedures.

Glasgow-Cumbernauld Railway Line

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has received for the electrification of the Glasgow-Cumbernauld railway line; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received no such plans.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given Scottish councils concerning compliance with the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Sir Hector Monro: Guidance has been issued to local authorities accompanying orders, codes of practice and regulations made under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Specific guidance has been issued on recycling, in the form of a waste management paper on the compilation of waste recycling plans and on the environmental standards that should normally be applied to industrial processes covered by local authority air pollution control. The hazardous waste inspectorate, as an ongoing part of its responsibility, gives advice to local authorities with respect to their duties under relevant legislation on waste management matters including part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Further advice is given at meetings of the Scottish Pollution Control Co-ordinating Committee.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which councils in Scotland have failed to meet any of the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: It is for Scottish local authorities to ensure that they comply with the duties imposed upon them by the Environmental Protection Act 1990. However, the Scottish Office has monitored compliance with the provisions of section 30 of the Act relating to administrative arrangements for the separation of authorities' waste disposal and waste regulation functions, and to section 49 of the Act, which concerns the submission of recycling plans to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Currently, the City of Edinburgh and the City of Glasgow district councils have still to advise him of their arrangements for separating waste regulation from waste disposal. Draft recycling plans have yet to be submitted by:

Caithness district council
Dunfermline district council
Lochaber district council
Moray district council
Motherwell district council
Nairn district council
Sutherland district council
Western Isles council
Wigtown district council

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his officials have had with Kyle and Carrick district council concerning compliance with the Environmental Protection Act 1990; what was the outcome of such discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Officials of the Scottish Office had routine discussions with Kyle and Carrick district council on 30 June 1992 about matters concerning waste regulation. The outcome of these discussions was a letter to the council specifying matters to be dealt with under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what problems have been reported to the Scottish Office regarding arrangements for refuse collection in Perth and Kinross district council area; what action has been taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: One complaint was recently received about the cost of commercial waste collection. The matter was brought to the attention of the district council's director of environmental health. On the basis of information received from the council a reply was sent to the complainant.

Minimal Access Surgery

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the report produced by Professor Alfred Cuschieri on implications for the NHS of minimal access surgery.

Mr. Lang: This valuable and timely report is being published today as a focus for public debate on the important issues surrounding the development of minimal access therapy—MAT. Commissioned jointly by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department and the Department of Health, the report is intended as a contribution to the development of strategic planning for these new techniques in the NHS.

The report has already been referred to the medical and nursing advisory committee north and south of the border and the views of other interested bodies will be sought as appropriate.

MAT offers the prospect of major advances in patient care, but also requires the development of new skills. In the vital areas of training and technique evaluation, we have recently announced the establishment of two MAT training units in England and one in Scotland as a joint initiative by the Government and the Wolfson Foundation to ensure that clinicians are properly and fully trained to produce the best possible outcomes for patients.

As the report highlights, widespread introduction of these new techniques will represent very major change for the NHS. The interests of patients will of course be at the forefront of the development of MAT and we are already using Professor Cuschieri's report as the basis for work on establishing the efficacy and cost-effectiveness of these treatments to ensure maximum benefit for patients.

Jury System

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made with his review of the jury system and the not proven verdict.

Mr. Lang: I am today publishing a consultation paper seeking views on a number of proposals for improving the jury system and on the future of our system of verdicts, including the not proven verdict. The proposals in relation to juries are aimed at more effective selection of juries which are representative and willing to serve, and at a reduction in the inconvenience suffered by those cited to attend court for jury service. The paper also sets out the case for and against the retention of the three verdict system. I hope that the proposals made and questions raised in this paper will stimulate the widest possible debate.

This consultation paper is the third in a series seeking views on proposals for improving the delivery of justice in Scotland. We are inviting comments by 15 April. A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

Electronic Components

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations the Scottish Office has received from Conner Peripherals (UK) Ltd. relating to the Government's policy on import duties on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom from non-European Union countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from the electronics sector in Scotland relating to the Government's policy on import duties on electronic components and products imported into the United Kingdom from non-European Union countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 January 1994]: The only representation received by my right hon. Friend in connection with duties paid on imports of electronic goods and components was one last year from Conner Peripherals. Following consultation with ministerial colleagues with responsibility for Customs and Excise, he provided a helpful and detailed response to the company.

In addition, both the Scottish Office and the Department of Trade and Industry provided at official level considerable assistance to Conner towards maximising the European content of its product and more specifically on gaining a greater understanding of the complex tariff issues.

WALES

Council Tax

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice has been given to councils to ensure that an additional bathroom or kitchen for the use of a person with a disability attracts a reduction in council tax payments, apart from that given on page 20 of Welsh Office pamphlet "Council Tax—Liability, Discounts and Exemptions".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice on the application of the Council Tax (Reduction for Disabilities) Regulations 1992 —SI 1992 No. 554—and the Council Tax (Reduction for Disabilities) (Amendment) Regulations 1993—SI 1993 No. 195—is contained in the revised council tax practice note No. 2 on liability, discounts and exemptions, issued to all billing authorities in July 1993.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what regulations along the lines of SI 1990 No. 2475 introduced to exempt extensions and granny flats from the standard charge provision of the community charge legislation have been made to ensure that such extensions are not classified as separate dwellings under the council tax legislation;

(2) what provisions have been made to ensure that extensions built to provide facilities for the disabled are not classified as separate dwellings.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Where a property contains more than one self-contained unit of separate living accommodation, it will be treated as two or more dwellings. Each of those dwellings, if it is not an exempt dwelling, will be subject to a separate council tax bill. Comparison with community charge arrangements is not appropriate. Community charge was a personal tax, whereas council tax is a property tax with a personal element.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of response times by ambulances to 999 calls for Wales, and for each of the health authority or trust areas within Wales, and the times as percentages of the average for the United Kingdom and for England and Scotland.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The ambulance service in Wales standard response times are:

	50 per cent. minutes	95 per cent. minutes
South Glamorgan	7	14
Clwyd, Gwent, Mid and West Glamorgan	8	18
East Dyfed, Gwynedd, Pembrokeshire and Powys	8	21

The information requested for Wales is shown in the table:

Information on the ambulance services in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland should be sought from the appropriate Secretaries of State.

Morriston Hospital, Swansea

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on the application of Morriston hospital, Swansea, for trust status.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I expect shortly to announce a decision.

Nurses Grading

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurse regrading appeals remain to be settled; what proportion this constitutes of the appeals made since 1989; and what are the number and percentages for each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Latest available information on the total numbers of clinical grading appeals still outstanding is as follows:

Health Authority	At Employing Authority Level	At Welsh Appeals Committee (Regional) Level	At National Level (Negotiating Council)
Clwyd		16	42
East Dyfed	4	75	7
Gwent	4	222	57
Gwynedd		77	13
Mid Glamorgan	90	309	39
Pembrokeshire		50
Powys		55	62
South Glamorgan		206	25
West Glamorgan		72	14
Total	98	1,082	259

A significant number of appeals made since 1989 have been either withdrawn or not proceeded with and no reliable proportionate data are available.

I am optimistic that recent discussions between both sides of the Nursing and Midwifery Staff Negotiating Council will shortly result in new procedures for clearing all outstanding cases at the Welsh and national levels.

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners received gross payments in excess of £200,000 per year in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Welsh Low Pay Unit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with representatives of local authority associations the setting up of a Welsh low pay unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by (a) Ministers, (b) civil servants and (c) staff of Government agencies working in or to his Department; and how much these cards cost (i) to buy, (ii) to post and (iii) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Livestock Quota

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are being made to lengthen the amount of time farmers in Wales are given to complete their livestock quota application forms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: To enable quota allocations from the national reserve for 1993 to be made as quickly as possible and sheep annual premium payments thereafter to be made promptly, the Department set a deadline of 7 January for receipt of applications from sheep producers eligible to apply under categories 1 and 2. We are, however, prepared to process any applications received within a week of that date.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure the continuation of the ewe premium supplement to farmers in less-favoured areas in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I will continue to ensure that the needs of farmers in the Welsh less-favoured areas are taken fully into account in determining supplements for ewe premium payments.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales were employed full-time in (a) the civil service, (b) the steel industry and (c) the media at the latest available date.

Mr. Redwood: The information is shown in the table.

Industry	[1]Number	Date	Source
Civil Service[2]	[3]30,535	April 1993	Civil Service Statistics, Her Majesty's Treasury
Steel industry	[4]16,000	November 1993	Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau
Media	[5]5,400	September 1991	Employment Department, Census of Employment 1991

[1] Number of full-time employees in Wales.
[2] Includes non-industrial and industrial civil servants working in United Kingdom Government Departments and bodies in Wales.
[3] Total relates to full-time equivalents. Part-time staff are counted as half units.
[4] Figures for full-time staff are not available separately from part-time staff in the data collected by the Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau. Very few of the 16,000 employees at November 1993 are believed to be part-time.

[5] There is no single category in the standard industrial classification—1980—which relates exclusively to the media. The above figure is based on activity headings 4751, 4752, 4753, 8380, 9741 which include printing/publishing of newspapers, periodicals, and books; advertising; and radio/television services, theatres, etc.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of staff employed in the Welsh Office (a) 12 months ago and (b) at the most recent available date.

Mr. Redwood: The answer is:

(a) The number of full-time equivalent permanent staff employed by my Department as at 6 January 1993=2,429.

(b) The number of full-time equivalent permanent staff employed by my Department as at 6 January 1994=2,400.

Part-time staff are included as full-time equivalents.

The figures include staff seconded to other organisations but exclude casuals.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of staff employed in each of the four senior grades in the Welsh Office (a) 12 months ago and (b) at the most recent available date.

Mr. Redwood: The answer is:

(a) The number of staff employed in my Department in each of the four most senior grades as at 17 January 1993 are as follows:

	Number
Grade 1	1
Grade 2s	2
Grade 3s	12
Grade 4s	6
Total	21

(b) The number of staff employed in my Department in each of the four most senior grades as at 17 January 1994 are as follows:

	Number
Grade 1	1
Grade 2s	2
Grade 3s	12
Grade 4s	7
Total	22

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list for each scheme operated by her Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Jack: No schemes relating to programme expenditure are operated by my Department under which loans are currently available.

Premiums and Payments

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to ensure that all potential claimants under the sheep annual premium, suckler cow premium and arable payments schemes are made aware of the closing dates for applications to these schemes.

Mr. Jack: The closing dates for applications are clearly set out in the appropriate explanatory literature and claim forms for the schemes which are distributed to known producers. The closing dates are also publicised by press releases issued to all relevant media, including the farming press, when application forms for the schemes become available and again shortly before the closing dates.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of late claims received by regional service centres and divisional offices for the most recent year for (i) sheep annual premium, (ii) suckler cow premium and (iii) the arable area payments scheme.

Mr. Jack: The numbers of claims received by the nine regional service centres after the closing dates of the application periods for the schemes requested are as follows:

	Number
1993 Sheep annual premium scheme	1,082
1993 Suckler cow premium scheme	908
1993 Arable area payments scheme	87

Neptune Warning System

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to extend the Neptune warning system by installing tide gauges around the coast of south and west Wales.

Mr. Jack: The map I placed in the Library when answering the hon. Member's previous question on this subject on 11 January, Official Report, column 50, shows that tide gauges are already in place at Holyhead, Barmouth, Fishguard, Milford Haven, Mumbles and Newport. There are no plans to install further gauges along the coast of south and west Wales at present. However, the Ministry has funded the development of a computer model for the Bristol channel and Severn estuary which is intended to improve the forecasts of potential coastal flooding issued by the national storm tide warning service for that part of south Wales and the relevant parts of England.

Agricultural Wages Board

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the effect of abolition of the agricultural wages board upon the numbers of agricultural workers entitled to claim housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Abolition of the statutory control of agricultural wages could affect the entitlement of some agricultural workers to housing benefit. But it is not possible to estimate what the global effect might be, as this would depend on the details of individual agreements on pay and conditions.

Cattle Biodiversity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to protect rare breeds of cattle and cattle biodiversity; what were the conclusions of the recent Cambridge conference on this matter; and what assessment expert advisers have made of the work being undertaken at the Bush estate outside Edinburgh.

Mr. Jack: I am aware of the scientific debate about diversity in cattle populations, and my Ministry is placing a research contract to establish the extent of genetic variation in rare and common breeds. The British cattle breeders conference at Cambridge in January 1994 heard a Food and Agriculture organisation paper about biodiversity in developing countries, a topic to which British scientists have made significant contributions. Research at the Bush estate funded by my Ministry includes work designed to enable genes for important characteristics from rare breeds to be located, facilitating their use in breeding programmes. Producers of rare breeds of cattle are of course, eligible for the same financial support provided to other beef producers under the suckler cow premium and beef special premium schemes.

Bees

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is her Department's policy that all bee colonies given antibiotic treatment by its officials for the control of European foul brood should receive a standard uniform dosage regardless of the number of bees in each colony; and what assessment she has made of the effect of such treatment on smaller bee colonies.

Mr. Jack: Different dosages are prescribed for large and small colonies. Experience has shown that our treatments are equally effective on all sizes of colony.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what savings he estimates will result from the introduction of market testing in the civil service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: In my statement to the House of Commons on 4 November 1993, I announced that provisional figures suggested that the "Competing for Quality" programme, of which market testing is part, had resulted in annual savings of approximately £100 million by 30 September 1993.

Further detail on the outcome of the programme will be published in the "Citizens Charter Second Report".

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the objective of removing equal opportunities requirements from private contractors bidding for Government contracts.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 19 January 1994]: The Government and the civil service are committed to a policy of equality of opportunity both because it is right in terms of social justice and because it makes good business sense.

Where services are contracted out to private companies, the Government do not intend to require particular employment policies and practices, and such requirements will not be included in tender documents, although contracts may require compliance with United Kingdom law on equal opportunities if the contracted work is carried out wholly within the United Kingdom. EC directives impose restrictions on the Government's ability to take account of non-commercial matters.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the savings which will result from the closure of the Newcastle office of the British Geological Survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The Natural Environment Research Council, NERC, of which the British Geological Survey, BGS, is a constituent part, estimates that closure of the Newcastle office will result in savings of approximately £86,000 per annum.

As an independent body established by royal charter, the NERC is responsible for the management of its own resources. The decision on the future of the Newcastle office is properly one for the BGS and the NERC, and not one for the Government.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Private Pensions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Durham have contracted out of occupational pension schemes and taken up private pension plans.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available.

Finance Bill

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make available to hon. Members the customary notes on the clauses of the Finance Bill.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. Notes on clauses are being placed in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House. In addition, the Treasury will, for the first time, be making the notes available to the public.

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), of 29 November, Official Report, columns 337-38, if he will provide the information on tax liability by region.

Mr. Dorrell: Available information on the annual reduction in income tax liability by region for the years 1989-90 to 1991-92, compared with the 1978-79 indexed regime is given in tables. In view of the length of the tables, I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Members' Library.

Value Added Tax (Domestic Fuels)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 2 December regarding value added tax on domestic fuels, Ref. 0595/27.

Sir John Cope: I replied to this letter on Tuesday 18 January 1994.

International Monetary Fund (Russia)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy with regard to co-operation between the International Monetary Fund and Russia.

Mr. Nelson: The IMF and Russian authorities reached agreement on a programme to allow release of $1·5 billion of assistance under the systematic transformation facility —STF—in July 1993. We urge the fund and Russian authorities to continue their policy dialogue and reach rapid agreement on further action which can be supported by a second drawing under the STF and will enable a full stand-by arrangement and rouble stabilisation fund to be put in place.

Value Added Tax (Registration)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 770-72, if he will provide the figures for value added tax registrations and deregistrations for each calendar year since 1987.

Sir John Cope: Revised registration and deregistration figures by calendar year, from January 1987 to December 1993 are:

Rugby Union (Benefits)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he makes for the taxation of income on benefits arising from the playing of Rugby Union football.

Mr. Dorrell: Under Rugby Union rules players are forbidden to receive payment for playing. If they were to do so, they would be taxed on their income in the same way as other sportsmen and women. Their income for tax purposes would be arrived at in the way as for other people, taking account of payments of money and any other benefits.

Taxation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was taken by *(a)*income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) capital gains tax, (d) inheritance tax, (e) VAT, (f) national insurance contributions, (g) excise duties, (h) council tax and its predecessors (i) business rates and (j) other taxes for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 January 1994]: The information requested is shown in the table. The estimates for 1993-94 are taken from table 6·5 of the November 1993 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Statistics are not available on correspondence answered by officials in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

EU Structural Funds

11. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action to discuss the subject of the distribution of European Union structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action on 18 January to discuss a range of issues including the next round of the EC structural funds.

Forestry

12. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the area planted with forest trees on private land in Northern Ireland last year.

Mr. Ancram: The area of forest trees grant aided by the Department of Agriculture in 1992-93 was 911 hectares.

Border Roads

13. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many roads crossing the border with the Republic are closed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: There are 291 border crossing points recognised by the British and Irish Governments, of which 103 are currently subject to closure order.

The Government remain committed to maintaining security and to curbing the ability of terrorists to exploit the border. The responsibility for any inconvenience resulting from the closure of roads rests squarely on the terrorists.

Electricity Generation

14. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with electricity generators concerning further generating capacity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: None. Following the privatisation of the electricity industry in Northern Ireland responsibility for ordering new generating capacity rests solely with Northern Ireland Electricity plc. Northern Ireland's immediate power requirements will be met by the planned construction of an electricity interconnector with Scotland.

Security

15. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation in the Province.

25. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on security in Northern Ireland.

16. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase the block grant to education and library boards in Northern Ireland to enable discretionary grants to be paid to all students who are offered places on vocation-oriented courses at further and higher education institutions.

Mr. Ancram: No. The amount of funding to be made available for discretionary awards is a matter for each education and library board to determine in the light of the total resources at its disposal.

Vehicles

17. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vehicles there are in Northern Ireland in the categories (a) private, (b) goods and (c) heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Tim Smith: In December 1992, the date of the last annual census of vehicles licensed in Northern Ireland, there were 502,027 cars and motor cycles, 37,007 light goods vehicles and 16,289 heavy goods vehicles.

Dublin Bombing

18. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requests for assistance in tracing the perpetrators of the 1973 Dublin bombing he has received from the Irish authorities; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to the bombing attack which took place in Dublin on 17 May 1974. Requests between police forces for assistance with ongoing criminal investigations are made on a confidential basis.

Political Developments

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest political developments for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have intensified their efforts to develop dialogue between the two Governments and the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland. I am holding further private, bilateral discussions with the Northern Ireland parties, following on earlier discussions last autumn, and we are continuing discussions with the Irish Government on matters of mutual interest, including constitutional issues. It remains our objective to return to multilateral talks involving the two Governments and four main constitutional parties at an appropriate point.

Prospects for Peace

20. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the prospects for peace in the Province.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The prospects for peace are principally governed by the future conduct of Sinn Fein/Provisional IRA. The joint declaration provides a balanced framework for democracy. It promotes the interests and aspirations of all sections of the community in Northern Ireland while compromising no essential principle. It provides a clear opportunity for Sinn Fein to become fully involved in democratic politics. It is now up to it first to renounce violence and to do so for good.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the level of unemployment in Northern Ireland in December 1991 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Tim Smith: At 12 December 1991 there were 101,270 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland representing 13·6 per cent. of the work force. The most recent figures show that at 9 December 1993 there were 99,947 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland representing 13·3 per cent. of the work force.

Political Parties

22. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what future talks he plans with the political parties in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and I held discussions with the chairman and members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland on 13 December. We discussed the operation of the tripartite structure of policing in Northern Ireland and improvements necessary to clarify roles, responsibilities and lines of accountability.

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland.

29. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the talks he has had with the Irish Government relating to Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) and the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett).

Mr. Tim Smith: The information requested is not available from United Kingdom Government sources. However I refer my hon. Friend to tables 9A and 9B of "Trade Statistics"—December 1992—published by the Central Statistics Office, Dublin, a copy of which is in the Library. These are the latest available figures.

Strip Searches

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches have been carried out in prison institutions in the last five years in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The purpose of full searching of prisoners in Northern Ireland is to detect items such as explosives, weapons, drugs and other illegal items in order to reduce the risk of escape and the potential for injury to prisoners, staff and visitors.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons alternative electronic methods are not used in place of strip searching in prison institutions.

Sir John Wheeler: There are no mechanical or electronic devices which can detect the wide range of contraband capable of being secreted on a prisoner's person.

Northern Ireland Economy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current estimated figure of the Northern Ireland economy; what percentage of this is privately run; what percentage is in the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The gross domestic product—GDP—of Northern Ireland in 1992 was £11,475 million at factor cost. An industrial breakdown of GDP is published in the December 1993 edition of the Central Statistical Office publication "Economic Trends", but GDP is not divided into public sector and private sector components.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the individual grants from the Local Enterprise Development Unit or the Industrial Development Board that have been taken up in each of the past five years by companies in the potato processing sector.

Mr. Tim Smith: The amounts of grants taken up by companies in the potato processing sector in each of the last five years were as follows:

Tied Cottages

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) male and (b) female agricultural workers live in tied cottages in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: No official figures are available for the number of agricultural workers living in tied cottages. However, based on the results of the 1992 earnings of hired labour survey, it is estimated that there were 170 male agricultural workers living in a house or cottage provided by their employer in 1992. No female workers are recorded as living in such accommodation.

HEALTH

Regional Budgets

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the budget for each regional health authority in real terms in each year from 1990 to 1995.

Mr. Sackville: Revenue expenditure by regional health authority for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 is shown in the table. Figures are at 1990-91 prices. Information is not yet available for subsequent years.

Source: Annual accounts for regional health authorities.

Notes

1. The table shows the total revenue expenditure of regional health authorities—RHAs.

2. The figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are not comparable with those for 1990-91—which pre-date the national health service reforms. In particular:

The introduction of capital charges and other changes in accounting policy mean that the figures do not have the same basis.

Many RHAs became directly involved in the purchase of healthcare and related services for their region. Their 1991-92 and 1992-93 expenditure, therefore, includes substantial costs for patient treatment incurred under contracts with healthcare providers.

3. Following the implementation of the NHS reforms significant variations developed in the extent to which RHAs took on, retained or devolved, management support and operational services and the purchase of healthcare and in the extent to which their costs were borne or recharged to users. The expenditure of individual RHAs has also been influenced by other factors including variations in the size of the total populations served and the number of district health authorities comprising each region.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are those people currently appointed to serve on national health service trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 17 January at column 385 for details of those appointed as chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts. The appointment of executive directors rests with individual trusts.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what repayments of public divided capital were requested and paid by each NHS trust in the Northern region in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: There were no repayments of public dividend capital requested or paid by any national health service trust in the Northern region in 1991-92 or 1992-93.

Performance Review

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the remit of the chief medical officer's review of guidance on doctors' performance.

Dr. Mawhinney: The terms of reference for this group, which was established in October 1993 are:

"To review current guidance and procedures relating to doctors whose performance appears to fall below acceptable standards.

In the light of this review to make recommendations by 31 December 1993 to the Secretary of State for any necessary changes and further work needed".

Departmental Fuel Bills

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by location for each of her Department's properties in the Doncaster area the annual fuel heating bills by year for the last four years.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has no properties in the Doncaster area. Information is available on national health service properties as follows:

Site	Year	Fuel cost £
Doncaster Royal Infirmary	1990-91	286,418
	1991-92	[1]—
	1992-93	328,770
Loversall Hospital	1990-91	170,457
Tickhill Road Hospital	1991-92	226,726
St. Catherine's Hospital	1992-93	209,988
Conisbrough Hospital	1990-91	18,003
(Closed August 1992)	1991-92	31,793
	1992-93	n/a
Montagu Hospital	1990-91	50,235
	1991-92	[1]—
	1992-93	58,950

[1]—Information in-complete

NB: Loversall, Tickhill Road and St. Catherine's Hospitals are all served by the same fuel system

The figures include the costs of the fossil fuels consumed by these sites—coal, gas and oil. It is not possible to identify the precise amounts for heating bills.

Paracetamol

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to reduce the incidence of self poisoning with paracetamol by ensuring that it is marketed only when it contains methanion, to minimise liver damage.

Mr. Sackville: There are serious reservations about the addition of an antidote—usually methionine—to such a widely used product, which is safe in normal use. This would expose possibly millions of people for sometimes lengthy periods to the antidote unnecessarily.

The supply of paracetamol is controlled in terms of the strength and pack size which may be supplied without the supervision of a pharmacist and the labelling must clearly state the recommended dose, with a warning that this should not be exceeded.

NHS Management Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration the NHS management executive has given to advising newly appointed chairmen of the general time commitment expected of them for the remuneration they are paid; and what are the reasons for the decision reached.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive has routinely provided guidance to new chairmen that their time commitment to their NHS authority or trust would be up to three days a week. No such guidance was issued to chairmen of fourth-wave NHS trusts, since at the time of their appointment the management executive's task force on corporate governance had not reported. The management executive will be issuing new guidance on chairmen's roles and responsibilities in a code of accountability for NHS boards to take effect from 1 April 1994, which will be based upon a requirement to fulfil clearly described responsibilities on a part-time basis.

Liquid Medicines

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of children being poisoned by liquid medicines have been reported to her Department in the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Physically Disabled People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) elderly and (b) younger physically disabled people in the Doncaster area are currently accommodated in (i) private sector homes and (ii) council-owned homes.

Mr. Bowis: The latest available figures are for 31 March 1992. The percentages of residents in staffed residental care homes for elderly people in the Doncaster area were 37 per cent. in local authority homes and 58 per cent. in private homes. The percentages of residents in staffed residential care homes for younger physically disabled people were 100 per cent. in local authority homes and 0 per cent. in private homes.

(3) how many directors, managers, advisers and administrators have been employed by the Barnet district health authority in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regions are only required to supply this information in an aggregated regional form. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Doughty, chairman of North West Thames regional health authority, for details.

Mental Health

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about a review of the Mental Health Act 1983; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have received a wide measure of support for the proposal, published in August 1993 in the report of the internal review of legal powers on the care of mentally ill people in the community, to amend the Mental Health Act with a new power of supervised discharge. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 28 December 1993 that she will be seeking the earliest opportunity to amend the Act to introduce this power. We have also received some representations including one from the Mental Health Act Commission for a wide review of the Act.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers were working in the mental health field in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in place to deal with patients with mental health problems who require admission to hospital but for whom no bed is available.

Mr. Bowis: It is for health authorities to make arrangements to provide appropriate care and treatment for those who require admission to hospital.

Edgware General Hospital

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors and nurses have been employed at Edgeware general hospital in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Wellhouse trust comprises Edgware and Barnet general hospitals. Available information on doctors of the trust is shown in the table.

Hospital and community health service doctors—30 September 1992

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to respond to the findings of the Peto report about the projected increase in the number of deaths from mesothelioma.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for individual health authorities to ensure that the health care needs of their population are being met, including those with mesothelioma. Professor Peto's predictions on the expected number of deaths from mesothelioma are being considered by the Health and Safety Executive.

Young Offenders (Overseas Trips)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidelines to local authorities concerning sending young offenders abroad on safari trips at public expense; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We intend to issue guidance shortly.

Transplant Authority

Mr Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members currently appointed to the Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority.

Mr. Sackville They are:

Professor Martin Bobrow (Chairman)
Professor The Reverend Gordon R. Dunstan
Dr. Philip A. Dyer
Baroness Eccles of Moulton
Professor Mary G. McGeown
Mr. Stuart Macpherson
Professor Netar Mallik
Professor John R. Salaman
Miss Frances Smithers
Miss Sally Taber

Death Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her most recent calculation of the totals of people who died in each of the past five years as a result of the use of (a) alcohol, (b) tobacco, (c) heroin, (d) cocaine and (e) cannabis.

Mr. Bowis: It is estimated that in the United Kindom about 110,000 deaths a year are related to smoking.

Alcohol is implicated directly or indirectly in a number of causes of death including cirrhosis of the liver, suicide, accidents, stroke, cancers of the mouth, pharynx, larynx and oesophagus. Studies undertaken since 1985 suggest that a reasonable estimate of the total number of alcohol associated deaths would be around 25,000 per year in England and Wales.

Deaths with underlying cause described as drug dependence or non dependent abuse of drugs by type of drug and year of registration of death in the United Kingdom are:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Morphine Type[1]	65	64	77	91	97
Cocaine	1	2	2	3	0

[1] This category includes heroin, methadone, opium, opium alkaloids and their derivatives, and synthetic drugs with morphine-like effects.

Deaths from poisoning by solid or liquid substances: accidental, suicidal and undetermined whether accidentally taken or purposely inflicted in Great Britain are:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Bed Occupancy

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute beds have been closed in each district health authority and each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Information collected centrally is on the average daily number of beds available in each regional and district health authority in each of the last five years and is published in "Bed availability for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance or advice her Department has issued regarding bed occupancy rates; and what guidance or advice her Department has issued regarding bed occupancy requirements that may be laid down by health authorities;

(2) what advice or guidance her Department has issued regarding the vacant bed rate in acute medical or surgical wards.

Mr. Sackville: Hospitals are expected to make the most efficient use of the beds they have available so that they closely match expected patient activity.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines or advice her Department has issued regarding waiting times for beds in accident and emergency departments.

Mr. Sackville: The chief executive of the National Health Service Management Executive has written to all health authorities today to ensure they agree explicit procedures with their hospital providers so that unacceptable delays do not occur. A copy of that letter is being placed in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average waiting time for a patient waiting to be admitted from accident and emergency departments in each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community psychiatric nurses were working within each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Nurse Clinical Grading Appeals

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out by health authority and regional health authority how many nurse clinical grading appeals are pending at an employing authority level, a regional level and a national level; what amount of money these claims involve; what steps are being made to speed the appeal process; and when she estimates this process will be completed.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of appeals outstanding is shown in the table. The number has dropped from just over 20,000 at 31 May 1993 to below 5,000 at 31 December 1993. No estimate of the total sum of arrears to be paid as a result of clinical grading appeals has been made. The Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council is currently discussing new procedures to speed up and streamline the appeals process. It is expected that all cases outstanding will be cleared before the end of 1995. Where a region has only a small number of appeals outstanding, all cases are expected to be cleared in the next few months.

Health Authorities, Cornwall

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current non-executive directors and members of the Cornwall district health authority, Cornwall, Community healthcare trust and the Royal Cornwall hospitals trust, together with the dates when they were appointed and the period of their respective appointments.

Dr. Mawhinney: They are:

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly District Health Authority

The Chairman of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly district health authority is Mr. John Askham. He was appointed on 1 April 1990 and his current term of office expires on 31 March 1994. South Western regional health authority is responsible for the appointment of non-executive members. The appointment of executive members is a matter for the district health authority itself.

Cornwall Healthcare NHS trust

The acting chairman of the Cornwall healthcare national health service trust is Major General Ian Baxter. The non-executive directors of the trust and their term of appointments are:

Non-executive Director	First appointed	Current term of office expires
Major General Ian Baxter	1 April 1993	31 October 1995
Mr. Stuart Young	1 April 1993	31 October 1995
Lady Frances Banham	1 April 1993	31 October 1995
Mr. Alan Wilkes	1 April 1993	31 October 1995
Mrs. Jean Dunkley	1 April 1993	31 October 1995

Royal Cornwall Hospitals NHS Trust

The chairman of the Royal Cornwall Hospitals NHS trust is Mr. John Williams. He was appointed on 1 December 1993 and his term of office expires on 30 November 1997.

The non-executive directors of the trust and their terms of appointment are:

Non-executive Director	First appointed	Current term of office expires
Mr. Gilbert McCabe	1 November 1991	30 November 1997
Mr. Edward Latham	1 November 1991	30 November 1997
Mr. Colin Micklewright	1 November 1991	30 November 1995
Mrs. Doreen Henderson	1 October 1992	30 November 1995

There is currently a vacancy among the non-executive directors following Mr. Williams' appointment as chairman.

South West Regional Health Authority

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current membership of the South West regional health authority together with the dates when they were appointed and the period of their respective appointments.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chairman of the South Western regional health authority is Ms Rennie Fritchie. She was appointed on 1 August 1992 and her current term of office expires on 31 July 1994.

The non-executive members of South Western regional health authority, and their terms of appointment are as follows:

Non-executive director	First appointed	Current term of office expires
Sir John Kingman	26 July 1990	31 October 1996
Dame Margaret Fry	26 July 1990	31 October 1996
Mr. Douglas Strachan	1 November 1993	31 October 1995
Ms Nicolette Pain	1 November 1993	31 October 1995
Mr. Upert Woodburn	1 January 1993	31 October 1996

There is currently a vacancy on the board.

The appointment of executive members of the regional health authority is a matter for the authority itself.

Community Care

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the estimated outturn expenditure on care in the community in 1993-94 and the comparable figures for the previous two financial years.

Mr. Bowis: The community care reforms started on 1 April 1993. The information is not therefore available in the form requested.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the planned expenditure on care in the community over each of the next three financial years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available centrally for the total expenditure on community care services.

Psychiatric Beds

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) long-stay and (b) short-stay psychiatric beds have been closed in each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Information on specific bed closures is not available centrally but details of numbers of long-stay and short-stay psychiatric beds are published annually in "Bed Availability for England". The latest publication relating to 1992-93 is available in the Library.

Patient S

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute an inquiry into the circumstances of the death of patient S on Sunday 16 January, following the removal of the feeding tube.

Mr. Sackville: No. We understand that Frenchay healthcare national health service trust followed the correct procedure by seeking a court declaration that it was lawful not to resume life sustaining treatment, and thereby to allow the patient to die peacefully.

Hospital Beds (Waiting Times)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether she will instigate an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the cases of a 94-year-old woman who spent 14 hours waiting for a bed at Leicester royal infirmary and a 22-year-old woman who waited 23 hours for a bed at King's College hospital, London; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what discussions she has had with health authority or hospital managers regarding recent cases of patients facing long waits at Leicester royal infirmary and King's College hospital, London.

Mr. Sackville: We regard such waits as unacceptable. Our objective remains to ensure that patients requiring admission are given a bed on a suitable ward as soon as possible after a decision to admit and that their dignity and comfort are maintained during any waiting period.

The chief executive of the National Health Service Management Executive has today written to all health authorities reminding them of their responsibility to ensure that specific procedures are in place so that hospitals with whom they contract are able to respond promptly to short-term fluctuations in the emergency work load and that unacceptable delays do not occur.

Smear Tests

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of women receiving smear tests by region for the latest available year and the percentage of those who develop carcinomas before their recall; and what is the recall period for each region.

Mr. Sackville: The number of women receiving smear tests by region for the latest available year is shown in the table. Information on interval cancers is not available centrally. District health authorities screen on at least a five yearly basis, though others screen more frequently in accordance with local health circumstances and priorities. Information on the frequency of screening by DHA is not currently routinely collected.

TRANSPORT

Rail Freight

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when Railtrack's track access charges for freight rail services will be (a) agreed and (b) made public.

Mr. Freeman: Access charges, to be in place when Railtrack is vested, for existing rail freight services are being negotiated between Railtrack and the British Railways Board. Access charges for new rail freight services are a matter for commercial negotiation between the parties concerned. There is no general intention to publish access charges for each individual freight service because of commercial confidentiality. The publication of information by the rail regulator will be governed by sections 71 and 72 of the Railways Act 1993.

Motor Cycling

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people currently hold full motor cycle licences; and if he will arrange for this information to be included in his Department's annual publication "Transport Statistics Great Britain".

Mr. Key: Reliable estimates are not available. In 1989, the drivers census conducted by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency found some 4·75 million licence holders with full motor cycle entitlement. DVLA records contain some license holders who have subsequently died and many who have not ridden a motor cycle for many years. The number is likely to be an overestimate of the number of active riders. Because these statistics are unreliable they are not published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain".

Vehicle Licensing (Deregulation)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations which were invited to respond to his consultation on the deregulation of vehicle licensing, and those which responded.

Mr. Key: The Department is playing a full and active part in the Government's deregulation review. We are currently examining the whole range of regulations administered by the Department, including vehicle licensing. Formal consultation will take place when proposals for change have been identified.

Smoke Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the detailed specifications of the metered check of smoke to be introduced into the MOT test on 1 February.

Mr. Key: The metered check of smoke being introduced into the MOT test on 1 February is for light duty diesel-engined vehicles. The detailed specifications of the check are contained in the MOT tester's inspection manual. I have placed a copy of the relevant pages of the manual in the Library.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria have to be met for an A class trunk road to be designated as an A(M) road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There is provision at section 16(5)(b) of the Highways Act 1980 for an existing all-purpose trunk road to be designated a motorway.

To come up to full motorway standard the road would need to meet the physical requirements for motorways. Designation as a motorway would also mean that certain classes of traffic would be prevented from using the road.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases the Child Support Agency is currently dealing with in (a) Scunthorpe and (b) South Humberside.

Mr. Burt: Information in the form requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I would, however, refer the hon. Member to the national report of the agency's performance, which is placed in the Library each month.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the staff of the Child Support Agency are on performance-related pay.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. Hepplewhite to Mr. John Spellar, dated 19 January 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your Question to the Secretary of State about the number of staff in the Child Support Agency who receive performance related pay.

The Agency operates its performance related pay scheme within the terms of the new national pay arrangements agreed by the Treasury and the Civil Service Trades Unions. These new arrangements have created a stronger link between pay and performance by replacing automatic annual increments with performance related progression. The level of any individual's performance related progression is governed by the Agency's personal review system.

In this system, each individual is set a number of challenging work and personal objectives, tailored to meet each person's experience and ability. Performance related pay is awarded in recognition of the level of individual performance achieved, maintained over a number of years.

The Agency now employs 4,937 staff all of whom are eligible for consideration for an award of performance related pay based upon the agreed arrangements which are available for inspection in the Library.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the gross annual budget of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency's gross allocation for 1993-94 is £119·8 million.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff employed by the Child Support Agency are on performance-related pay.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) by the chief executive of the Child Support Agency on 19 January.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money was paid by his Department in unemployment benefit in each of the last five years; and what was the average number of people in receipt of unemployment benefit in each of the last five years.

Mr. Burt: The information for the latest five years for which figures are available is in the table:

2. Numbers of beneficiaries are rounded to the nearest five thousand.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals for disability living allowance have been lodged with the independent tribunal service in each month since its introduction.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available for any month prior to April 1992. The available information is in the table.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the amount of time taken by the independent tribunal service to deal with appeals, relating to disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The average length of time taken by the independent tribunal service to clear an appeal on disability living allowance is 14 weeks. Work is in hand to reduce this time.

Retired People

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many men under 65 years of age are (a) retired, (b) unclassified because their wives work over 16 hours a week and (c) classified in some other way for the same reason;

(2) how many men aged over 58 years are (a) retired, (b) unemployed and (c) unclassified because their wives are working more than 16 hours per week;

(3) how many women under 60 years of age are (a) retired, (b) unclassified because their husbands work over 16 hours per week and (c) classified in some other way when they have taken early retirement.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average age of retirement for (a) men and (b) women for each year since 1979.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Lone Parents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures similar to those in his Department's tax-benefit model table, including the various component figures, showing net weekly spending power of a lone parent with children aged one and three years where (a) the parent is on income support, (b) the parent takes employment for 15 hours a week at £4 per hour, with £7·50 per week travel costs and £30 per week child care costs, (c) the parent takes employment for 20 hours a week at £3 an hour, with £10 per week travel costs and £40 per week child care costs and (d) the parent takes employment for 30 hours a week at £3 an hour, with £10 per week travel costs and £40 per week child care costs, assuming that the new child care allowance for lone parents is in operation.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the table. The level of child care and travel costs specified in the question are significantly higher than those typically encountered for lone parents at the level of earnings specified. Recent research[1] shows that the average weekly child care costs of working lone parents are £24·60 a week.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to hs answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 299, if he will provide the names and the organisations represented in the experts convened as a group to consider the details of the proposed objective medical test for incapacity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have asked that panel members respect confidentiality until the exercise is completed. Subsequently, we intend to publish a report containing the membership of the panel, a summary of its work and findings and the results of the evaluation exercise.

The report will be published before regulations are laid.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings to his Department of abolishing age allowances for claimants of incapacity benefit who are over 45 years of age.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 January 1994]: It is estimated that abolishing the age allowances for people receiving the long-term rate of incapacity benefit who become incapacitated aged over 45 will provide net savings of less than £5 million in 1995-96 and around £15 million in 1996-97.

Note: Estimates, expressed in constant 1993-94 prices, are rounded to the nearest £5 million and are net of income-related benefit offsets. The estimates take account of the planned changes to additional pension and adult dependency increases.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings to his Department of abolishing the additional pension with the introduction of incapacity benefit.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 January 1994]: It is estimated that abolishing additional pension for people who start receiving long-term incapacity benfit after April 1995 will produce net savings of around £20 million in 1995-96 and around £130 million in 1996-97.

Note: Estimates, expressed in constant 1993-94 prices, are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are net of offsetting changes in expenditure on age allowances and income-related benefits.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated savings to his Department of delaying payment of a higher rate of incapacity benefit after a year.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 January 1994]: It is estimated that extending the qualifying period for the long-term of incapacity benefit will produce net savings of around £110 million in 1995-96 and around £150 million in 1996-97.

Notes
1. Estimates expressed in constant 1993-94 prices, are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are net of offsetting changes in income-related benefit expenditure.
2. Estimates take account of the effect on incapacity benefit recipients of the planned changes in the qualifying conditions for the disability premium paid with the income-related benefits.

Rugby Union (Benefits)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to examine the charging of national insurance contributions arising from financial and other rewards derived from playing Rugby Union football.

Mr. Hague: If it emerged that players, contrary to the rules of the Rugby Football Union, receive payments for playing, the Contributions Agency would consider whether liability to national insurance contributions arises and, if so, require payment in the normal way.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalidity benefit claimants are aged under 58 years and do not receive the higher rate of the care component of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 January 1994] On 4 April 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 765,000 people under the age of 58 receiving invalidity benefit[1]. Reliable estimates of the number of invalidity benefit claimants not receiving the higher rate care component of disability living allowance are not available.

Note:

[1] Based on 1 per cent. sample of claimants in Great Britain, rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of invalidity benefit claimants have adult dependants, by age of dependant.

War Pension Unit

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how claims being processed by the war pensions unit at Norcross, Blackpool have been affected by asbestos being found in a Ministry of Defence building where records are kept; when he expects the claims will be processed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. George Foulkes, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the effect of asbestos in a Ministry of Defence (MOD) building on claims being processed by the War Pension Unit.

In June 1993, asbestos contaminated dust was discovered at the MOD Records, Hayes. Since that date, the MOD have been unable to provide full service documents for War Pension claims.

In September 1993, contingency plans were introduced which included the MOD going into the contaminated areas to retrieve the relevant documents for particularly urgent claims, such as those from the terminally ill.

The decontamination exercise started on 10 January 1994 and is due to be completed by April 1994. Those claims not covered by the contingency plans will be dealt with as a matter of urgency as the MOD records become available.

I hope my reply has been helpful.

EMPLOYMENT

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in her Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of charges for ministerial cars is determined centrally by the Government car service. In the two financial years since 1990-91, there have been two major price rises which have increased our costs. An additional factor is that from April 1991, car charges were subject to the higher rate of VAT. In the same period, there has been no increase in the number of allocated vehicles.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) manual, (b) non manual, (c) all, (d) male, (e) female, (f) full and (g) part-time workers on adult rates earn less than £2·40, £2·60, £2·80, £3·00, £3·20, £3·40, £3·60, £3·80, £4·00, £4·40, £4·80, £5·20, £5·60 and £6 per hour, including and excluding overtime, in Yorkshire and Humberside, West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, Humberside, the north and Great Britain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested for 1975, 1984 and 1993 can be found in part E of the new earnings survey for each of those years. Details of average weekly earnings and of the overtime component together with average hourly earnings excluding overtime are published in tables 108 to 113. Details of average hourly earnings including overtime are published in tables 122 and 123.

Consultancies

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of Lewisham's work force were employed in jobs in central London for each year from 1975.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is only available from the special workplace statistics from the census of population. The 1981 census of population shows that 73 per cent. of the economically active residents in the London borough of Lewisham had their workplace within the Inner London boroughs, including Lewisham. Data from the 1991 census of population are not yet available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for six-monthly periods from January 1979 to date how many of the vacancies notified to jobcentres in the United Kingdom were (a) full time and part time and (b) permanent and temporary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 20 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of vacancies notified to Jobcentres since 1979.

The Employment Servcie (ES) collects information for Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom. I enclose tables showing

(a) part time and full time vacancies, and

(b) temporary and permanent vacancies notified to Jobcentres in Great Britain from April 1986.

There are differences in the six monthly periods used to compile the two tables. This is because until March 1992 the data was compiled at the end of alternative quarters.

Prior to 1986 the figures for vacancies notified to Jobcentres were collected manually. To obtain this information would require direct approaches to my local offices. Given the size of the ES network this would incur disproportionate costs.

I hope this is helpful.

(2) what is the latest information on the destinations of youth training trainees in each training and enterprise council area in the north-west, showing the destinations of trainees by ethnic origin, sex and disability.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the results of research carried out by his Department on the attitude of disabled employees and prospective employees on the introduction of employer's contributions under his Department's access to work proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 858.

Careers Services

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the organisations (a) which tendered and (b) which were chosen to provide careers services in each of the pathfinder areas.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on organisations tendering to provide careers services is commercial-in-confidence. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce those organisations with whom he will contract when negotiations are finalised.

Pit Closures

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job losses have occurred in each of the Durham coal mines as a result of (a) closure and (b) proposed closure.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply. British Coal has supplied me with the following information concerning its deep-mines in the Durham area:

PRIME MINISTER

Councils of Ministers

Q5. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has made, in the light of the decisions of the European Councils in Edinburgh 1992 and Brussels 1993, to increase the transparency and accountability of decision making, including the recording of votes of each member state, at meetings of European Community Councils of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We supported the Council decision of 6 December on the publication of Council votes; and we shall routinely provide to Parliament all consequent published information, which will be made available in the Library of the House. We have also encouraged the Danish and Belgian presidencies in holding a number of open Council sessions.

Honours List

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what is (a) the number of each honour granted in the new year's honours list and (b) the number of each such honour was awarded to (i) public servants, (ii) civil servants, (iii) officers of the armed forces, (iv) other members of the armed forces and (v) for political services.

The Prime Minister: My honours recommendations for the new year list contained 970 names. The breakdown of awards is as follows:

	Number
Life Peer	2
Privy Counsellor	2
CH	3
Knight	30
GCB	1
KCB	2
CB	14
GCMG	1
CMG	2
DBE	3
CBE	98
OBE	241
MBE	571

Around 180 awards were granted to public servants—people working, for example, in health, education, the police, the fire service, public transport and local government—and 170 awards to state servants, including civil servants. These awards were given for their work as public and civil servants. Some of the awards given for voluntary work may also have gone to public or state servants, but it is not possible to identify these. Forty-nine awards went to individuals either for their political or for their political and public service. Awards to members of the armed forces are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Value Added Tax (Domestic Fuel)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against the imposition of value added tax on domestic fuel.

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations on this subject.

Arms Sales Register

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Prime Minister if he will report what progress he has made in establishing the register of arms sales announced after the European Council meeting on 8 May 1991.

The Prime Minister: I called for a United Nations register of conventional arms transfers at the Luxembourg European Council on 8 April 1991.

The United Nations General Assembly voted on 9 December 1991 to establish such a register, covering seven major weapons systems, with first returns due on 30 April 1993. The United Kingdom submitted its return to the United Nations Secretary-General on 29 April 1993. The return covered arms imports and exports for the calendar year 1992, including background information; a copy was placed in the Library of the House.

The report of the United Nations Secretary-General, published last October, included returns from some 80 countries.

The United Kingdom will seek to build on this successful start to the initiative to improve its effectiveness; we will be represented on a United Nations panel of experts shortly to discuss the operation and expansion of the register.

Mr. Frank Machon

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what record his Office has of telephone conversations held between his predecessor and Mr. Frank Machon of Glasgow in (a) October 1988, (b) February 1989 and (c) March 1989.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to him on 18 January 1994, Official Report, column 456.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 20 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what medical evidence he has received from the doctor accompanying the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) on his recent visit to Iraq, from Harvard medical school, and from the hon. Members for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) and for Linlithgow; and if he will reconsider his policy on United Nations sanctions against Iraq.

The Prime Minister: We have received various reports about the health conditions in Iraq and are aware that they continue to deteriorate. No medical evidence was passed to us by the doctor accompanying the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) on his recent visit to Iraq.

Medical supplies have never been subject to sanctions. Our quarrel is not with the people of Iraq but with Saddam's regime.

The Security Council again concluded on 18 January that there were no grounds for lifting sanctions against Iraq.

British-Irish Inter-Parliamentary Body

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister what public funds are currently made available (a) through the Inter-Parliamentary Union, and (b) through other channels to finance the British-Irish Inter-Parliamentary Body; what has been the level of such fundings in each of the years since it commenced; what is the purpose of those funds; what information he has relating to the expenditure by that body upon travel, hotel accommodation and refreshments in each of those years; by whom that expenditure was incurred; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 January 1994]: The British-Irish Inter-Parliamentary Body is funded jointly by the British Government, through a grant in aid from Her Majesty's Treasury administered by the British group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, and by the Irish Government's Department of Foreign Affairs. The body was established in 1990 to provide a forum for British and Irish parliamentarians to discuss Anglo-Irish relations. Twenty-five Members of Parliament and 25 members of the Oireachtas belong.

Two plenary conferences are held each year, one in the United Kingdom and one in Ireland. There is a steering committee and four separate committees tasked to study and prepare reports on a range of issues including political, economic, social, cultural, educational and environmental matters. Since 1990 British Government expenditure has been as follows:

1989-90
Total expenditure	45,757
Accommodation	7,006
Travel/transport	1,442
Refreshments	8,489
1990-91
Total expenditure	64,998
Accommodation	639
Travel/transport	10,826
Refreshments	2,539
1991-92
Total expenditure	98,310
Accommodation	16,150
Travel/transport	23,280
Refreshments	11,214
1992-93
Total expenditure	78,352
Accommodation	9,616
Travel/transport	13,798
Refreshments	4,814

1993-94

Final expenditure figures for the year are not yet available but are forecast to fall within the budget.

Correspondence

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letter of 18 January 1993 from the hon. Member for North Cornwall on the subject of compensation for Gulf war widows; and if he will give reasons for the delay.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 January 1994]: As the hon. Member knows, he has received replies from my principal private secretary and from me. I am aware, however, that a decision is awaited on the matter at issue and I hope that conclusions can be reached shortly.

DEFENCE

Land Mines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many land mines were exported to the former Yugoslavia from 1975 to the imposition of the trade embargo; and what information he has as to their deployment.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any exports of land mines to the former Yugoslavia.

Defence Organisations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the benefits to the United Kingdom of continued membership of (a) NATO, (b) the Western European Union and (c) politico-military co-operation within the European Union; and what is the annual cost of United Kingdom participation in each defence organisation.

Mr. Hanley: This Government are committed to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation—NATO—which remains essential to peace and stability in Europe, and is the principal guarantor of our security. We also support the development of a European security and defence identity compatible with NATO, and will therefore continue to play a full part in developing the Western European Union—WEU—as a means of strengthening the European pillar of NATO and as the defence component of the European Union. As a member of the European Union, the United Kingdom will participate in the development of a common foreign and security policy—CFSP. Under the terms of the treaty on European Union, issues with defence implications are for the WEU to elaborate and implement. Decisions in this area must be compatible with the security and defence policies of NATO.

As to the annual costs, I will write to the hon. Member.

Ukraine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding the total quantity of military grade fissile materials in the Ukraine; and what are the comparable data for the United Kingdom stockpile.

Mr. Aitken: We do not believe that weapon-grade fissile material is held in Ukraine other than that embodied in former Soviet nuclear warheads still on Ukrainian territory. It would not be in the national interest to make public details of the amount of weapon-grade fissile material held by the United Kingdom. We do not hold significant stocks of fissile material which is not required for our operational stockpile of weapons.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many different types of land mine are manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Defence Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters he has received from members of the public on the export of arms, military and dual-use equipment to Iraq and Iran since November 1990; and what has been the average length of time taken to respond to the inquiries.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions to him for (a) ordinary written answer and (b) priority written answer have been answered within one working day since October 1993.

Mr. Hanley: From 18 October 1993 to 13 January this year, 49 questions for ordinary written answer have been answered within one working day of the day on which they are tabled for answer. Within the same time scale, 306 questions for priority written answer or for answer on named days have been answered within one working day.

Elipton Super-weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the capability and technical nature of the Elipton super-weapon developed by Russia.

Mr. Hanley: I have no information other than comments attributed to Vladimir Zhirionvsky.

Naval Support Command

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the planned new build for the Naval Support Command HQ will go ahead.

Mr. Hanley: A number of options remain under consideration for the long term accommodation of the Naval Support Command headquarters. The decision on the way forward will be taken in the light of the outcome of the defence costs study currently in hand.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider the geography of the Naval Support Command with a view to making greater use of existing sites.

Mr. Hanley: Studies have shown that the integration of functions which are presently geographically dispersed into the Naval Support Command headquarters will produce significant operational and financial benefits. The business case for this change remains robust, and I see no reason to reconsider it. Options for housing the collocated headquarters in the Bath area include making use of existing MOD sites.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the new premises for the Procurement Executive are to go ahead.

Mr. Aitken: Contracts for the site infrastructure and main construction of the Procurement Executive's new headquarters at Abbey Wood have been placed, and work is proceeding to time and cost. On current assumptions, occupation of the new facilities will begin in the autumn of 1995 and will be completed a year later.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times he and his predecessors have attended the annual general meeting of International Military Services Ltd. since 1984; on how many occasions he was represented by others; and on how many occasions he was neither present nor represented.

Mr. Aitken: Since 1984 the Secretary of State for Defence has been represented at each annual general meeting of International Military Services Ltd.

Landing Platform Helicopter

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when negotiations on contract specifications for the landing platform helicopter contract awarded in 1993 began; how many proposed specification changes have so far been requested; and how many of these changes were asked for by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Post contract award discussions with VSEL have begun. As the design progresses, it is normal for a number of changes to the detail of the specification to be discussed. So far two minor changes have been agreed, one of which was requested by my Department.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the originally agreed pre-production milestones on the landing platform helicopter contract awarded in 1993 have so far been achieved.

Mr. Aitken: All scheduled milestones required by the contract to date have been achieved on time.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what request has been made to change the pre-production milestones on the landing platform helicopter contract awarded in 1992.

Mr. Aitken: No such request has been made.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make arrangements for the Data Protection Registrar to inspect relevant contracts with suppliers of IT services that involve the use of personal data held by his Department in order to check whether all appropriate arrangements in relation to the Data Protection Act 1984 have been made, and whether such contracts make provisions for the registrar to make random inspections in order to check the suppliers' compliance in with the eighth data protection principle.

Mr. Aitken: The Data Protection Registrar has a wide range of powers, under the Data Protection Act 1984, to ensure that all individuals and organisations holding personal data on computer systems are registered and observe the data protection principles as required by the Act. When IT services are contracted out by a data user, the contractor and the user will be subject to the application of the data protection principles, and the registrar's powers to ensure compliance with them, as provided for in the Act. It is for the registrar to decide how he will use his powers under the Act, and I do not consider that further arrangements are necessary for him to discharge his duties effectively.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to a fall in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Hanley: The reduction of £25,000 in the cost of providing ministerial cars since 1990-91 is due essentially to the number of Ministers in the Department falling from five to four since 1990-91, resulting in a cost saving of £11,000, and the return to normal usage following heightened ministerial requirements during the Gulf conflict, which accounts for a reduction of £14,000.

Armies

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, in order of strength, the 10 countries understood to have the largest armed forces.

Mr. Hanley: It is not the Government's practice to publish their assessments of the strengths of the armed forces of other states. The principal public source of such information is "The Military Balance", issued annually by the International Institute for Strategic Studies and widely regarded as authoritative.

NATO

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed formula for financial contributions to the NATO organisation by countries acting in partnership.

Mr. Hanley: Assuming the hon. Member is referring to NATO's partnership for peace initiative, we expect the costs of the programme to be shared between allies and those states who chose to participate on terms which are being developed.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations in the United Kingdom low flying system where low flying regulations require aircrew to make radio contact with air traffic control at a civilian airfield prior to or during transit of a specified area; and which civil airfields possess UHF radio facilities for this purpose.

Mr. Hanley: The low flying regulations require military aircrews to contact the following civilian airfields prior to or during transit of specified areas within the United Kingdom low flying system: Aberdeen, Dunsfold, Farnborough and Keevil. All these airfields possess UHF radio facilities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date United States Air Force units stationed in the United Kingdom ceased using fixed low flying routes.

Mr. Hanley: United States Air Force units based in the United Kingdom continue to make limited use of fixed low flying routes. In accordance with the United Kingdom low flying regulations, such routes are replaced at regular intervals.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what level of command assessments are made of the minimum amounts of low flying required to acquire and maintain the necessary skills; what criteria are used in these assessments; and if he will make a statement on the current specified minimum requirement for low flying training in the continuation training syllabuses for (a) the Tornado GR1 and (b) the Tornado F3.

Mr. Hanley: Assessments of the minimum amounts of low flying required to acquire and maintain the necessary skills are made by Service Command and Group Headquarters. The criteria used in such assessments include variations in average aircrew ability and experience, the type of aircraft, its role and projected changes in its role. The current minimum requirement for low flying continuation training for all military aircraft, including the Tornado GR1 and Tornado F3, is based on the experience of specialist air staffs taking these factors into account.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the Hawk aircraft was first authorised for flight in the United Kingdom low flying system at less than 250 ft; what is the current minimum authorised altitude for this aircraft type in the Royal Air Force; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the operational requirement for flying at less than 250 ft by Royal Air Force Hawks.

Mr. Hanley: Hawk aircraft have not been authorised to fly at less than 250 ft ins the United Kingdom low flying system. The current minimum authorised altitude for the aircraft is 100 ft above ground level, but this is reserved for the synchronised pair of the Royal Air Force aerobatic team and would be flown only within an airfield traffic zone or temporary restricted airspace. An operational requirement exists for Hawk aircraft to fly at less than 250 ft within designated air weapons ranges, but this does not extend to the United Kingdom low flying system.

RAF Warfare Strategy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library an unclassified version of the Cosgrove report on the Royal Air Force's air warfare strategy.

Mr. Hanley: The report is classified for internal management use and an unclassified version could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Royal Air Force tactical air warfare doctrine follows the procedures laid down in allied tactical publications 27B, 33 and 42.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom subscribes to the procedures in allied tactical publications—ATP—27B, 33 and 42 and this is reflected in the Royal Air Force's tactical doctrine and training.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent changes have been made in provision for the study of, and training in, air warfare doctrine in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Hanley: As a result of experience gained during the Gulf conflict the air warfare centre—AWC—was formed on 1 October 1993. The AWC draws together several existing organisations to provide the focus for all RAF air warfare matters including the study of and training in air warfare doctrine.

Tornado Aircrew

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the secondary roles in which Tornado GR1B aircrew will be required to maintain currency.

Mr. Hanley: The Tornado GR1B squadrons will be declared to NATO in both the martime attack and overland strike/attack roles and as such aircrew will be required to maintain currency in all these roles.

Air Weaponry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of air weaponry approved for release on each of the air-to-ground weapons ranges in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Range and Types of Weaponry Approved for Release

Castle Martin
Guided Missiles and Guns

Cowden
Practice bombs and Inert bombs

Donna Nook
Guns, Rockets, Practice bombs and Inert bombs

Aircrew Pay Enhancements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what pay enhancements are granted to aircrew operating in areas of actual or potential combat operations.

Mr. Hanley: United Kingdom service personnel are not paid danger money. However, the Xfactor which they receive throughout their careers irrespective of where they are stationed, which is currently 11·5 per cent. of basic salary, contains an element which recognises the need for them to serve on occasions under difficult and dangerous circumstances.

Military Air Traffic Zones

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to altering the size and shape of military air traffic zones around military airfields; and what criteria are being used in any such assessment.

Mr. Hanley: The national air traffic service—NATS—has in hand a review to assess whether changes to the existing shape of military air traffic zones—MATZs—would enable more efficient use to be made of the available airspace. The criterion being applied is that the current volume of MATZ airspace should not increase, and where possible should decrease.

Any changes resulting from the review would be promulgated in the United Kingdom "Aeronautical Information Publication" and published in an aeronautical information circular.

RAF Depots

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects a final decision will be announced following the end of the consultation period on the recommendations of the equipment support depot report into RAF depots.

Mr. Hanley: A final decision on the recommendations of the equipment support depot study will be made as soon as possible after the end of the consultation period on 18 March 1994, having given proper consideration to all representations received.

Redundancies

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many redundancies are planned in the armed services in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996.

Mr. Hanley: We anticipate that in the financial year 1993-94, 8,482 service personnel and in the financial year 1994-95, 4,639 naval and Air Force personnel will leave on redundancy terms. The number of Army personnel to leave on redundancy terms in the financial year 1994-95 has not yet been determined. There are currently no plans for redundancies in the financial year 1995-96.

Departmental Properties, Huntingdon

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Ministry's properties there are in the Huntingdon constituency area; and how many are empty.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 December 1993, there were 1,508 service married quarters in the Huntingdon constituency area, of which 51 were vacant. Of these, 30 were awaiting major maintenance work and three were allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, there were 26 properties which were formerly married quarters but are now used as single accommodation, storage and welfare facilities. Of these, five were vacant as they were uninhabitable.

Helicopter Noise Insulation Scheme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will give details of the results of the review of the helicopter noise insulation scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence noise insulation grant scheme has now been extended at the helicopter landing sites as Bessbrook, Forkhill and Crossmaglen. Details of the scheme have been passed to the Newry and Mourne district council. A meeting is being arranged with the council when a detailed explanation of the scheme will be given. All householders concerned will be notified about the scheme and how to apply for a grant.

Loch Long

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will estimate when local fishermen, including members of the Clyde fishermen's association, will be allowed to fish Loch Long, using demersal gear; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions have taken place concerning the removal of debris from the floor of Loch Long; in what proportions the costs will be shared between Her Majesty's Government and the USA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Annual licences issued by the Queen's harbour master—QHM—Clyde currently permit fishing within Loch Long, including the use of demersal gear.

The hon. Member may have in mind Holy Loch. With effect from July 1993, fishing is now aslo permitted within Holy Loch. We have, however, recently become aware that there is some debris, essentially scrap metal, on the bed of Holy Loch which could pose a hazard to fishing gear. As a precaution, the QHM has issued a local warning notice identifying the area we suspect to be fouled.

We are pursuing this issue as a matter of urgency. If it appears that the debris is related to the erstwhile presence of the United States Navy we shall of course discuss the issue with the appropriate US authorities.

Bullying

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent guidelines concerning the elimination of bullying and intimidation of young recruits and others have been issued to commanding officers in all three services; if he will place a copy of the guidelines in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It has been made clear throughout the three services that bullying and other ill-treatment will not be tolerated. In October 1993, the Adjutant General issued the Army's discipline and standards paper which set out the standards of behaviour expected from members of the Army. A copy of the paper will be placed in the Library of the House; paragraphs 24 to 26 address the issue of bullying and initiation ceremonies.

No similar guidelines have recently been issued to commanding officers in the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. However, current standing orders of the Royal Air Force expressly forbid any form of bullying or participation in initiation ceremonies.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force have been tried and convicted at courts martial for the offence of bullying in each of the past five years; how many were (i) officers, (ii) non-commissioned officers and (iii) other ranks; what was the range of penalties imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Disposal of Land

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the terms upon which his Department disposes of land it no longer requires.

Mr. Hanley: It is our normal practice to dispose of the freehold of surplus land in which there is no former owner or pre-emptive interest on the open market by competitive tender with the most favourable planning permission achievable, so as to maximise the return to the taxpayer. A range of other methods may be used if professional advice indicates that such alternatives would produce better value.

Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what current arrangements exist to train service personel in the history and politics of the former Yugoslavia; what plans he has to increase the amount of training in these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Units warned for duty in the former Yugoslavia receive comprehensive briefing, which includes the history, geography, ethnic make-up and political and socio-economic development of the region. In addition, units undergo a special UN training programme, which includes information on the region and its peoples. Individuals nominated as UN military observers undergo extra training to prepare them for their specialist role. I am satisfied that these arrangements meet current needs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many liaison officers with training in Serbo-Croat are currently attached to 1 Battalion, Coldstream Guards.

Mr. Hanley: There are 16 civilian and seven military liaison officers trained in Serbo-Croat currently attached to 1 Battalion, Coldstream Guards.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what current arrangements exist to train service personnel in Serbo-Croat; what plans he has to increase the amount of training in Serbo-Croat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The present arrangements include six-month courses for military interpreters at the Defence School of Languages, basic "language survival" courses as part of pre-deployment training, the issue of word lists, and low-level training for all personnel in theatre. These arrangements meet the current operational requirements of the three services and there is no reason for an increase in training. If, however, the requirements change then additional training in Serbo-Croat would need to be addressed.

Military Exercises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military exercises involving the operational use of both HMS Intrepid and HMS Fearless have been held in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: As HMS Intrepid and HMS Fearless have alternated between being fully operational, and being refitted or held in a state of extended readiness, there have been no exercises, in the time period specified, in which both ships have participated.

Defence Research Agency

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken in the last two years to improve the formal quality and project management of the Defence Research Agency and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Chisholm to Dr. David Clark, dated 20 January 1994:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question about formal quality and project management improvements in the Defence Research Agency.

When the Agency was set up in April 1991 it had no formal customer/supplier relationship and no requirement for formal quality certification. It became clear from the results of the satisfaction surveys we carried out that our customers' perceived our ability to manage their programmes and our lack of formal quality certification as a weakness. We decided that if the DRA was to survive as a trading organisation in a competitive environment what was needed was a strong quality culture within the DRA and a major reorientation in our work practices so that customer care and management of customer programmes became key drivers. I will deal with the quality initiative first.

The key to effective change is establishing the mechanisms that empower people at all levels in the organisation to contribute to improving effectiveness and efficiency. The Total Quality Process initiative we instituted in 1992 is the vehicle that allows this to happen. This initiative is not just about achieving formal quality standards such as BS 5750 though these are important to our customers; it is about identifying, developing and implementing the simplest and most cost effective ways of carrying out our business. The DRA has made a promising start and our goal is to establish TQP throughout the organisation by March 1995 and formal quality BS 5750 certification by December 1996.

The changes we have introduced to the way we manage our research projects are based on the need to respond flexibly and quickly to customer requirements; to put together teams to address particular issues or tasks; and to empower those teams to manage their projects efficiently. A major element in all this is a comprehensive training programme to equip our managers with the necessary commercial and project management skills to do the job effectively; this should be completed by the end of April. We are also looking at the best way of identifying and addressing any weaknesses or problems in the way we manage our projects.

Both these initiatives are unlikely to yield quick results but we believe we have laid the foundations which will provide a lasting improvement in efficiency and effectiveness that will be of considerable benefit and value to our customers.

Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, columns 344-45, if he will give details of the various Heckler and Koch weapons that were built at the royal small arms factory, Enfield, and subsequently sold to Heckler and Koch (UK), listing the number and type of weapons sold in each year between 1970 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not available from official sources.

Performance Review (Indicators)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 349, if he will publish declassified copies of the indicators of military capability and readiness for forces and headquarters that are used as the basis for the quantitative aspect of performance review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Data on military capability and readiness must remain classified, and cannot therefore be published.

Ministry of Defence Flights

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, columns 347-48, how many non-MOD personnel are passengers on any of the weekly scheduled flights to Washington, Belize and Decimomannu; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The number of non-MOD personnel travelling as passengers on the weekly scheduled flights to Washington, Belize and Decimomannu varies in accordance with availability of seats and the demand.

Non-MOD passengers can be grouped into two categories:

(a) Staff employed in support of MOD contracts, and
(b) Staff of other Government Departments.

Figures for the 12 months to October 1993 for return journeys for these two categories are as follows:

	(a) Contractors	(b) OGDs
Between Brize Norton and Washington	125	361
Between Brize Norton and Decimomannu	9	16
Between Brize Norton and Belize	11	32

In addition, MOD personnel and their dependants are entitled to use empty seats on a fill-up standby basis at a nominal administrative cost to the individual. It is not possible to differentiate between MOD personnel and their dependants without disproportionate cost.

Background Briefing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 343, what criteria he used to select the journalists who were given a background briefing on 20 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The criterion for the invitation to journalists to the briefing on the defence costs study was that they should be specialist defence correspondents from national media organisations.

Sea Harrier

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to take to maintain the capability of the Royal Navy's Sea Harrier force.

Mr. Aitken: In order to sustain the Royal Navy's Sea Harrier force well into the future, I am pleased to announce the decision to purchase a total of 18 new FRS2 aircraft and to convert a further five FRS1s to FRS2 under the current mid-life update programme. Contracts for the programme are being placed as satisfactory terms are agreed, under the Department's no acceptable price, no contract—NAPNOC—procedures, in order to secure best value for money. The contract for the 18 new aircraft has now been placed with British Aerospace at a value of some £200 million.

Trident

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The current estimate of the total project cost of the Trident programme is £11,631 million, if all expenditure, including payments already made, is brought up to current prices and a common exchange rate of £1=$1·44, as assumed in the long-term costing of the defence programme. If payments already made are expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred, the equivalent estimate is now £9,937 million. Expenditure on the Trident programme to 31 August 1993 represented some 67 per cent. of the overall estimate.

After allowing for the effects of inflation and exchange rate variations, the revised estimate of £11,631 million represents real cost reduction of £24 million compared to that announced last year. The increase in cash terms is £955 million, primarily as a result of a less beneficial exchange rate. The reduction in real terms since the original 1982 Trident II estimate, including the savings resulting from the decision to have United Kingdom missiles processed in the United States facility at Kings bay, Georgia, now stands at some £3.5 billion.

The proportion of the estimate for work undertaken in the United Kingdom has decreased from 74 per cent. to 70 per cent. reflecting the change in exchange rate.

I am pleased to say that the Trident programme remains on schedule to enter service in the mid-1990s. There has been no slippage in the in-service date since the decision to purchase Trident II was announced in March 1982. I am, as in previous years, sending to the Chairmen of the Public Accounts Committee and the Select Committee on Defence a more detailed report on the programme. I am also placing a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all the representations he has received from other Governments (a) in favour of and (b) opposed to THORP; and if he will indicate whether any intergovernmental correspondence arose in each case.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to the hon. Members for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) and for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on Monday 29 November, Official Report, columns 385-86. In addition, letters have been received from the Governments of Japan and Iceland. All have been notified of the decisions of the Secretary of State and Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concerning discharge authorisations for the Sellafield site, as has the Environment Minsiter of each EC member state and the EC environment commissioner. Correspondence between the United Kingdom and overseas Governments or the EC Commission is treated in confidence.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 449, how many civil servants were involved in the preparation of the United Kingdom submission to the European Commission on article 37 on radioactive waste discharges from THORP; and what was the cost of preparing the document.

Mr. Atkins: A number of civil servants were involved in preparing the "General Data relating to the arrangements for Disposal of Radioactive Wastes" as called for under article 37 of the Euratom treaty. The cost of preparing the document is not readily ascertainable.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the responses to which he refers in his report on BNFL Sellafield further public consultation, published on 15 December, were submitted in a language other than English; and what arrangements were made to translate such submissions.

Mr. Atkins: A few responses in German were received and read. About 1,300 proforma responses were also received from Japan in English as well as in Japanese.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the basis of his statement in paragraph 26 of his decision document on THORP of 15 December, that there are no risk-free options for energy supply; and if he will list the risks for each energy production or conversion technology.

Mr. Atkins It is evident that industrial activities in the energy sector will involve risks, both for workers and the public. These will inevitably arise from such activities as construction and transport and may also arise from the disposal or discharge of wastes or combustion products. There may also be major accident risks, as exemplified by the Aberfan and Piper Alpha disasters.

As regards the hon. Member's request for quantification of the various risks, information is available from a number of published studies. Among these are the Health and Safety Executive's 1992 publication "The Tolerability of Risk from Nuclear Power Stations" and the document "The Safety of Nuclear Power"—safety series no. 75—INSAG—5—published in 1992 by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Market Charters

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names and addresses of those making complaints regarding market charters since 1 January 1993 and give details of the basis of each complaint.

Mr. Baldry: I refer to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning to the hon. Members for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms Short) and for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on Tuesday 18 January. The additional information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the energy expenditure for 1990-91, and for 1992-93, for each Government Department set out as in the first column of table 1 of his answer of 20 October 1993, Official Report, columns 257-58.

Mr. Atkins: Energy expenditure by each Government Department for the periods requested, and also for 1991-92, is shown in the table:

Notes:

1. Figures are actual expenditure: no adjustments have been made for weather correction, fuel price changes or changes to estate size. The Energy Efficiency Office's performance indicators, £ per square metre, takes account of these factors, and Departmental progress towards the Government's estate 15 per cent. energy efficiency target using this indicator was set out in the written answer dated 20 October 1993. Performance against two further indicators, using CO_2 emissions, was also published.
2. Some figures are revisions to those previously published. Equally, 1992-93 figures may be subject to revision.

Government Car Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes have taken place since 1979-80 in the method of recording the cost of the Government car service.

Mr. Baldry: Until 1 April 1989, the Government car service costs were recorded as part of the Crown suppliers trading fund.

On 1 April 1989, the Government car service transferred to the PSA. Since then, costs have been separately recorded as part of the vote and a separate GCS memorandum trading account has been developed. The GCS now produces full commercial-style accruals accounts for management purposes.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to him by my right hon. Friend on Friday 3 December 1993—Official Report, column 759—and on Thursday 16 December 1993—Official Report, column 827—in which he indicated that the cost of cars for Ministers in the DOE was £270,000 in 1990-91 and £265,000 in 1992-93.

There are two main factors which have led to an increase in the cost per car for Ministers in my Department. The first is the effect of inflation on GCS costs, particularly on pay, vehicles and fuel. The second is that, during this period, the GCS restructured its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the Government car service in 1988-89 and 1989-90; how many vehicles were in the fleet; what was the cost of the Government car service in 1980-81; and how many vehicles were in the fleet.

Mr. Baldry: In 1988-89, there were some 187 cars in the GCS fleet. During this year, the GCS was the responsibility of the Crown Suppliers—TCS—and its costs were consolidated into the TCS trading fund. Separate cost information is not readily available.

In 1989-90, there were some 189 cars in the GCS fleet. In this year, the GCS became the responsibility of the Property Services Agency and separate financial records were started for the GCS. The cost of the GCS was approximately £6·7 million.

Comparable information is not available for 1980-81.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pool cars and pool drivers were in the Government car service pool service in 1990-91; and what was the cost of the pool service.

Mr. Baldry: In 1990-91, there were some 28 cars and 24 drivers in the GCS pool. At that time, pool costs were not identified separately from other GCS costs.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes for rent are planned to be provided by the Housing Corporation in each of the next three years.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation's approved development programme provides homes for rent in two ways: new homes for rent provided by the new rental programme; and new lettings freed up through the tenants' incentive scheme and 60 per cent. of the do-it-yourself shared ownership programme which help existing housing association and local authority tenants to become full or partial owner occupiers. The Housing Corporation estimates that in the next three years, its approved development programme will provide homes for rent within the following ranges:

	1994-95	1995-96	1996-97
New homes for rent	37,600 to 46,000	28,700 to 35,100	23,800 to 29,200
Properties freed up by:
Tenant's incentive scheme	6,500 to 7,500	6,500 to 7,500	6,500 to 7,500
Do-it-yourself shared ownership[1]	2,520 to 3,120	4,200 to 4,920	4,500 to 5,220
Total	46,620 to 56,620	39,400 to 47,520	34,800 to 41,920

[1] 60 per cent. of total do-it-yourself shared ownership.

Electric Cars

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department has given to the PSA (Peugeot)/City of Coventry electric car project research into the viability of a pay-as-you-drive electric car hire system.

Mr. Atkins: None.

National House Building Council

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department makes to the National House Building Council.

Sir George Young: The National House Building Council receives no financial support from the Government other than through research contracts let to the NHBC through competitive tender. The NHBC is an independent body, and the Government have no general powers to intervene in its affairs. Officials from my Department sit as observers on the NHBC council and on its standards committee.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the operation of the National House Building Council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In the past two years, the Department of the Environment has received representations concerning the National House Building Council in relation to 37 dwellings.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will conduct a review into the operation of the complaints procedure adopted by the National House Building Council.

Sir George Young: The operation of its complaints procedure is a matter for the National House Building Council.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes are covered by the Buildmark guarantee scheme operated by the National House Building Council in (a) England and (b) Wales.

Sir George Young: At the end of 1993 the total number of homes in England and Wales covered by the Buildmark guarantee scheme operated by the National House Building Council was approximately 1·53 million. Prior to 1986, the figures recorded for numbers of homes covered by the scheme did not differentiate between the member countries of the United Kingdom. It is thus not possible to give separate figures for homes under warranty in England and Wales.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many building firms participate in the Buildmark guarantee scheme operated by the National House Building Council.

Sir George Young: On 31 December 1993 there were 20,832 building firms registered with the NHBC in England and Wales.

Oil Pollution, Bournemouth

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent pollution by oil of Bournemouth's beaches; and what plans he has to investigate responsibility for this.

Mr. Atkins: Oil pollution at the tideline was found on a stretch of beach from Hengistbury head to West cliff. Mudeford harbour beaches were also affected. The local authorities cleared the oil from the beaches and a number of oiled birds were taken away for cleaning. It was not possible to identify the source responsible and no further action is, therefore, planned.

Water Abstraction

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish information on the volume of water abstracted from rivers and boreholes in England and Wales, and the limits in the relevant licences for such abstractions, under section 201 of the Water Industry Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Aggregate figures, by the regions of the National Rivers Authority, are published annually in the digest of environmental protection and water statistics. Under section 204 of the Water Resources Act 1991 it is an offence to disclose, without its consent, information of this kind provided by an individual or business except, inter alia, under arrangements for the publication of information about water undertakers under section 201 of the Water Industry Act 1991. I am considering whether it would be appropriate to make such arrangements.

Empty Homes Task Force

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the homes identified by the task force on empty homes have been sold to private developers;

(2) how many of the homes identified by the task force on empty homes have been made available to local authorities;

(3) how many of the homes identified by the task force on empty homes have been sold to housing associations;

(4) how many former empty homes identified by the task force are now occupied by previously homeless families.

Sir George Young: The task force on Government Departments' empty houses is expected to present its final report to Ministers shortly. I understand that the task force has agreed with the relevant Department's targets for the disposal or occupation of empty residential property. I expect the final report to include details of these targets, and of the number of properties brought back into use, but it is unlikely to identify categories of purchaser or occupier.

Air Quality

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report on air quality undertaken for him by Professor Roy Harrison.

Mr. Atkins: Shortly.

Estate Action

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what effect the transfer to the new single regeneration budget will have on the future funding of estate action schemes currently in operation;

(2) what effect the transfer to the new single regeneration budget will have on the future funding of housing action trusts currently in operation.

Sir George Young: The draft bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget, issued on 14 January, reaffirms that commitments under existing programmes, such as estate action and housing action trusts, for 1994-95 and future years will be met.

Coastal Erosion (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental officials will assist the Isle of Wight's staff to prepare geological reports on the landslips and coastal stability problems on the Isle of Wight and to detail what exceptional grants may be available in view of the serious and extensive nature of the problem.

Mr. Baldry: The hon. Member is aware of my Department's earlier research on landslip potential assessment in part of Ventnor and Luccombe village. This has developed the techniques which I am pleased to see that the local authority have been taking forward in extending that work to other parts of Ventnor. It is for the local authority, rather than my Department, to continue to take that work forward in respect of areas which have not yet been covered in so far as it is necessary to do so.

Any requests which may be made by Isle of Wight local authorities for special financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme in relation to the recent landslides will be considered on their merits. However, there are no other statutory means by which exceptional grants can be made available to assist in the problems now being experienced. The landslips are natural phenomena and grant aid could be considered by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food only if the prime cause were found to be coastal erosion.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider applying the Bellwin rules to the problems facing the Isle of Wight local authorities following the extensive coastal landslips.

Mr. Baldry: No applications have been received from Isle of Wight authorities for assistance under the Bellwin scheme in connection with the recent coastal landslips. Authorities have been informed that they should apply individually to the Department for assistance if they have incurred an undue financial burden as a result of dealing with an emergency. Each application which is received will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his advisers will visit the Isle of Wight to report on the extensive landslips and cliff erosion and to advise the local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: I am asking my officials to report to me on the recent landslips in the Isle of Wight within the next few weeks. I will write to the hon. Member when that report is received. However, I understand that the local authorities concerned have considerable expertise within their engineering departments and that they have also commissioned consulting engineers to advise them.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for the Countryside Commission to send a team to the Isle of Wight to assess the loss of coastal footpaths and beach access and to see what assistance and advice they can give the island's local authorities in time for the Easter holiday visitors.

Mr. Atkins: The Countryside Commission has recently sent a team to the Isle of Wight, in the light of damage caused by the recent severe weather to the islands coastal paths and access to beaches. They discussed with council officials the possibility of assistance and the commission is now considering the council's formal application for grant aid for restoration.

Natural Habitats (Conservation)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the measures he intends to take to implement the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora in the United Kingdom, indicating whether they will be introduced through (a) primary legislation, (b) secondary legislation, (c) planning guidance notes or (d) some other means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government set out their proposals for implementing the EC habitats directive in the consultation paper issued on 4 October 1993, a copy of which is in the Library. Final decisions will be taken when the responses to the consultation have been fully evaluated. We propose that the necessary measures will be introduced by a combination of regulations under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, official guidance notes and public policy statements.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to involve the voluntary nature conservation organisations in the selection of sites to be designated as special areas of conservation under the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is the function of the statutory nature conservation agencies to advise the Government on the selection of sites for inclusion on the United Kingdom's list of candidate SACs. The voluntary nature conservation organisations will be included in the consultation process which will commence before the list is submitted to the Commission.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to restore habitats to be protected under the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora in the United Kingdom to a favourable conservation status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The directive intends the Natura 2000 network as a whole to enable the maintenance or, where appropriate, restoration of the natural habitat types and species listed in annexes I and II to a favourable conservation status. We are engaged in discussions with the Commission and other member states about what is necessary to ensure the network achieves this. The nature conservation agencies are currently engaged in evaluating the information and data they hold to advise the Government on the United Kingdom contribution to the network.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the costs of implementing the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora to (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Until the nature conservation agencies have completed evaluation of the information they hold and drawn up their advice to Government on candidate sites for designation under the directive, it will not be possible to make a meaningful assessment of the costs of implementing the directive.

Westminster and Wandsworth (Housing Strategies)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the housing strategy documents submitted by the City of Westminster and Wandsworth councils to his regional office for each of the past seven years.

Sir George Young: The housing strategy statements submitted by housing authorities to my Department as part of the annual housing investment programmes are placed in the Library as a matter of course. Those for Westminster and Wandsworth for each of the past seven years are already in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the forms HPI, HPI (supplement) and HP2, all revised 4/93, that were completed and submitted by the City of Westminster and Wandsworth councils to his regional office for 15 June 1993, together with the equivalent completed forms, HPI, HPI (supplement) and HP2 for each of the preceding six years.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme forms submitted each year by housing authorities to my Department are, as a matter of course, placed in the Library together with the authorities' housing strategy statements. The HIP forms for Westminster and Wandsworth for each of the past seven years are already in the Library.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals were successful in the last year for which figures are available; what percentage this represents of the total number of appeals and what were the corresponding figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Baldry: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Stephen Crow, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from H. S. Crow to Mr. Robert Hicks, dated 19 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the outcome of planning appeals.

The information is set out below. The latest figures available are for the financial year ended 31 March 1993. Ten years ago this information was only kept by calendar year, I have therefore provided figures covering both 1982 and 1983.

	Planning appeals allowed	Percentage of total planning appeal decisions Per cent.
1992-93	5,979	33·5
1982	4,003	31·0
1983	3,633	32·4

Building Regulations

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce a decision with regard to the extension of part M of the building regulations to new and existing residential property.

Mr. Baldry: At my request, the Building Regulations Advisory Committee is at present examining the desirability and practicability of extending the provisions in part M of the building regulations to new dwellings. I hope to be in a position to make a statement on this before Easter. There are no proposals to extend part M to existing dwellings.

Focsa Services (UK) Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he, or any of his Ministers or officials have had with Focsa Services (UK) Ltd. regarding compliance by councils with the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has had no discussions with Focsa Services (UK) Ltd. regarding compliance by councils with the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total value of compulsory competitive tendering contracts in England and Wales awarded to Focsa Service. (UK) Ltd.; how many jobs this represents; what examination he has undertaken of the financial stability of this company; what representations he has received regarding the contracts awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend does not require local authorities to inform him to whom CCT contracts are awarded, unless such information is requested in connection with his responsibility for investigating potential breaches of the CCT legislation. The Department does not therefore maintain a comprehensive record of either the number or the value of CCT contracts awarded to specific private sector contractors.

It is for local authorities to assess the financial and technical suitability of potential contractors, and then once a contract is awarded, to monitor the performance of contractors. Where a contractor fails to meet the conditions of a contract, an authority may terminate such a contract, but there are no requirements for my right hon. Friend to be informed.

Packaging Industry

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of his Department's expenditure on research and development was spent on the packaging industry for each year since 1980.

Mr. Atkins: My Department does not fund research which might be construed as near market research or in general on particular industries. However, packaging is an important component of the domestic waste stream and my Department sponsors a programme of research in this area, of which one example is the national household waste analysis programme, part of a series of measures designed to improve waste statistics. This project receives additional financial support from the Industry Council for Packaging and the Environment, INCPEN.

Bromley Children's Homes

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his oral statement of 13 January, Official Report, column 350, whether the proposed review of district auditors' conduct will cover the auditor's involvement in the case of the privatisation of children's homes in Bromley.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend is not proposing to review the conduct of any individual audit or auditor; he has no role in such matters. If general lessons about the audit process are drawn to his attention in the light of a specific case, he will consider them when this can be done without prejudice to the case in question.

Council Services (Contractors)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts have been awarded to private contractors for street cleansing or refuse collections in (a) Brighton, (b) the Cotswolds, (c) the Derbyshire dales, (d) Devon, (e) Hinchley and Bosworth, (f) Stockport, (g) Torbay, (h) West Devon and (i) Wychavon; what has been the performance of such contractors; which contracts have been subsequently withdrawn; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend is aware that refuse collection and/or street cleansing contracts have been awarded to private contractors in the following authorities from those listed: Brighton; the Cotswolds; Hinckley; Stockport; Torbay; West Devon; and Wychavon.

Street Cleaning, Stockton

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he or his officials have had with Stockton borough council concerning its street cleaning contract; what was the outcome of those discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend gave Stockton borough council a direction on 27 July 1993, under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988, requiring the authority to retender its street cleaning work by 1 August 1994, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent by 30 April 1994 if it wished to assign the work to the authority's direct service organisation. Correspondence with the authority took place both before and after the direction was given.

Refuse Collection, Stockport

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning problems regarding refuse collection in Stockport; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has received no representations concerning problems regarding refuse collection in Stockport.

Local Government Corruption

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about local government corruption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Last month my right hon. Friend received a copy of the Audit Commission's very useful report "Protecting the Public Purse" which contains valuable guidance on the avoidance and detection of fraud and corruption in local government. I also receive representations from time to time in relation to individual cases which, where appropriate, I refer to the relevant investigating authorities as I have no responsibility for pursuing such cases myself.

Homelessness

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his consultation paper about reforming the homelessness legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have placed in the Library of the House today copies of a consultation paper setting out the Government's proposals to reform the homelessness legislation, to introduce arrangements that ensure fair access to local authority and housing association accommodation for all who need it, to make better use of the private sector, and to encourage local authorities to play a more active role in the prevention of homelessness.

The current homelessness legislation provides an important safety net for families and vulnerable individuals who find themselves at risk of losing their home. But the homelessness legislation also provides those people, once they are accepted as statutorily homeless, with access to a permanent home ahead of others in as great or greater need who are on the housing waiting list. The Government believe that there should be a distinction between providing the necessary assistance for those faced with the prospect of having nowhere to live, and providing access to permanent housing. The tenancy of a council or housing association property is a real asset. We want to ensure that these tenancies go to those with the best claim to them.

We want a fairer system, in which, while retaining essential safeguards, local authorities have the flexibility to allocate the long-term housing under their control to those with the best claim to it. Once a household has been given help in finding suitable short or medium-term accommodation, its claim to permanent housing will be assessed alongside others on the waiting list who may be living in difficult circumstances, but who are not in need of immediate help; we propose to develop a clear framework within which authorities will be able to manage their allocations.

I have also placed in the Library of the House today a newly published research report on the allocation of local authority housing. It shows clearly that those entering council housing through the homelessness route do so more quickly than those relying on the waiting list. Consequently, the homelessness route has become increasingly attractive. The housing of those accepted as statutorily homeless accounts for an ever-increasing proportion of lettings, and in some parts of the country it is now virtually impossible for anyone other than statutorily homeless households to obtain a council or housing association tenancy.

Our proposals will continue to provide for families and vulnerable individuals who are without other suitable accommodation in a crisis; it is not acceptable that such people should have nowhere to live. For some disabled, elderly or mentally ill people, who have no prospect of ever finding accommodation for themselves, a local authority's duty to provide accommodation will be enduring.

An essential element of our strategy for meeting the needs of those who are badly housed is to make the best use of all forms of existing housing stock. This is not confined to local authority and housing association property. There is considerable scope for developing the private rented sector to meet housing needs. Our proposals therefore encourage partnerships between local authorities and private landlords in order to increase access to good quality housing in the private rented sector. We also envisage a more positive role for local authorities in ensuring the provision of housing advice that will help prevent people becoming homeless.

The Government are proposing a fairer and more effective system for meeting the housing needs of those who rely on rented housing, within the resources available. Our proposals would allow local authorities to make better use of the stock at their disposal, and end the unfairness that occurs under present arrangements.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is placing in the Library of the House a consultation paper setting out parallel proposals for Wales. He and I are sending copies of our consultation papers to all hon. Members with English or Welsh constituencies respectively. We both look forward to a constructive public debate on these proposals.

Earth Summit

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be publishing the Government's response to the agreements made at the Earth Summit held in Rio in 1992.

Mr. Gummer: We shall be publishing the sustainable development strategy for the United Kingdom on 25 January. We shall be publishing the United Kingdom's climate change programme, biodiversity action plan and forestry programme on the same day. We shall lay the documents before the House in the normal way.

Commercial Leaseholds

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to the consultation paper on commercial leaseholds; and if he will list the people or organisations concerned.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1993, c. 730.]: I am correcting the information given about the number of responses to my Department's consultation paper on commercial property leases. Some 241 individuals or organisations have responded, while a further 18 respondents have asked that their replies remain confidential. I have placed a revised list in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Forward: Civil Service Catering

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has identified a prospective purchaser for Forward: Civil Service Catering.

Mr. Nelson: A number of offers were received from prospective purchasers on 17 January. I have considered these offers in consultation with KPMG Corporate Finance, the financial advisers to the privatisation, as a result of which detailed negotiations are under way with Sutcliffe Catering Group Ltd., a subsidiary of Granada Group plc, with the intention of reaching final agreement for an early completion of the sale to Sutcliffe of the business of Forward: Civil Service Catering.

Uncollected Tax

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax remained uncollected at the end of each fiscal year since 1978-79; and how much was written off in each of those years.

Mr. Dorrell: The amount of tax remaining uncollected at the end of the fiscal year and the amount of tax written off since 1978-79 are as follows:

The amount of tax uncollected represents the amount of tax which was not collected during each year but which was available to be collected.

Tax Fraud

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many investigations were carried out for tax fraud in each year since 1978-79; and what was the success rate of those investigations.

Mr. Dorrell: Inland Revenue investigations into possible or actual tax fraud, and the percentage of those investigations which resulted in monetary settlements or recoveries of tax, are shown in the table.

Year	Number of investigations	Percentage success rate
1985-86	70,446	92·0
1986-87	67,798	92·0
1987-88	67,752	92·0

1991-92	81,333	91·0
1992-93	75,649	91·0

Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Earnings Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the percentage of gross earnings going in (a) income tax, (b) national insurance contributions, (c) VAT, (d) other indirect taxes and (e) local taxes, of (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple who are both working and (iii) a married couple with two children on (1) 50 per cent., (2) 75 per cent., (3) 100 per cent., (4) 150 per cent., (5) 200 per cent., (6) 500 per cent. and (7) 1,000 per cent. of average earnings in each year since 1978-79 including estimates for 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 19 January 1994 for the latest estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for the years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95. For earlier years I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 15 December 1992, Official Report, columns 120-26; to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 17 December 1991, Official Report, columns 121-24 and on 8 January 1990, Official Report, columns 558-64 and to the information placed in the House of Commons Library as noted in the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 April 1989, Official Report, column 624.

Mortgages

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) of 2 November 1993, Official Report, column 115, to take into account changes in the mortgage rate and further changes to the rate of relief announced in the autumn Budget, giving (a) numbers in receipt of MIRAS, (b) the average amount received and (c) the total cost (i) for 1994-95 and (ii) 1995-96, by income range as defined in the original question.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates based on the conventional assumption that mortgage interest rates remain at their current levels are in the tables.

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury operates no such schemes.

Carbon Dioxide Energy Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will discuss with the European Commission the relationship in fiscal terms of implementation of the carbon dioxide energy tax as proposed by the European Commission White Paper on employment to the yield of VAT on household fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: A Commission proposal for a tax on carbon/energy has been under discussion for some time, and was considered most recently at the ECOFIN Council in December 1993. The Government have made it clear that the United Kingdom does not need a carbon/energy tax to fulfil our obligation on CO_2 emissions under the United Nations convention on climate change, and could not agree to an EC-wide tax as proposed by the Commission.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a regional breakdown of the revenue forgone from relief for private medical insurance premiums in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) of 6 December, Official Report, column 16, regarding the cost of tax relief on private medical insurance, how many people are in receipt of tax relief for private medical insurance in each region.

Mr. Dorrell: No information is available on the regional breakdown of the 350,000 people claiming tax relief on private medical insurance for those aged 60 or more each year since relief was first granted in 1990-91. Similarly, there is no information on the regional breakdown on the cost of the relief.

Mr. Brian Charrington

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances all charges relating to the importation and possession of illegal drugs were withdrawn on 28 January 1993 against Mr. Brian Charrington.

Sir John Cope: Mr. Brian Charrington was arrested after consultation with the police and full consideration of the available evidence by lawyers acting for Customs and Excise. When additional evidence was forthcoming, further legal advice was sought. At this stage, it was concluded that there was no longer a realistic prospect of securing a conviction and the charges were withdrawn.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been convicted of drug offences where evidence was given on behalf of the prosecution by Mr. Brian Charrington.

Sir John Cope: Brian Charrington has never given evidence to support a prosecution by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been convicted of drug offences where assistance in the Customs and Excise investigation and detection was given by Brian Charrington.

Sir John Cope: It is not the policy of Customs and Excise to disclose sources of information. In the circumstances, I can neither confirm nor deny whether Brian Charrington has given assistance to Customs and Excise.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Ministers signed public immunity certificates in relation to Brian Charrington; and if he will make a statement as to the circumstances requiring such immunity.

Sir John Cope: No public immunity certificates have been signed by Ministers in relation to Brian Charrington.

Cocaine Seizure

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were arrested following the interception early in 1992 by Customs and Excise of ingots stored in a warehouse in Stoke on Trent of 95 per cent. pure Colombian cocaine.

Sir John Cope: Twenty-six persons were arrested by Customs and Excise and police during the investigation that followed the discovery of 907 kg of cocaine concealed in a consignment of lead ingots imported from Venezuela.

Mr. Joseph Kasser

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Ministers signed public immunity certificates in relation to the case which led to the conviction of Joseph Kasser at Newcastle Crown court in January; and if he will make a statement as to the circumstances requiring such immunity.

Sir John Cope: No public immunity certificates were signed by Ministers in this case.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gerry Adams

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Prime Minister if a response has yet been made to the letter he received from Mr. Gerry Adams dated 7 January; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I received an unsigned letter on Mr. Adams's headed notepaper, dated 7 January 1994, last week. I have placed in the Library a copy of that letter and of a reply from my private secretary which was sent on 20 January. Mr. Adams seeks to open issues for renegotiation by pointing back to a position which he asserts the Irish Government put forward in June last year.

The joint declaration of 15 December was the result of many months of discussion between the United Kingdom and Irish Governments. It is a fair and balanced statement of constitutional principles and political realities, which safeguard the interests and aspirations of both sides of the community. As the Taoiseach and I have made clear, there can be no question of renegotiation of the joint declaration.

"Back to Basics"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what are the implications of the Government"s "Back to Basics" policy for his office during 1994.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the scope and effectiveness of his "Back to Basics" social policy.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what working definition of "back to basics" he uses; and what he has done in the past three months to implement the policy.

The Prime Minister: "Back to basics" is intended to ensure that Government policies are based firmly on the common sense values of the British people and, in particular, that they encourage individual responsibility. The "back to basics" policy is especially important in such areas as education, law and order, and the provision of public services, but it applies across a range of other Government policies as well.

Paymaster-General

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the Departments to which the Paymaster-General has been attached since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The Departments to which the Paymaster-General has been attached are listed.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what are the procedures which apply in (a) the United Kingdom Parliament and (b) the European Parliament on the ratification of the Uruguay round of the GATT.

The Prime Minister: The Government intend to present a White Paper to Parliament on the results of the Uruguay round later this year. The agreements will also be laid before Parliament, as with other international agreements. The European Community decision approving the results of the round will also be subject to United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny in the usual way. The European Parliament is likely to be consulted, but the procedure used will depend on the treaty provisions which apply.

Habitats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Prime Minister whether he intends that all Secretaries of State should have a duty to comply with the requirements of the European Union directive 92/43 EEC on the conservation of natural habitats of wild fauna and flora; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Secretaries of State will have duties, both general and specific, as appropriate and commensurate with the requirements of the directive.

International Year of the Family

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps the Government are taking to encourage and promote the International Year of the Family.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) on 6 December 1993, Official Report, columns 29-30.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of magistrates in (a) Barnsley, (b) Doncaster, (c) Rotherham, (d) Sheffield, (e) Humberside, (f) North Yorkshire and (g) West Yorkshire.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates in Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham, Sheffield, Humberside, North Yorkshire and West Yorkshire on the latest information available is as follows:

	Conservative	Labour	Liberal Democrats	Independent/ Not known
Barnsley	46	50	15	3
Doncaster	101	62	23	6
Rotherham	46	52	62	38
Sheffield	101	118	52	84
Humberside	153	73	37	49
North Yorkshire	233	62	93	29
West Yorkshire	572	397	220	163

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report". On an individual contract basis, much of the information is commercially confidential.

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of legal aid provided to persons accused of (a) fraud and (b) theft exceeding £100,000 in each year since 1980.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not available in the form requested. It is not possible to identify individual cases involving fraud or theft exceeding £100,000. Information on legal aid expenditure by type of offence is only available for the last six years, and is set out for the more serious cases of theft and fraud prosecuted in the higher courts. It is not possible to break down legal aid expenditure in magistrates courts by type of offence.

	Theft (theft and obtaining by deception) £	Fraud (fraud and forgery) £
1988-89	19,839,017	6,597,099
1989-90	23,660,073	8,021,737
1990-91	26,149,491	13,477,167

Lord of the Manor

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the current statutory rights of holders of the title of lord of the manor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No rights are conferred by statute on any person holding the title of lord of the manor. Although certain pre-existing rights and liabilities were preserved by the Law of Property Act 1922, the nature of those rights and liabilities will depend in each case on the particular customs of the manor in question.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages (London)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average wage of (a) a male and (b) a female working in London for each year from 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is published in tables 110 and 113 of the new earnings survey part E reports for each of the years requested. Copies of these can be found in the Library.

EC Training Programmes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the total budgets of the European Commission's training programmes of (a) CEDEFOP, (b) COMETT, (c) DELTA, (d) EUROTECNET, (e) FORCE, (f) IRIS, (g) PETRA and (h) TEMPUS in each year since their establishment; and what proportion of each was granted to (i) the northern region and (ii) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It would require disproportionate time and cost to collect the information on the total budgets of the various training programmes mentioned in each year since their establishment.

It is not possible to calculate accurately what proportion of those programmes was allocated to the United Kingdom, or to individual regions in the United Kingdom.

Where available for the programmes listed, total budgets for the preceding three years are provided in the table:

Total budget (Million ECU)

Programme name	1991	1992	1993
CEDEFOP	10·350	10·800	12·850
COMETT	41·750	55·100	40·500
DELTA	0·900	0·120	—
EUROTECHNET	2·300	1·250	0·967
FORCE	13·850	17·500	20·300
IRIS	0·500	0·500	—
PETRA	21·100	26·500	30·700

Total funding for the TEMPUS programme in the period 1990 to 1993 was 192 million ecu.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total budget awarded under the European social fund to the European Commission's vocational training initiatives of (a) EUROFORM, (b) HORIZON and (c) NOW in each year since their establishment; and what was the total budget of each awarded to (i) the northern region and (ii) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total budget from the European social fund—ESF—for EUROFORM is £218 million, for HORIZON £211 million and for NOW £109 million. These are global amounts allocated by the European Commission for the period 1991 to 1993.

The allocation in Great Britain for each initiative is £25·5 million for EUROFORM, £20 million for HORIZON and £6·3 million for NOW. The figures given relate to Great Britain. The ESF in Northern Ireland is administered separately by the Department of Economic Development.

The grants awarded to projects in the northern region amount to £920,519 for EUROFORM, £1,119,442 for HORIZON and £697,505 for NOW.

Employment Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 7 December, Official Report, column 212, if he will give a breakdown for the same periods as in that question of the total numbers of temporary and permanent vacancies for each region by industrial classification as employed by his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Margaret Beckett, dated 21 January 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the numbers of vacancies notified from April 1987, broken down by region, industrial classification and whether temporary or permanent.

I am sorry I am unable to supply information in the form requested. Prior to April 1992, information was not collected in a way which fitted in with the sub-divisions which you are interested in. From April 1992 onwards, it has been collected but it is not collated in a way which fits your requirements. I am afraid it could only be provided at a disproportionate cost as a large number of separate returns are involved.

You may like to know that information about the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) of vacancies notified to Jobcentres, covering the period April 1987 to February 1992, is held on the National On-Line Manpower Information System (NOMIS). Information for vacancies in each region by SIC is available, but it cannot be further broken down to distinguish between temporary and permanent vacancies. Information can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons library.

Similar information can be provided by the Employment Service in respect of the period from April 1992 onwards. If you would like to have this please let me know.

I hope this is helpful.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Population Projects

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have for (a) mobilising additional resources and (b) involving new donor agencies in this country and in other member states in the European Union to increase official development assistance on population projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are continuing to encourage the mobilisation of additional resources for population in all appropriate international fora, including the European Community. We are making full use of the preparatory process for the international conference on population and development—taking place in Cairo in September 1994—to encourage greater commitment to population issues.

We are working with the European Commission to increase the support of other member states of the Community for population activities. We would greatly welcome the involvement of more United Kingdom non-governmental organisations in family planning and reproductive health programmes.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have for encouraging other member states in the European Union to start funding family planning and related projects as part of their development and co-operation budgets.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are playing a leading role in pressing for concrete action to result from the 1992 EC resolution on population. Officials participate in regular expert meetings in Brussels to strengthen co-operation among member states and the Commission. We are also helping the Commission to organise a seminar for EC member states and senior Commission officials on 28 February.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in her Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the second paragraph of the reply given on 20 January by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry).

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes she intends to make to the compensation arrangements for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Soames: I am proposing to modity the BSE compensation arrangments from 1 April 1994. At present under the BSE Compensation Order 1990, the amount of compensation paid for an animal which is compulsorily slaughtered because it is suspected of having BSE is subject to a ceiling based on an average market price, calculated each month from actual market prices of commecial grade. Friesian cows and heifers in milk and in calf sold in specified markets. With an increasing proportion of older cattle being slaughtered as BSE suspects, we now need to reflect this in the calculation of the compensation price. I will, therefore, be consulting interested organisations on the proposed new arrangements whereby the price of older cattle being sold for slaughter rather than for breeding would be included in the calculation of the compensation ceiling.

We propose to continue the arrangement whereby in the case of a slaughtered animal not confirmed for BSE the compensation paid would be subject to an enhanced ceiling. The new method of calculation would still result in a compensation price higher than the price the farmer would get for a dairy cow sold for meat so that farmers would not be discouraged from reporting all suspect BSE cases.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Cones Hotline

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many calls have been received by the traffic cones hotline to date; and what action his Department has taken in response to those calls.

Mr. Key: Since its introduction in June 1992 until 15 January 1994, 383 calls registered as formal inquiries have been received by the cones hotline. Inquiries which cannot be answered immediately have been followed up by the regional office responsible for the particular road scheme; and written replies have been sent, or for recent inquiries are in the process of being sent, to each caller. Until recently, other calls received by the hotline have not been recorded, but they are currently running at two to three times the number of formal inquiries about specific road works.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial commitment the Government are prepared to make to the channel tunnel rail link project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are prepared to provide substantial financial support to the channel tunnel rail link. The precise amount required will be determined by the competition for a private sector promoter which was announced on 11 November 1993.

Transport Safety

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations to which his Department sent, and from which it has received responses regarding the consultation paper on a new system for approving safety of railways and trams, together with the addresses of each such organisation.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 January 1994]: My Department issued 59 copies of the consultation paper to transport operators, passenger transport executives, trade unions, and manufacturers and we received 15 responses. In addition, a further 25 inquiries were received leading to nine further representations. It is not our practice to identify those organisations or individuals who respond to consultation exercises.

Noise Regulations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations to which his Department sent, and from which it has received responses, regarding the consultation letter on noise insulation regulations for new railways and other guided systems, together with the addresses of each such organisation.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 January 1994]: My Department issued 42 copies of the consultation paper to transport operators, PTEs, trade unions, the police, magistrates and the medical profession and we received 27 responses. It is not our practice to identify those organisations or individuals who respond to consultation exercises.

Bus Services

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a full list of all organisations to which his Department sent, and from which his Department has received responses, regarding the consultation paper on a bus strategy for London, together with the addresses of each such organisation.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 18 January 1994]: In 1991 my Department issued some 2,500 copies of the consultation paper to: all London Members of Parliament; London local authorities; bus companies; trade unions; organisations representing business, freight transport operators, consumers, motorists, the disabled, public transport users; and individuals. We received 156 responses from organisations, and 49 responses from individuals. The consultation paper indicated that responses would be treated as public unless marked "confidential", and a list of those who had responded was deposited in the Library in July 1991.

RUCATSE Report

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the responses in relation to the current consultation on the report of the RUCATSE—runway capacity in the south-east—working group, will be made public; and whether a summary of the responses will be published.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 January 1994]: The individual responses to the consultation on the report of the RUCATSE working group will not be published by the Government, although it will, of course, be open to respondents to make public their responses if they wish to do so. When the Government make their own response to the consultation, they will make public a summary of the responses received.

Beach Pollution

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps his Department is taking to discover the origin of oil which has recently polluted beaches in Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to discover the exact nature and source of the pollution which has recently affected marine life and beaches at Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire.

Mr. Norris [holding answers 20 January 1994]: A small area of oil pollution measuring 2 ft wide on Amroth beach, Carmarthen bay, was first reported to the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit on 3 January. On 4 January oil pollution in the form of tarry lumps covering four to five miles was reported at Pendine beach and the following day a "slick" two miles long and 4 yd wide was reported on the sea close to Pendine beach. The MPCU arranged for its aerial surveillance aircraft to be diverted to the area. No oil was reported at sea, and no vessels were seen in the area. MPCU has discussed the incident with Dyfed county council, who took action to clean the affected beaches. Despite prompt action to discover the source of the pollution, it has not proved possible to identify the cause.

EDUCATION

Nursery Education

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children aged three and four years were in receipt of nursery education; and what percentage of the total number of children in that age group that constituted (a) in England and Wales and (b) in each education authority in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information about the provision of nursery education in maintained nursery and primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1993 is shown in the table. Similar information for years 1980 to 1992 is published in statistical bulletins, copies of which are available in the Library. National results for January 1979 are shown in statistical bulletin 5/81. Information for each LEA in January 1979 is not readily available. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Parental Ballots

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was (a) the lowest bid and (b) the highest bid from companies invited to tender for the running of parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status;

(2) whether he will list by registered name those companies invited to tender to conduct parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status;

(3) for what period Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. has been contracted to run parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status;

(4) by what tendering process was Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. appointed to conduct parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status;

(5) when he next intends to invite tenders for the running of parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status;

(6) what is the scale of charges made to his Department by Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. for running parental ballots over proposals for schools to move to grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Education Reform Act 1988 gave parents the right to vote on whether their children's school should become grant maintained. The Electoral Reform Society's company, Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd., is the body currently prescribed in regulations to make the necessary arrangements for ballots of parents on the question of whether schools should apply for grant-maintained status. The Electoral Reform Society has had this function since 1988.

Following implementation of the parts of the Education Act 1993 which streamline the arrangements for schools to acquire grant-maintained status, the Department is reviewing details of the balloting arrangements and considering seeking tenders for future contracts for balloting services.

Charging arrangements between the Department and Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the information held by his Department on the typical cost to schools of holding parental ballots on proposals to move to grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: A small survey undertaken by the Department last year indicated that the governing body of an average-sized primary school typically spends approximately £900 and the governors of an average secondary school approximately £1,500 in the process of applying for grant-maintained status. Most of this is spent on providing information for parents, including in meeting the statutory requirement to place a summary statement about proposals to become GM in a local newspaper.

From 1 January 1994, governing bodies of schools in the process of balloting for GM status or preparing statutory proposals may apply to the Department for a grant to help cover the expenses incurred.

Bentley Drive Primary School

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what current financial difficulties prevent a purpose-built block to be built at the Bentley Drive primary school, Walsall to replace the mobile classrooms.

Mr. Forth: Decisions on capital spending at a county school such as this are entirely a matter for the Walsall local education authority.

Teacher Training

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students were recruited to courses of initial teacher training in 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: A survey undertaken by my Department shows that 29,266 students entered courses of initial teacher training in universities and colleges in England this autumn, some 5 per cent. above target. I have placed a copy of the survey report in the Library.

Compared to 1992-93, recruitment to primary ITT courses fell by 5 per cent., to 15,775, and recruitment to secondary courses increased by 5 per cent., to 13,491. These figures reflect the pattern of intake targets for 1993-94 adopted by the Higher Education Funding Council for England—HEFCE—at the request of the Secretary of State.

Of the main secondary shortage subjects, mathematics increased recruitment by 4 per cent. to 1,769, science by 10 per cent. to 2,373 and modern languages by 13 per cent. to 1,542. English, religious education and music also increased recruitment, but technology fell by 7 per cent. to 2,057.

The survey did not cover distance learning PGCE courses at the Open university and ITT courses by consortia of schools and city technology colleges, which are being run for the first time this academic year. These courses are expected to recruit 1,220 and 220 students respectively, including 115 in technology under the CTC trust's smallpiece programme.

Taken together, this means that overall intakes for each of the secondary shortage subjects—mathematics, science, modern languages and technology—are higher this academic year than in 1992-93.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asbestos Pollution

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with Lloyd's about outstanding and impending compensation claims for asbestos pollution from companies; and what assessment he has made of the prospects for compensation claims for mesothelima.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Underwriters at Lloyd's are required to maintain assets estimated to be sufficient to meet all liabilities arising from valid claims that may arise from current and past policies. In accordance with the Insurance Companies Act 1982, the adequacy of these reserves is certified annually by auditors, in accordance with rules approved by the Secretary of State. This process was successfully completed last summer for the year ended December 1992. The basis of reserving is reviewed annually, and it has recently been approved for the accounts to be submitted later this year.

ENVIRONMENT

Tenant Incentive Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many tenant incentive schemes grants have gone to people moving to homes overseas;

(2) if he will list by country to which they moved the number of tenant incentive grant schemes going to tenants who have bought properties overseas.

Sir George Young: The information requested, based on returns to the Housing Corporation, for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to 17 January 1994 is as follows:

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who are the members currently appointed to the Royal Commission on environmental pollution.

Mr. Atkins: Current members of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution are:

Sir John Houghton—Chairman
Sir Geoffrey Allen
Professor Henry Charnock
Professor Dame Barbara E. Clayton
Mr. Henry R. Fell

Government Offices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of Government office accommodation in (a) the SW1 postage district of London and (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom is now vacant; and what is the estimated annual net cost of these vacancies.

Mr. Baldry: Office accommodation for general government use is managed on the common user estate. Including properties undergoing refurbishment, 5·8 per cent. is vacant in SW1 at an estimated cost in 1993-94 of £4·9 million. In the remainder of the United Kingdom, 9·6 per cent. is vacant at an estimated cost in 1993-94 of £51· 9 million.

National House Building Council

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the interest of consumers is being met by the National House Building Council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for the council itself, which is an independent body. A number of consumer interest groups are represented on both the council and its standards committee and are therefore able to influence the standards set.

Estate Action

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the estate action schemes currently in operation which have projected spend estimates beyond 1995-96.

Sir George Young: Of the estate action schemes given full approval on or before 4 January 1994, the following have projected spend estimates beyond 1995-96:

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those tenants and residents associations which received grant to develop a tenant management organisation in 1992-93, showing for each (a) the value of the grant in 1992-93, (b) the aggregate value of any previous grants and the years in which they have been paid, (c) the value of any grant paid in 1993-94, (d) the local authority, (e) what organisations are advising the association, (f) what progress has been made towards the successful establishment of a tenant manager co-operative or estate management board and (g) when the activity was first brought to the Department's attention.

Sir George Young: The ombudsman service for housing association tenants became operational in November 1993. The operating budget is as follows:

[1] In 1993-94, there was an additional sum of £24,000 to set up premises.

The total staffing complement available to the ombudsman service is seven.

Council Tenants

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to introduce to make it easier for local authorities to take action against council tenants displaying anti-social behaviour.

Sir George Young: Local authorities currently have a range of measures at their disposal to tackle anti-social behaviour. We have asked the local authority associations to let us know how their members are dealing with this problem and whether they think that there are any constraints on their ability to do the job effectively. We shall review the position in the light of the associations' response.

Pennine Bridleway

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision regarding the Pennine bridleway national trail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Countryside Commission published its supplementary report to the Secretary of State on 1 July 1993, outlining revised proposals for the bridleway. I am presently considering the matter and I expect to announce my decision shortly.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those district councils whose provisional increase in their standard spending assessment between 1993-94 and 1994-95 is greater than 10 per cent.

Mr. Baldry: Those authorities with a provisional increase in their standard spending assessments of more than 10 per cent. in 1994-95 are listed in descending order.

Housing (Westminster)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for council house voids, as a percentage of its total housing stock, submitted to his Department by Westminster city council for each year since 1985.

Sir George Young: The percentage of their own dwellings that Westminster city council reported on its annual housing investment programme—HIP1—returns as vacant at 1 April in the years 1985 to 1993 were as follows:

	Per cent.
1985	3·6
1986	3·2
1987	2·8
1988	4·0
1989	5·6
1990	3·4
1991	2·9
1992	1·8
1993	2·0

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, with appropriate dates, the chief housing officers and the housing committee chairmen who have served on the City of Westminster council since 1 April 1985.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for Westminster city council.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the amount of capital receipts spent by local authorities since the relaxation of rules concerning such receipts (a) in total and (b) in each local authority.

Mr. Baldry: Under the temporary relaxation in the rules, local authorities can spend 100 per cent. of virtually all capital receipts received during the period from 13 November 1992 to 31 December 1993. The receipts can be spent at any time. The information which authorities provide to my Department on the spending of their usable capital receipts relates to financial years; I am arranging for their latest returns to be placed in the Library of the House. On the basis of these returns, authorities provisionally estimated spending of usable capital receipts of about £1 billion in 1992-93 and are forecasting spending of £1·8 billion in 1993-94. It is not possible for my Department to estimate the proportion of these totals relating to receipts received during the relaxation of the rules.

Right-to-Buy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority-owned houses and flats have been sold since the introduction of right to buy in each housing authority in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: A table showing the available information on total right-to-buy sales for each English local authority for every financial year since 1980 and a cumulative total to September 1993 was recently placed in the Library. In addition, the table also gives data on total sales and on the number of flats sold.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to the Secretary of State for Wales.

Council House Sales

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which councils are currently implementing a designated council house sales policy of the type described by the district auditor in his report on Westminster city council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Department does not collect information on voluntary sales undertaken by local authorities in a way which would permit the identification of policies of the type mentioned.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish consultation drafts of the statutory instruments which will implement the compulsory competitive tendering of housing management for consultation.

Sir George Young: On 26 November, I announced—Official Report, columns 264-65—how the Department proposed to proceed with the implementation of compulsory competitive tendering of housing management. My announcement followed detailed consultation with local authorities and their representatives. I am today publishing drafts of the orders and regulations which will put these proposals into effect.

I am also publishing today draft guidance for local authorities designed to avoid anti-competitive behaviour. The guidance seeks to ensure that authorities can continue to deliver comprehensive and estate-based housing services and at the same time ensure that there is free and fair competition for their delivery. The wide-ranging guidance is designed to balance the needs of housing authorities and contractors, and to safeguard the interests of tenants.

Copies of all these documents are being sent to each local housing authority in England. Local authorities and others have until 4 March to let the Department have their views on these documents. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what advice he proposes to give local authorities on the handling of issues related to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 in relation to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Baldry: Today my Department has written to all local authority chief executives enclosing an issues paper on the handling of TUPE issues in relation to compulsory competitive tendering. This follows consultation with representatives of the local authority associations and industries engaged in CCT contracting.

The paper covers, among other matters, the approach which authorities should adopt in relation to: requests for indemnities; the provision of information to contractors about workforce matters; delay to the CCT timetable; the treatment of tenders where there is a disagreement on the applicability of TUPE; and the evaluation of tenders.

The paper also indicated that Department of the Environment circular 10/93 will be amended to provide that local authorities may give a preliminary view of the likelihood of TUPE applying to a contract.

The paper deals with matters of the handling of TUPE-related issues. As regards the substantive issue of whether or not TUPE applies to a particular contract, the position remains that this depends on the detailed facts of each case, as set out in the guidance which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster issued on 11 March last year.

I have today placed a copy of the letter to chief executives and the paper in the Library.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has decided to issue the paper to local authorities in Wales. The Welsh Office has today written to all local authority chief executives in Wales enclosing the paper and indicating that Welsh Office circular 40/93 will be amended in line with DOE circular 10/93.

The Government's view on pension rights in relation to TUPE and market testing of services is set out in "The Government's Guide to Market Testing" published by the Office of Public Services and Science efficiency unit in July 1993, paragraph 5.18. In my discussions, a number of industry organisations have commented on the matter of pensions rights in relation to CCT. I am considering these comments and I will issue further advice on this matter as appropriate.

Flagship Business Park, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he has used to choose the site of the Flagship business park in Nottinghamshire outlined in "Prospects for Coal"; when he will announce this site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 January 1994]: Following the announcement of the intention to establish a Flagship business park in the Nottingham area by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 25 March 1993, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Local Government announced on Tuesday 18 January 1994 that four sites have been selected in the east midlands for designation as enterprise zones. This is subject to the agreement of the European Commission.

The sites have been chosen in areas where the work force has been directly affected by colliery closures, having regard to the need to strike a balance between those sites likely to attract development and generate jobs quickly and those which will make a significant contribution to the reclamation and regeneration of the area.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will report on his consultations with the Sports Council GB following his statement of 9 July 1993, Official Report, column 599; and on what date he expects to announce his fresh proposals.

Mr. Brooke: Discussions with the Sports Council and other interested parties are continuing. I expect to announce fresh proposals for reorganisation around Easter.

Commonwealth Games 2002

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration and representations his Department has undertaken regarding the impact of a common visa list with other EC states on the Commonwealth games in 2002 in either Sheffield, London and Manchester; and if he will make a statement before the venue is announced.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

None. It is too early to say what visa requirements will be in place in 2002.

WALES

Grant-maintained Schools Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance he has granted to the Welsh grant-maintained schools centre in High Wycombe with respect to its activities in granted to the centre; what assistance in kind has been granted to the centre; what proposals he has for further grant in aid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The grant-maintained schools centre at High Wycombe provides a service for schools in both England and Wales. For the current financial year, the Department has offered a grant of up to £40,000 in respect of advice the centre offers to schools in Wales both prior to and after their incorporation as grant-maintained schools. In addition, the GMSC has been involved in the arrangement of three conferences on grant-maintained status. Details of the costs have yet to be finalised. No assistance in kind has been granted to the GMSC.

No decisions have been taken concerning future levels of Government funding.

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members of the independent panel of professional advisers who advise on urban investment grants applications above £250,000.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The membership of the urban investment grant appraisal panel is detailed in the publication "Public Bodies: Appointments made by the Secretary of State for Wales".

A copy of this publication has been placed in the Library of the House.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of NHS ambulance trusts about early retirement entitlement for ambulance drivers, control room staff and management aged over 55 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. My right hon. Friend is considering what arrangements might be introduced to facilitate the early retirement of long-serving ambulance staff in Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the rationalisation of the ambulance service in Wales; and what representations he has received on proposed alterations affecting boundaries, numbers of control rooms and senior management personnel required to maximise efficiency in the service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Proposals for the rationalisation of ambulance services in Wales are provided by the services themselves through applications for NHS trust status. Each application is subject to three months' public consultation and the representations received cover a variety of issues relating to the specific proposals for trust status. Every representation is taken into account, alongside the individual merits of the application, before a decision is made on whether to establish a trust.

Applications have been approved in respect of the South and East Wales ambulance NHS trust, which became operational on 1 April 1993 covering services provided in Gwent, Powys and South Glamorgan, and the North Wales ambulance NHS trust which will become fully operational on 1 April 1994 covering services provided in Clwyd and Gwynedd.

In addition, a joint application from East Dyfed and West Glamorgan ambulance services to form the West Wales ambulance NHS trust has been deferred with an invitation to re-present proposals to obtain trust status from 1 April 1995.

Copies of the NHS trust applications have been placed in the Library of the House.

One-Stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the setting up of one-stop shops for enterprise support in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answers of 16 December 1993, Official Report, columns 854-55, and 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 102.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Animal Health Programme

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to get financial assistance from the EC veterinary fund to assist in his animal health programme.

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland sumbitted on application in 1991 for assistance from the EC veterinary fund in respect of expenditure on animal disease eradication. The application was unsuccessful due to the fund being heavily oversubscribed and this was also the position in 1992 and 1993 when the application was carried forward. The Department's bid remains active for 1994.

Badgers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by county the number of badgers shot and gassed in each year since 1988; and what percentage of those badgers were subsequently shown to have tuberculosis.

Mr. Ancram: In Northern Ireland badgers are protected by the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and it is illegal for badgers to be shot or gassed. Since the order took effect, no badger has been shot or gassed for disease investigation purposes and there are no records of any illegal shooting or gassing.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has carried out into the incidence of bovine tuberculosis in badgers in Northern Ireland; and what evidence he has that badgers are a source of tuberculosis in cattle in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Past studies based mainly on road casualty badgers indicated that they do not represent a significant factor in the spread of bovine TB. In Northern Ireland there is no evidence that badgers are a major source of TB infection in cattle. It is estimated that badgers are responsible for some 2 per cent. of herd breakdowns at present.

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general practitioners received gross payments in excess of £200,000 per year in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Ancram: There were four in 1991-92 and 10 in 1992-93. In each case, the general medical practitioner was a dispensing doctor whose payments, in addition to the normal fees and allowances for providing general medical services, included dispensing fees and reimbursement of the cost of drugs supplied to patients.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of Anglo-Argentinian relations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Relations with Argentina are good. Ministers meet frequently. Trade and investment are growing fast. We co-operate in a wide range of areas. But we reject Argentina's continued claim to the Falkland Islands and other British dependent territories.

China

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total money received in compensation from the Chinese Government under the Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) Order 1987 in respect of losses incurred between 1949 and 1952; what is the total value of claims received; what is the total value of claims allowed; what is the total amount paid out to claims to date; what is the percentage settlement being used; what is the total amount spent on administration; how much interest was earned whilst Ernst and Young deliberated; and what is the current balance of the fund.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1987, the Chinese Government agreed a settlement of £23,468,008 for all British claims arising before 1 January 1980 but had a counter-claim of their own. As a result, the net amount passed to the Foreign Compensation Commission was £21,873,660·35.

The total value of claims received was £152,355,040. The total value awarded by the commission was £40,375,214. The percentage settlement being used is 62·25 per cent. The total amount paid to date is £25,127,550·34.

To date, £3,323,506·97 has been spent on administration. Interest earned was £8,786,835·29 on which £2,198.277·30 has been paid in tax. The commission reports that there is currently £50,058 at the bank. The figure includes unclaimed payments.

It is not possible without considerable research to differentiate the claims for losses incurred between 1949 and 1952.

Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many papers have been presented by the United Kingdom Government to the United Nations and the review conferences of the 1972 biological and toxin weapons convention disclosing information on Britain's past biological warfare activities; and why and when these papers were presented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has twice provided a "Declaration of past activities in offensive and/or defensive biological research and development programmes" to the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs in Geneva. These declarations were required under the confidence-building measures adopted by the 1991 third review conference of the 1972 bacteriological—biological—and toxic weapons convention. They were submitted in April 1992 and April 1993.

Council of Europe

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) of 17 January, Official Report, columns 354-55, which of the conventions and agreements listed have entered into force.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following have entered into force:

Sovereign Islands

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all islands in the world larger than 10,000 sq m that are not subject to a unique sovereignty, setting out the different sovereign powers in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Foreign Compensation Commission

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who are the members currently appointed to the Foreign Compensation Commission.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The currently appointed members of the Foreign Compensation Commission are Mr. A. W. E. Wheeler, CBE—Chairman—and Mr. J. A. S. Hall, DFC.

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current status of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea and the British Government's position on the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations convention on the law of the sea has now been ratified by 60 countries. It will enter into force in accordance with its terms on 16 November 1994. Although the convention contains many provisions of substantial value, we made known to the House in 1984 our objections to part XI of the convention which covers deep seabed mining. We welcomed and have participated fully in consultation under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General aimed at resolving the issues which have prevented industrialised countries from ratifying the convention. We will play an active part in the next round of consultations to be held in New York from 31 January to 4 February.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Boyes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to put nuclear waste materials down non-working pits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I am advised that the nuclear industry has no such plans.

Offshore Operators

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take to ensure that offshore operating companies are not able to avoid their legal and financial obligations relating to the payment of fines under health and safety prosecutions if they have been taken over; what time scale he envisages for this action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 December 1993]: I am not convinced of the need to take steps for this purpose.

Safety Regulations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what responses were received by his Department to his recent consultation on relaxation of the Furniture and Furnishings Fire (Safety) Regulations 1988 and the Night Wear Safety Regulations 1985; which bodies expressed support for relaxing these regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on what conclusions his Department has reached on the relaxation of the Furniture and Furnishings Fire (Safety) Regulations 1988 and the Night Wear Safety Regulations 1985.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answers 20 January 1994]: The recent consultation exercise on the Furniture and Furnishings Fire (Safety) Regulations 1988—as amended—and the Nightwear Safety Regulations 1985, in the context of the deregulation initiative, brought forward responses from a wide range of business and consumer interests. The detailed responses are being analysed and it is too early to reach conclusions on what changes—if any—are appropriate.

HEALTH

NHS Administration

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many managers and administrators are currently employed by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities and (c) family health service authorities; at what cost to taxpayers; and what were the corresponding figures in 1991 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the tables.

Table 1
General and senior managers and administrative and clerical staff employed in the Regional/District Health Authority structure at 30 September—whole time equivalents.

	1991	1992
General/senior managers	10,640	10,470

2. 1992-93 figures are provisional.
3. The figures for general and senior managers should be treated with caution because the national increase in their number—and hence salary costs—is largely due to the reclassification of other professional and administrative staff as general and senior managers.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are currently in operation for cross-departmental co-ordination of Government policy in relation to alcohol misuse and its consequences; and what plans there are for future co-ordination.

Mr. Bowis: The Government remain committed to taking effective action to deal with the consequences of alcohol misuse both for the individual and the community.

Action is focused on the promotion of sensible drinking habits including meeting the targets set out in "The Health of the Nation". I therefore welcome my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's decision to transfer responsibility for the co-ordination of Government policy on alcohol misuse to EDH(H), the cabinet sub-committee responsible for "The Health of the Nation" and to expand its membership accordingly.

University College London Hospitals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the further efficiency measures she has suggested to University College London hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made clear our commitment to retaining University College London Hospitals as a world-class centre of medical teaching and research. UCLH is already undertaking a major cost improvement programme in 1993-94, and North East Thames regional health authority is discussing with the unit how services can be provided most efficiently in future.

Family Health Services Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the budget of each family health services authority convened by the London implementation group for each year from 1990 to 1995.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 of each family health service authority whose area falls wholly or in part in the London initiative zone is shown in the table.

Budgets are not set for family health services as most elements of expenditure are demand-led and funded accordingly. Budgets for FHSA cash-limited expenditure are issued by regional health authorities and are not available centrally.

Medical Services Funding

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the funding for general medical services by region in each of the last three years; and what is projected for the next two years.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on general medical services by region for the years 1990-91 and 1992-93 is shown in the table.

Projected expenditure for future years is not available: most elements of general medical services expenditure are demand led and funded accordingly. Budgets for cash-limited expenditure on the general medical services are issued by regional health authorities and are not available centrally.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will quantify the cost of the factors which led to an increase in the cost of cars for Ministers in his Department since 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: Four main factors have led to the increase in the cost of Government car service cars for Ministers in the Department. First, the effect of inflation on GCS costs, particularly pay, vehicles and fuel. Secondly, during this period the GCS restructured its charges to reflect the fact that it had been under-recovering its full costs in 1990-91. Thirdly, the rate of value added tax has increased from 15 per cent. to 17½ per cent. Fourthly, there was the provision of an additional vehicle for an extra Minister in 1992, which accounts for some 20 per cent. of the increase.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to the NHS of the IVF programme over the past four years; how many babies have been born as a result of this programme; and how many embryos (a) have been donated, (b) are currently in storage and (c) were destroyed.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested cannot be separately identified.

Educational Qualifications

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list in rank order for each district council in England the number and percentage of adult residents who have no post-18 educational qualifications.

Mr. Sackville: Information from a 10 per cent. sample from the 1991 census will be placed in the Library. In the table, local authority districts are ranked according to percentage of residents aged over 18, who have no qualifications obtained after age 18—other than those usually obtained at school.

Information

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what considerations underlay her decision not to collect information centrally on (a) response times by ambulance services, (b) hospitals which failed to treat patients within the waiting time set out in the patients charter, (c) the disease optic neuritis, (d) the number of child patients unable to receive paediatric intensive care owing to shortage of paediatric intensive care beds, (e) the number of general practitioners receiving gross payments of £200,000 or over per year, (f) district health authorities running at (i) a surplus or (ii) a deficit on the number of people wishing to be inoculated against influenza, (g) waiting times for outpatient treatment by (i) regional health authorities and (ii) district health authorities, (h) the use of Concorde flights by health staff and (i) the number of children refused orthodontic treatment because of the limitation on extra-contractual referrals; and if she will reconsider her decision in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: The main thrust of the national health service reforms is the devolution of responsibility to appropriate levels, allowing those providing services to be fully in charge of planning and delivery. It would be counter to those reforms for the centre to impose unnecessarily restrictive monitoring systems and to require returns for, and about, every step in the process of procuring and delivering health care.

Social Classes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each district council in England the proportion of the district population in social classes 3G4 and 5.

Mr. Sackville: The available information, based on a 10 per cent. sample from the 1991 census will be placed in the Library. As there is no social class 3G, the table shows social class IIIM—skilled-manual.

GPs (Misconduct)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the length of time on average involved in determining cases involving complaints against general practitioners accused of professional misconduct.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since we announced an independent review of all national health service complaints procedures, chaired by Professor Alan Wilson, a large number of representations have been received by the review committee, many of which have referred to the length of time taken to deal with complaints made by individuals.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by region and district, the responses made to NHS management executive circular EL(93)37 indicating the number of individual services (a) currently being market tested and (b) planned to be market tested.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to publish this information. As stated in paragraph 2 of the annex to EL(93)37, the information will be available as a source of management information for the national health service and national health service management executive.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place a copy in the Library of the advice circular to the national health service from the Government Actuary's Department in relation to the pension package minimum equivalence with respect to contractors seeking work from a Government Department under market testing and competitive tendering, where the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) (Regulations) 1981 apply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government Actuary Department has not issued a general circular to the national health service as a result of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981—TUPE.

The national health service management executive issued guidance on TUPE on 5 November 1993, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Although pensions are not covered by the TUPE regulations, the management executive guidance suggests that advice on pensions equivalance may be obtained from the GAD on a case-by-case basis.

Cars

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list in rank order for each district council in England the number of households without a car.

Mr. Sackville: Information from the 1991 census will be placed in the Library. In the table, local authority districts are ranked according to the percentage of households with no car.

Long-term Illness

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many households in each district council in England include an occupant suffering limiting long-term illness; and what percentage this group constitutes of the area's total households in each case.

Mr. Sackville: Information from the 1991 census will be placed in the Library.

Health Authority Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the total final cash allocations and (b) the actual outturn expenditure for each district health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Cash allocations to districts are issued by regional health authorities and are not recorded centrally. Information on revenue expenditure by district will be placed in the Library.

Abortion

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of terminations of pregnancies were funded by the NHS in 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested will shortly be published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in monitor AB 94/1.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Dementia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people under the age of 20 years in each of the last five years have suffered from Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia; and of these how many had not had any growth treatment previously.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware of any people under the age of 20 in the United Kingdom proven to be suffering from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the last five years.

GPs (Staff)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the average reimbursement to GPs for salaries for receptionists, practice managers, secretaries and administrators in each year since 1990-91, excluding the GP fundholding management allowance.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Patients' Notes

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) who, apart from doctors, has access to patients' notes in hospitals;

(2) whether hospital managers have right of access to patients' notes.

Mr. Sackville: Personal health information is handled on a strict "need to know" basis in the national health service. Besides doctors and other health professionals, managers and administrative staff may also need to see patients' notes in order, for example, to plan services and arrange appointments. Individual members of staff should only have access to that part of the information which is necessary for them to carry out their duties. Advice to the NHS on this will be included in the guidance on confidentiality which we hope to issue for consultation shortly.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the use to which GP fundholders have put surplus funds from 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: All savings must be used for the benefit of patients. The detailed rules setting out the uses for which general practitioner fundholders may use savings are in paragraph 24 of the National Health Service (Fundholding Practices) Regulations 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans the Edgware health trust has to build new office premises in the grounds of the Barnet general hospital;

(2) what plans there are for the closure of Edgware general hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Wellhouse Trust comprises the Edgware and Barnet general hospitals. Barnet health agency's five-year strategy proposes the development of Barnet hospital and the reshaping or closure of Edgware hospital. The period of public consultation ends on 31 January. Any formal proposal to close Edgware hospital would be subject to separate public consultation.

Casualty Services, London

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has received the report of the accident and emergency reference group on casualty services in London; and what plans she has to publish it.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what form the accident and emergency reference group reported for the London implementation group; and if she will publish this report.

Dr. Mawhinney: The accident and emergency reference group was set up to advise the London implementation group on accident and emergency services in London. The group has not been asked to produce a report.

Asthma

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to include the reduction of asthma in the objectives of "The Health of the Nation"; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We believe that further development and research is necessary before national targets in respect of asthma can be set. In 1992-93 the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, spent over £1·5 million on research into asthma and areas which may be relevant to the condition.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members currently appointed to each of the family health services authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Members of family health services authorities are appointed by regional health authorities.

Barnet Health Agency

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to public funds of the production and distribution of the publication "Focus on Health—A Strategic Framework 1993-1998" by the Barnet health agency in terms of (a) managerial costs, (b) production costs and (c) distribution costs.

Dr. Mawhinney: Barnet health authority is still consulting on its five-year strategy. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Alan Jacobs, chairman of the authority, for details.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to raise the matter of an upper age limit on the availability of infertility treatment within the European Community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has stated in its second annual report that it will be addressing the issue of treatment for post-menopausal women in the coming year. The Government will consider this matter further after they receive the authority's advice.

Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the members currently appointed to the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy.

(2) how many cars have been allocated to NHS managers, advisers, administrators and clerical staff in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) how many cars have been allocated to NHS nurses in (a) the hospital service and (b) the community service in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Food Safety

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in her Department's review of food safety and hygiene; and when its conclusions will be reported.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has three major reviews under way in the area of food safety and hygiene. These form part of the Government's food law deregulation plan which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 14 September 1993. These are:

i. a wide-ranging review of all food temperature controls both in domestic and European Community legislation. A consultation on options both for change to United Kingdom legislation and for negotiation in the EC finished on 31 December. We shall make an announcement when the responses have been considered.

ii. As part of the process of drafting regulations to implement the EC hygiene of foodstuffs directive, the Department has undertaken a review of domestic food hygiene legislation. We expect consultation on proposed new regulations will begin in February 1994. We plan to lay regulations before Parliament in the summer of 1994.

iii. Under the EC hygiene of foodstuffs directive, the EC Commission must review the relationship between that directive and product specific food hygiene directives. We and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food aim to consult UK industry and other interests in the spring about options arising from the review before taking them forward to EC forums for discussion.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decision her Department's review of food safety and hygiene has reached in respect of the responsibility on retailers to check suppliers' storage areas if a product arrived at the required temperature.

Mr. Sackville: There is no requirement in food law for retailers to carry out checks on suppliers' storage areas.

Dentistry

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnant women received free dental treatment in each year since 1978-79.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available centrally on the number of women for whom treatment was provided. The table shows the available information on the number of courses of treatment provided.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were registered as national health service dental patients in each region in each year since 1978-79.

Dr. Mawhinney: Registration figures are only available from October 1990. The table shows by region in England the numbers of adults and children registered with national health service dentists at 31 March 1991, 1992 and 1993. Over this period there has been a net increase in patient registrations in every region.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices accepted national health service patients in each region in each year since 1978-79.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. However, there are now more dentists in contract with family health services authorities for the provision of national health service dental treatment than ever before.

Health Service Staff

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 3 December, Official Report, columns 807-10, if she will give the total salary costs for each group in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prescriptions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of prescriptions processed in each year since 1978-79; and of that total, how many were (i) free of charge, (ii) covered by a prepayment certificate and (iii) paid for in some other way.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Child Meningitis

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to reduce the incidence of meningitis in children.

Mr. Sackville: The inclusion of a vaccine against haemophilus influenze type b, Hib-one of the two main causes of bacterial meningitis in young children—in the childhood immunisation programme from 1 October 1992 has resulted in a dramatic drop of over 80 per cent. in cases of invasive Hib disease in children under one year, the main target group for immunisation. Effective vaccines against the commonest form of meningococcal disease—the other main cause of bacterial meningitis in young children—are not yet available; the Department of Health is funding research to assist in the development of these vaccines.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of persons appointed to NHS trusts and authorities in England and Wales, showing name, current employment and whether resident in the relevant trust or authority area.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 17 January at column 385, for information on chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts in England.

Non-executive members of district health authorities and family health services authorities are appointed by regional health authorities from amongst those who live or work in the area covered by the authority or trust, or have connections with it. Information on the place of residence of those persons appointed to NHS authorities and trusts is available from them.

Details of chairmen and non-executive members of regional health authorities and special health authorities, and chairmen of district health authorities and family health services authorities will be placed in the Library.

The appointment of persons to NHS authorities and trusts in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Clinical Trials

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to reduce the regulations governing clinical trial authorisation.

Mr. Sackville: As part of the deregulation initiative task forces were set up to advise Ministers on priorities for the repeal of simplification of existing regulations so as to minimise the costs on business. The chemicals and pharmaceuticals deregulation task force identified clinical trial authorisation as an area of regulation that might be simplified.

The Medicines Control Agency of the Department of Health is currently consulting on proposals to simplify the operation of the clinical trial exemption—CTX—scheme. Schedule 2 to the Medicines (Exemption from Licenses) (Clinical Trials) Order 1981 lists the areas about which the Licensing Authority must be informed forthwith if the supplier proposes to make changes to an approved CTX. It is proposed to ease these requirements by removing the need to notify the Licensing Authority of changes of investigators and to introduce a usage guideline. The usage guideline will allow the supplier to supply the product for use in a new clinical trial or an on-going clinical trial without the need to notify the Licensing Authority providing that the new conditions of the trial are within the scope of the information contained in the usage guideline. This will allow pharmaceutical companies to carry out clinical trials within defined criteria without the need to notify the Licensing Authority of each and every change before proceeding. Any changes that are outside the terms of the usage guideline will still have to be notified to the Licensing Authority as currently happens.

The consultation will close on 31 January. We will consider carefully the comments received and decide how to carry forward these proposals.

Copies of the consultation letter, MLX203, will be placed in the Library.

NHS Sight Tests

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service sight tests took place in each region of the United Kingdom, in each financial year since 1984-85.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of national health service sight tests paid for in each financial year in Great Britain is shown in the table. The number of NHS sight tests carried out in Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

[1] From 1 April 1989 NHS sight tests were restricted to certain eligible groups in the population.
The figures for 1989-90 included 1·82 million sight tests paid for in 1989-90 but conducted in 1988-89 under the previous scheme. The remaining 4·22 million were conducted and paid for in 1989-90 which do not constitute a full 12 months of the new scheme. The figures for 1990-91 which do represent twelve months under the new scheme, are not therefore directly comparable with those for 1989-90.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 20 January.

Community Care (Assessments)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data are being collected by her Department, in relation to assessment procedures, number of assessments required and number of assessments being undertaken, by local authorities, regarding care in the community.

Mr. Bowis: We are discussing with the local authority associations ways of including data on assessments in the Department's regular statistical collections.

External Bodies (Funding)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy to operate a level playing field between opponents and supporters of Government health policies in future funding of external bodies;

(2) if organisations which oppose the introduction of the internal market have been offered financial support.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Department of Health funds external bodies on the merits of the individual applications for funding.

NHS Trust Federation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what powers, and for what purposes, a grant of £5,000 was made to the NHS Trust Federation.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1994]: I understand that the payment was made to the National Health Service Trust Federation to contribute towards its development costs. There was no statutory authority for such a payment, and the federation has repaid the money to the Department.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is normal practice for her Department to operate a clawback procedure where grant-aided organisations generate surpluses in years in which they are grant aided; and whether such a condition applies to the grant of £5,000 made to the NHS Trust Federation.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1994]: The Department encourages the voluntary organisations which it grant aids to seek additional sources of income. Grants are not necessarily withdrawn or reduced because a voluntary organisation makes a surplus in a particular year, but the Department expressly reserves the right to discontinue a grant and to recover it if it is not used for the purpose for which it is given. The payment to the trust federation, which is not grant aided by the Department, was made without statutory authority and has since been recovered.

Health Benefits Review

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recommendations were made by the health benefits review regarding the period of the certificate of entitlement to prescriptions;

(2) whether the alternative schemes costed by the health benefits review included one based on exemptions and passporting;

(3) whether the terms of reference of the health benefits review include part-payment of prescription charges for low-income persons; and what plans she now has to introduce such help;

(4) when she commenced the review of the health benefits low-income scheme; what was the expected time scale for the review; and what was the expected date of publication of the results.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 January 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 22 May 1991 at column 530 that the Department of Health would undertake a review of the administration of the national health service low-income scheme during 1991, and would aim to produce proposals by the end of that year.

The review made a number of proposals for consideration. These were reworked during 1992, as improved statistical information became available, and reconsidered afresh in 1993 as an integral part of the fundamental review of health expenditure. We plan to announce the outcome shortly.

Patients Charter

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the package of key data about the patients charter performance of each district health authority, referred to in her answer of 4 November, Official Report, column 458.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 January 1994]: We have no plans to publish this health authority-based data which are collected by the national health service management executive for internal management purposes only.

We have already announced our intention to publish this summer NHS performance tables which will include key provider-based information about the patients charter performance of every NHS hospital and trust. We believe it is this information that will be of most use and interest to the general public.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) families, (b) pensioners and (c) children were living in poverty in Durham in each of the last 14 years.

Mr. Burt: Statistics on patterns of household disposable income, for the United Kingdom as a whole, are provided in "Households Below Average Income 1979—1990-91", published in June 1993, a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not available on a regional basis.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently without accommodation and claiming income support in Durham.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Spending Power

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables, similar to those in his Department's tax benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for each of a single waged married couple (a) with two children aged four and six years and (b) with three children aged three, eight and 11 years earning (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110, (vii) £120, (viii) £130, (ix) £140, (x) £150, (xi) £160 and (xii) £170 per week under the benefit system as per its latest uprating.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Cold Weather Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments have been made in each year since 1978-79 (a) in total and (b) in each standard region.

Mr. Scott: All the information available on cold weather payments made since their introduction in December 1986 is held in the Library.

Taxation

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), of 14 December, Official Report, column 626, what are the numbers of (a) men and (b) women below (i) the tax threshold and (ii) the national insurance contribution threshold, by standard region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hague: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the average duration of sickness for those in receipt of statutory sick pay (a) in total and (b) by region.

Mr. Hague: The estimated average number of statutory sick pay days paid in Great Britain in the period 1 April 1991 to 4 April 1992 is 15. This information is not available by region.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the total number of firms defined as small for the purposes of special compensation for statutory sick pay (a) in total in the United Kingdom and (b) in each region.

Mr. Hague: Subject to parliamentary approval, the existing threshold of small employers' relief will rise from £16,000 to £20,000 in 1994-95. We estimate that 750,000 employers in Great Britain will be eligible under the new definition. This information is not available by region. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Benefits Claimants

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will still be in receipt of special transitional additions in 1994-95 and the percentage of benefit increase taking effect in April.

Mr. Burt: Due to the very small numbers presently in receipt of special transitional addition it is impossible to give an accurate forecast of the number likely to be in receipt in 1994-95. The latest figures available are for February 1993 when 500 people were receiving a special transitional addition. Special transitional additions will increase in April by 3·5 per cent.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time between the date of application and an award from the independent living—1993—fund.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the director of the fund that the average time taken for an application to the independent living—1993—fund to progress from initial contact to an offer of payment is 11 weeks. It takes on average a further five weeks for the offer to be accepted by the client and for payment arrangements to be made by the fund.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the projected underspend of the independent living fund during 1993-94; and if this amount will be carried over into the 1994-95 budget.

Mr. Scott: Total provision for the independent living fund is £124 million in 1993-94. The projected underspend of the independent living—1993—fund during 1993-94 is £3·5 million. There is no projected underspend for the independent living—extension—fund. Normal Government accounting rules will apply to any unspent provision.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for a review of a current award have been made to the independent living—extension—fund; and how many awards have been increased as a result of this application.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the director of the fund that the information requested is not available. However, in October 1993 the trustees of the fund initiated a programme of reviews for those clients who, for a number of reasons, were not able to make full use of the original amounts offered to them. Increased funding has now been offered to 766 clients, of whom 166 have accepted the offer made. The value of the increases now in payment is £5,958·40 per week, an average increase of £35·89 per week per client.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff are employed by the Child Support Agency;

(2) how many full-time staff on clerical officer grade or below employed by the Child Support Agency are (a) male and (b) female.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter form R. Hepplewhite to Mr. Dennis Skinner, dated 21 Janaury 1994:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for details about the staffing of the Child Support Agency.

At 1 Janaury 1994, the Agency had 4,937 members of staff, of whom 4,156 were full-time and 781 part-time. Of full-time staff employed in clerical grades and below, 663 were male and 1,696 female.

You may also wish to know that work is undertaken on behalf of the Agency by the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency. On 1 January 1994, 440 members of staff at the Centre in Belfast were engaged on work relating to parents with care who live in mainland Britain. Of full-time staff at clerical grades and below employed in this work, 113 were male and 228 female.

I hope you find this information useful.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many copies of the leaflet on proposed changes to child support maintenance have been printed; when they will be available at local Department of Social Security offices; what has been the cost of the leaflet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Five hundred thousand copies of the leaflet, "Proposed Changes to Child Support Maintenance" were printed. They have been available from local offices since the second week of January. The leaflets were printed at a total cost of £21,691—zero VAT.

Girocheques

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 10 December 1993, Official Report, column 409, if he will make it his policy that the Benefits Agency shall monitor centrally the number of girocheques issued by the Employment Service agency on behalf of his Department and the number of replacement girocheques issued to claimants;

(2) how many girocheques have been issued by his Department for each of the last five years; and what was the total value of the girocheques issued for each of those years.

Mr. Burt: The administration of payment of benefit by girocheque is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 20 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about girocheques issued by the Department of Social Security.

The number of girocheques issued by the Department of Social Security in each of the last five years are as follows:

	DSS issued (million)	Value of DSS issues (£ million)
1988-89	30·884	2,292
1989-90	34·484	2,619
1990-91	14·470	2,814
1991-92	36·190	3,304
1992-93	27·863	3,509

As you will be aware from my reply of 9.12.93., the Employment Service acts as our agent in the provision of girocheques to those who are unemployed and claiming Income Support. Data relevant to the number of girocheques issued cannot be separately identified as some girocheques are paid for a combination of benefits.

We are advised of the number of girocheques issued by Employment Services and we are able to identify the total amount paid in respect of both Department of Social Security and Employment Service benefits. However, as a number of girocheques are issued for a combination of benefits administered by both Agencies, it is not possible to state how many girocheques were issued for Benefit Agency payments only, Employment Service payments only, or a combination of payments in respect of both Agencies.

Within the Benefits Agency we are constantly monitoring the volume of losses of all Instruments of Payment including girocheques. Methods of preventing and reducing Instrument of Payment fraud are being developed in conjunction with Post Office Counters Ltd, Royal Mail and the Employment Services. One of the areas we are seeking to improve is the Management Information System providing details of girocheque issues and losses. We are examining our systems to determine the detail we require to combat girocheque fraud. The decision on what information we collate centrally and subsequent implementation will be made after considering the costs involved and usefulness of such information.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Market Testing

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what stage the market-testing process has reached in the DSS offices in Ayrshire; when he expects contracts to be awarded for these services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The market testing process in the DSS offices in Ayrshire is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 20 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the progress of the market testing exercise in DSS offices in Ayrshire.

The Benefits Agency is market testing accommodation and office services and management training services to all the Agency's offices in Scotland. Tenders for the provision of management training have been received and a contract will be awarded in the near future. Invitations to tender for messenger and security services have been issued and a contract is expected to be awarded in March. Invitations to tender for typing and telephonist services are expected to be issued in about six months time and a contract awarded about two months later.

I hope that my reply has been helpful.

Loans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each scheme operated by his Department under which loans are available, the objectives of the scheme, the number of unrecovered loans, the total value of unrecovered loans, the average number of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990, the average value of unrecovered loans for each year since 1990 and the annual cost of recovering loans.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 20 January 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about loan schemes which are operated by his Department.

The Social Fund (SF) scheme is intended to help people to meet large intermittent or unexpected expenses. There are two types of interest free loans available from the SF—Budgeting Loans (BL) and Crisis Loans (CL). BLs are available to people who have been on Income Support for at least 26 weeks to help with important expenses which are difficult to budget for out of weekly benefit. CLs are available to people who need financial help to meet expenses in an emergency or a disaster, whether they are receiving any benefit or not. However, a CL can only be awarded if it is the only way to prevent serious risk, or serious damage, to the health or safety of that person or a member of his family.

The table at Annex A provides details of the number and total amount of unrecovered loans for each of the financial years ending March 1990 to March 1992 (latest year available).

SF loans are normally recovered by weekly deductions from benefit. Customers can only repay one loan at a time, so recovery of any subsequent loans is deferred to a later date. The amount outstanding therefore includes loans which have been deferred and also loans where recovery is continuing, but which have only been partially repaid.

You also asked for the annual cost of recovering loans. Unfortunately this information is not available.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex A

Year End Date	Number of loans unrecovered (Thousands)	The value of the loans unrecovered £ (Millions)
31 March 1990	814·95	107·691
31 March 1991	992·90	138·783
31 March 1992	1,312·30	178·376

Housing Benefit

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 January on housing benefit to private sector tenants, if he will provide a breakdown by each housing authority in Great Britain of the amount of DSS subsidy and local authority expenditure for the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 14 January 1994]: The information is not available in the form requested for the financial year 1989-90. In view of the amount of data involved, I am arranging for copies of the available information to be placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Central Drugs Co-ordination Unit

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans the Government have to set up a central drugs co-ordination unit.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced in a written answer on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 780, that a central drugs co-ordination unit was to be attached to the Privy Council Office. The unit will come into being on 24 January 1994 and report to me as chairman of the Cabinet Committee on drugs issues.

Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a spring supplementary estimate for the Privy Council vote—class XIX, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure, estimated at £40,000, will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Flight ULE 966

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of (a) 22 December regarding the detention of passengers on flight ULE 966 from Jamaica and (b) 10 January regarding the detention of the pregnant wife of Mr. Graham Doughty of Nottingham.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I replied to the hon. Member's letters of 22 December and 10 January on 12 and 18 January respectively.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what redress he will offer Mrs. Maria Doughty of Honeymead drive, Daybrook Lane, for being held at Gatwick airport on 22 December 1993 before being allowed to join her husband in Nottingham.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 January 1993]: I have written to the hon. Member about this case. I do not believe that any redress is justified.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Jamaicans, detained from flight JQ001, were transferred to prison detention after leaving the Campsfield detention centre; and which prisons were used.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One who was transferred to HM prison Pentonville.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent flight ULE 966 from Kingston, Jamaica on 21 December 1993 was targeted by immigration officials; and at what level in his Department such decisions are taken.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For the reasons given in my letters of 12 and 18 January to the hon. Member, prior arrangements were made by immigration service managers at Gatwick, in consultation with senior officers at immigration service headquarters to enable a potentially large number of individual interviews to be conducted. Every decision to refuse entry was individually authorised by an officer of chief immigration officer or inspector grade, as the immigration rules require.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the nature of the contingency planning that took place in relation to flight ULE 966 from Kingston, Jamaica, that arrived on 21 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The contingency planning included arrangements for the disembarkation of the aircraft in stages, the provision of a gate lounge where passengers could sit while awaiting interview, and making available additional immigration officers from the other Gatwick offices. The immigration service was also provided with a passenger manifest 3½ hours prior to the aircraft's arrival. Further details are contained in my letters of 12 and 18 January to the hon. Member.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason passengers on board flight ULE 966 were segregated into distinct groups before they were allowed to disembark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Passengers on board flight ULE 966—JQ0001—were not segregated into groups before being allowed to disembark. European Community nationals and a number of unaccompanied children were invited to leave the aircraft first. The other passengers were asked to disembark progressively in groups by row number.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific evidence he has linking any of the 178 Jamaicans arriving on flight ULE 966 on 21 December 1993 who were detained, with criminal activity or with drug pushing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no evidence that any of these passengers is involved in criminal activity.

Theft

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department (1) how many prisoners convicted for theft were unemployed at the time of their arrest;

(2) what were the educational attainments of prisoners convicted for theft at the time of their conviction for the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Frank Field, dated 21 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions as to how many prisoners convicted for theft were unemployed at the time of their arrest, and what were the educational attainments of prisoners convicted for theft at the time of their conviction for the latest available date.

No information is held centrally on convicted prisoners' employment status at the time of arrest. However, the National Prison Survey, conducted in January and February 1991, found that 59 per cent. of convicted prisoners whose principal offence was burglary or another offence involving theft were not in paid work just before they came to prison; 31 per cent. said they were unemployed seeking work.

The National Prison Survey can also provide information on prisoners' educational qualifications. It found that qualifications of convicted prisoners whose principal offence was burglary or another offence involving theft were as follows:

	Per cent.
Degree or teaching qualification	1
Other higher qualification	2
A level or equivalent	2
O level or equivalent	36
Apprenticeship	7
Foreign qualification	[1]—
Commercial	[1]—
Any other qualification	3
No qualification	48

[1] Less than one.

About one third of those with O level or equivalent qualifications said that some had been attained in prison, as did about a half of those with higher qualifications.

The National Prison Survey had a total sample of almost 4,000 offenders. The total number of respondents in the sample convicted of burglary and other offences involving theft was 675. The statistics presented here are estimates, and there may be some sampling error. There are no more detailed or up-to-date figures held centrally.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the incidents of terrorist activity in Great Britain since 21 February 1989 attributable to groups (a) connected with Northern Ireland and (b) not connected with Northern Ireland.

Mr. Howard: The list classifies acts of terrorism according to the definitions in section 14(2) of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Keith Whitehouse

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether Keith Whitehouse's name was placed on the police national computer, in accordance with Home Office rules, in order to alert police forces that he was wanted, after he failed to return from home leave in January 1991:

(2) whether Keith Waterhouse was eligible for home leave under the Home Office rules barring leave for prisoners suffering from mental disorder; and when he was given home leave from HMP Risley in January 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 21 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the eligibility of Keith Whitehouse for home leave from prison in January 1991 and whether his name was placed on the Police National Computer after he failed to return to Risley prison on 11 June 1991. I have set out the circumstances and background in some detail because I think you will find it helpful in this tragic case.

In January 1991 Mr. Whitehouse, then known as Nico Constantine or Keith Nicholas Constantine, was at Featherstone prison not Risley. He was a category C prisoner and was granted home leave between 18 and 21 January 1991 so that he could arrange a date for his wedding. He returned to Featherstone on time.

He was later transferred to Lancaster prison and then moved to Risley in May 1991. He was allowed another period of home leave between 5-11 June, which had been agreed at Lancaster. The governor of Risley had no reason to interfere with that decision. He failed to return and was unlawfully at large until his arrest on 28 November 1991. He would have been released from prison at the end of his sentence on 29 August 1991.

Prisoners who are "considered to be mentally ill or suffering from mental disorder, or who have been committed to prison as a place of safety" are ineligible for consideration for home leave. The definition of mental disorder is considered to be a condition requiring psychiatric care or treatment under the terms of the 1983 Mental Health Act. Mr. Whitehouse had been described in a report to court in 1990 as having a "psychopathic personality disorder", but he was not considered mentally ill and did not require psychiatric treatment. On each occasion when he was considered for home leave, prison doctors considered his case. They did not find any medical reason to suggest leave should not be granted.

When a prisoner escapes, absconds or fails to return from temporary absence such as home leave it is the responsibility of the governor to inform the local police force. This was done within four hours of Mr. Whitehouse's failure to return on 11 June 1991. The Cheshire Police incident log confirms that Keith Nicholas Constantine was reported as unlawfully at large from Risley. I am advised that it is now impossible to confirm whether Cheshire Police then passed his details to the Police National Computer, as this data would have been deleted from the computer after 13 months.

I naturally regret the very tragic outcome in this case. But I am satisfied that Mr. Whitehouse's requests for home leave were properly considered according to the rules that existed in 1991. His failure to return was properly reported to the police.

Revised instructions now apply to requests for home leave. In particular, governors are required to make a rigorous risk assessment in each case, which is aimed at reducing the likelihood of further tragedies occurring.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female nationals of other European countries were either remand or sentenced prisoners being held in prisons in England and Wales as of 10 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 21 January 1994:

MALE AND FEMALE NATIONALS FROM OTHER EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

The home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) male and (b) female nationals of other European countries were either remand or sentenced prisoners being held in prisons in England and Wales as of 10 January.

The latest available provisional information is for prisoners in Prison Service establishments on 30 September 1993. On that date there were 1,022 males (of whom 309 were remanded and 713 were sentenced) and 46 females (of whom 17 were remanded and 29 were sentenced) recorded as nationals of European countries other than the United Kingdom. These figures exclude those for whom a nationality was not recorded.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female nationals of each African country were either remand or sentenced prisoners being held in prisons in England and Wales on 10 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 21 January 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) male and (b) female nationals of each African country were either remand or sentenced prisoners being held in prisons in England and Wales on 10 January.

Assisted Prison Visits Scheme

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allow homosexual partners to benefit from the assisted prison visits scheme on similar terms to other partners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current assisted prison visits scheme is designed to help prisoners maintain their family ties by paying towards the costs of visits made by their close relatives on low incomes. Under the scheme, close relatives are defined as spouses, children, siblings and partners of prisoners. A partner is defined as a person of the opposite sex who was living with the prisoner for at least four months before imprisonment, or who has a child from the relationship. Consequently, homosexual partners of prisoners do not qualify for assisted visits, although consideration is being given to whether the scheme should be extended.

Murder

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of all the people imprisoned for murder since 1967 who have subsequently (a) had their conviction overturned on appeal and (b) been released by the Home Secretary due to unsound convictions; and what are the total numbers in each category.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is for those originally sentenced to life for murder and whose sentences were subsequently reduced, or lifted on appeal whilst serving their sentences in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. There were 127 cases between 1967 and 1992, of which 19 followed references to the Court of Appeal by the Home Secretary under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968. Details of individual cases cannot be given.

Consultancies

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) accountancy firms and (b) merchant banks to which his Department awarded private consultancy work in 1992 and 1993, together with a list of the consultancies concerned and the amount paid.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on accountancy and non-accountancy contracts awarded to all known accountancy firms and merchant banks is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Details of contracts awarded during the last two years to the main accountancy firms and merchant banks are set out in the table.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1979, 1980, 1982, 1984, 1986, 1988, 1990, and 1992 is given in the table. Data for other years would involve disproportionate cost.

Race Relations Act 1976

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he intends to take following the Commission for Racial Equality's second review of the Race Relations Act 1976;

(2) when he will respond to the Commission for Racial Equality's second review of the Race Relations Act 1976.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are giving careful consideration to the Commission for Racial Equality's recommendations and have discussed the issues raised with them; we will respond formally as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether and how visitors to the United Kingdom detained for questioning by immigration officials are made aware of their right to complain to the immigration and nationality department complaints unit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Passengers who wish to complain are normally invited to speak to a supervising officer; if they remain dissatisfied they are given the address of the immigration and nationality department complaints unit and advised that they may put their complaint in writing.

Probation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of (a) probation orders and (b) community service orders successfully ran their course during 1992.

Mr. Maclean: The information published in the 1992 probation statistics for England and Wales, a copy of which is in the Library, shows that 81 per cent. of probation orders terminated successfully in 1992, in the sense that 65 per cent. ran their full course, 3 per cent. were replaced by a conditional discharge and 13 per cent. were terminated early by the courts for good progress. In the same year 72 per cent. of community service orders terminated successfully, in the sense that the specified number of hours was completed without termination of the order for failure to comply with its requirements, conviction of another offence or for other reasons.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much it cost to build the three most recently opened probation and bail hostels; and where they were sited.

Mr. Maclean: The costs of the three most recently opened hostels are:

Merseyside bail hostel, Merseyside	934,299
Bunbury House bail hostel, Cheshire	545,537
Scunthorpe bail hostel, Humberside	[1]579,016

[1] Estimated.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was, or will be, the projected underspend on the hostel expansion budget for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Maclean: In 1992-93 the underspend on the approved hostel expansion programme was £3·26 million. The current projected underspend for 1993-94 is £1·2 million.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what revision was made following a public expenditure survey to the probation accommodation grant scheme as originally set out in the three-year plan for the probation service 1994-97.

Mr. Maclean: Planned provision for the probation accommodation grants scheme as shown in the three-year planning document for the probation service 1994-97 is as follows. The spending plans set out in the 1993-96 planning document published following the 1992 public expenditure survey are shown in parentheses.

	£ million
1994-95	10·8 (11·9)
1995-96	11·7 (13·2)
1996-97	12·0

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons will be made redundant as a result of the bail hostel closure plans.

Mr. Maclean: It will be for the individual probation committees and hostel managing committees concerned, as employers, to decide how to manage the consequences of closures in terms of staff redeployment or redundancy; we have not yet received full accounts of their conclusions.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average occupancy level for bail hostels in England and Wales for each of the last 10 quarters.

Mr. Maclean: Occupancy figures for the period April 1991 to March 1992 are not readily available on a quarterly basis. The occupancy figures for the most recent six quarters are as follows:

	Per.cent
April to June 1992	66
July to September 1992	61
October to December 1992	62
January to March 1993	65
April to June 1993	64
July to September 1993	67

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were remanded to a probation or bail hostel in England and Wales; and how many of these were (a) black males and (b) black females, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally and is not readily available.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residents of probation and bail hostels were aged (a) under 17, (b) 17 to 21 and (c) 21 years or over, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally and is not readily available.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to the number of persons who will be received into custody as a result of the proposed bail hostel closures; and what will be the estimated annual cost of such custody.

Mr. Maclean: It remains to be seen whether there are any additional custodial remands. These are decisions for the courts, who will continue to have the option of remanding defendants to other under-utilised bail hostels in the same or neighbouring probation areas.

Drugs

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the average length of custodial sentences in each of the last three years for offences of possession with intent to supply (a) class A, (b) class B and (c) class C substances as defined by the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information regarding the average length of custodial sentences for the offence of possession of a controlled drug with intent to supply unlawfully, for the last three years for which figures are available, is contained in the table. The available information does not differentiate between the classes of drug involved.

Table: average length of custodial sentence for possession of a controlled drug with intent to supply unlawfully, United Kingdom, 1990 to 1992

Year	Average length of sentence (months)
1990	21·1
1991	20·9
1992	19·6

Crime Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) of 26 November, Official Report, columns 237-38, how many notifiable offences there were for each police force area in each year since June 1983, (a) in total, (b) broken down into each category of offence and (c) what was the clear-up rate in each category.

Mr. Maclean: Statistics on the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police by police force area and offence group are published annually in table 2.5 of the command paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Figures for clear-ups are published in table 2.9 of the volumes for 1991 and 1992 and in table 2.19 of the 1990 volume.

Figures for clear-ups by selected offence groups are published in table 2.19 of the volumes for 1986 to 1989. Information for earlier years is not available centrally.

Copies of the annual command paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" are available in the Library.

Deportees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount paid to private security firms for escorting detainees and their dependants overseas in 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The amount was £257,035, excluding ticketing costs.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which private security firms are used by carriers required by the immigration service to effect the removal of a passenger refused leave to enter;

(2) what checks his Department makes on private security firms employed by carriers required by the immigration service to effect the removal of a passenger refused leave to enter.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where directions are given to carriers under paragraph 8 of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 to remove people refused leave to enter, the carrier is responsible for all the arrangements necessary to comply with the directions. This includes making arrangements for any escort considered by the carrier to be necessary, the selection of the escorts and ensuring they are able to perform their duties satisfactorily. Where removal is directed at public expense under paragraph 10 of schedule 2 to the Act, any in-flight escort judged necessary is arranged by the immigration service in accordance with its normal policy.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that medical records of deportees are consulted before drugs are administered.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Where the medical records of a person being deported are available, they are already consulted as necessary before the administration of any medication.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ban the administration of drugs during deportations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The administration of medication to a deportee is a matter for a medical practitioner to decide.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which companies manufacture the arm and leg restraints and body belts with handcuffs used during deportations;

(2) if he will publish his Department's regulations relating to the materials, size and specification of restraints used in deportations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that the body belt and leg restraints are manufactured to a specification developed by the Metropolitan police and manufactured by its stores department. Hiatt and Company Ltd. supplies the Metropolitan police with handcuffs in accordance with standards evaluated by the Home Office police scientific development branch and approved by the Home Office and Association of Chief Police Officers in consultation with the Police Complaints Authority. The standard handcuff is manufactured from steel with either a chain or hinge link and the Quick-Kuff is made from steel with a nylon grip.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of in-flight escorts for deportations have been provided by private security firms since August 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period from 1 August to 31 December 1993, 93 per cent. of the in-flight escorts for people being removed at public expense—including deportees—were provided by the private sector.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent in each year since 1978-79 on (a) crime prevention and (b) public relations by each police authority in cash and in current prices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Joy Gardner

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the Exchequer of the attempted deportation of Mrs. Joy Gardner.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The cost of the police officers and the immigration officer directly involved in the attempt to deport Mrs. Gardner on 28 July 1993 was £539·79. The cost of the time of other officials of the immigration and nationality department involved in this case could not be established without disproportionate expense.

Ethnic Communities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what projects have been funded in the London borough of Southwark under section 11 funding for ethnic communities; and what funding those projects will receive from the Home Office in 1994-95;

(2) how much section 11 funding for ethnic communities there was in 1993-94; and what will be the section 11 funding for 1994-95.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Total provision for section 11 grant in 1993-94 is currently £130·8 million. The corresponding figure for 1994-95 amounts to £111·5 million. This includes funding transferred to the new single regeneration budget.

At present, the following projects in the London borough of Southwark are approved for section 11 grant:

English as a second language and bilingual support project —primary and secondary
Removing barriers to the education achievement of new pupils—primary and secondary
Section 11 support for pupils in special schools
Bilingual and language development support for NCW children under five including those with special needs
Co-ordination and delivery of English for speakers of other languages—ESOL—to adult NCW members/groups in Southwark
Caribbean teachers association teaching and educational project
Southwark Muslim womens association
Mental health project
Child protection project
Translation and interpretation service
Bengal community development project.

The level of grant paid to Southwark in 1994-95 will depend upon actual expenditure incurred by the authority. I shall write to the hon. Member setting out in more detail the position for 1994-95 funding in Southwark.

Immigration (False Imprisonment)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what redress is available to visitors detained at airports but eventually allowed entry in respect of false imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 January 1994]: Paragraph 16 of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 provides that a person who may be required to submit to examination may be detained under the authority of an immigration officer pending his examination and pending a decision to give or refuse him leave to enter. It is open to anyone who considers that he has been falsely imprisoned to sue for damages.

SCOTLAND

Large Combustion Plant Directive

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on compliance to date with the Scottish limits in the United Kingdom national plan to meet the requirements of the EC large combustion plant directive.

Sir Hector Monro: None of the Scottish limits set in the plan was exceeded in the years 1991 to 1993 inclusive. However, on 21 December 1993 a transfer was made of 12 kilotonnes of sulphur dioxide from the other industry sector to the power stations sector with effect from 1996, declining pro rata to the existing reductions from 1999 to 2003. The revised figures are set out in the table. This minor technical change recognises the new five year contract agreed between British Coal and Scottish Power and the latter's commitment to fit flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Longannet power station.

Revised LCPD national plan SO_2 limits for Scotland (in kilotonnes)

	Power stations	Refineries	Other industry

Note: The figures in the existing national plan are shown in parenthesis, where any change has been made.

DEFENCE

Arms Sales, Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add to the answer by the Minister for Arms Procurement to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 25 January 1991, Official Report, column 357.

Mr. Aitken: No. This issue is being investigated by Lord Justice Scott, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment before the publication of his final report. I can assure the hon. Gentleman, however, that Lord Justice Scott has access to all relevant documents.

Artillery Shell Sales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department holds in regard to the underwriting by the Bank of Credit and Commerce International of the export of artillery shells from British companies to Iran since 1985.

Mr. Aitken: My Department holds no such information.

Canira Technical Company Ltd.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses in regard to the ownership and trading activities of the Canira Technical Company Ltd. of Northern Ireland in relation to the Iraqi arms procurement programme.

Mr. Aitken: This issue is being investigated by Lord Justice Scott, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment before the publication of his final report. I can assure the hon. Member, however, that Lord Justice Scott has access to all relevant documents.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence between what hours the night low flying system is activated.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom night low flying system is operational between the following hours each month:

	Start	Finish
January	16.30	07.30
February	17.30	07.00
March	18.30	06.00
April	19.30	04.30
May	20.30	03.30
June	21.00	03.00
July	21.00	03.30

	Start	Finish
August	20.00	04.00
September	18.30	05.00
October	17.30	06.00
Novemb[illegible]	16.30	07.00
Decemb[illegible]	16.00	07.30

All times are Greenwich mean time.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for which portion of the flight by 29 Squadron Tornado F3s on 12 April 1993 the specified minimum authorised altitude applied; and who was responsible for issuing the authorisation.

Mr. Hanley: The specified minimum authorised altitude of 2,000 ft applied to the entire duration of the flight by 29 Squadron on 12 April 1993—apart from take-off and landing. Two thousand feet is the minimum altitude down to which all United Kingdom military aircraft can fly without specific authorisation, normally by either the squadron commander or one of his senior officers. On this occasion no such authorisation was given.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to military aircrew concerning use of an air traffic control radar service when descending into the United Kingdom low flying system in visual meteorological conditions in unregulated airspace in the flight information region.

Mr. Hanley: No instructions are given to military aircrew concerning the use of such a service when descending to low level in visual meteorological conditions in unregulated airspace in the flight information region.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the arrangements for separation of low-flying military aircraft from offshore industry support helicopters during the hours of darkness, in the coastal areas around (a) the Humber estuary, (b) Morecambe bay, (c) north-east Norfolk and (d) the Aberdeen-Fraserburgh area.

Mr. Hanley: Details of civil helicopter activity in each of the areas specified are brought to the attention of aircrews in the United Kingdom military low flying handbook and on the night low flying chart. Separation from offshore industry support helicopters is achieved by military aircraft operating in separate height bands.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which date low flying area 10 was established in Suffolk; which unit is the controlling authority for the area; and what are the limits on entry of fast jets into the area.

Mr. Hanley: Low flying area 10 was established on 1 September 1993 and is controlled by Wattisham airfield. Fast jets wishing to operate in the area must seek permission from the controlling authority.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if aircrew are permitted to plan entries into particular areas in the night low flying system contrary to the sector-to-sector flow direction when no other aircraft have booked to fly in that area.

Mr. Hanley: The fixed wing region of the United Kingdom night low flying system is divided into a series of numbered night low flying areas, each of which is sub-divided by letter into night low flying sectors. Aircraft crossing from sector to sector must follow the flow direction specified in the regulations except that when an aircraft or formation has exclusive use of an entire NLFA, it may cross the sector boundaries within that area in either direction, but must still comply with the flow direction if crossing to an adjacent area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height for military aircraft transitting through the Leeming-Teesside gap at low level; and on what date the current height limit was introduced.

Mr. Hanley: The minimum and maximum heights for fixed wing military aircraft transitting through the Leeming-Teesside gap are, respectively, 250 and 1000 ft. These limits have applied since the introduction of the present United Kingdom low flying system in 1979.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the requirement in the low flying regulations for military aircrew to make radio contact with Brough airfield prior to transitting the Hull-Brough gap, was changed to a requirement to contact Humberside airport.

Mr. Hanley: Military aircrew are strongly advised to call Humberside radar prior to transitting the Hull-Brough gap, but this is not a mandatory requirement. The change from Brough airfield to Humberside radar came into effect on 15 June 1992.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the transit areas established in the daytime low flying system are in force in the night low flying system.

Mr. Hanley: Yes. Transit areas apply equally to military aircraft operating during the day and at night.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what central records are held by his Department of the number of aircraft movements into each numbered low flying area in the night flying system.

Mr. Hanley: Central records are maintained on a monthly basis of the number of aircraft movements into each sector of the United Kingdom night low flying system.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the maximum permitted speeds and minimum permitted altitudes for Royal Air Force Vulcan aircraft, prior to their retiral from the strike/attack role, while operating in the United Kingdom low flying system (a) on the fixed tactical routes and (b) outside the tactical routes.

Mr. Hanley: RAF Vulcan aircraft were permitted to fly at an absolute maximum of 350 knots and a minimum height of 300 ft in the United Kingdom low flying system. The aircraft did not operate outside fixed tactical routes except when using designated range areas.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates in the last five years on which No. 591 Signals Unit, Royal Air Force, has conducted covert monitoring of tactical radio frequencies used by aircraft operating in the United Kingdom low flying system; and on how many occasions this has included monitoring of the common low flying frequency.

Mr. Hanley: No. 591 Signals Unit has never been tasked to carry out covert monitoring of tactical radio frequencies used by aircraft operating in the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if night low flying is permitted over (a) the Western Isles, (b) Orkney, (c) Shetland and (d) the northern half of the Isle of Man; and what are the reasons for their exclusion from the system of numbered night low flying areas.

Mr. Hanley: With the exception of the Isle of Man, which is designated an avoidance area, aircraft are permitted to overfly the areas listed at low level at night. These areas are not included in the system of numbered night low flying areas because the amount of low flying carried out over them at night is not sufficient to justify their inclusion in the system of procedural deconfliction which exists elsewhere.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level flights in instrument meteorological conditions were undertaken by RAF Tornados from Canadian forces base Goose Bay (a) during daylight hours and (b) at night during each of the years 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The records of sorties flown from Goose Bay do not differentiate between those sorties flown under visual flying rules and those flown under instrument meteorological conditions. The statistics requested are therefore unavailable.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the agreed annual number of low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom by aircraft participating in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation tactical leadership programme courses.

Mr. Hanley: The NATO tactical leadership programme holds six courses per year and was permitted in 1993 to fly an average of two low-level sorties per course in the United Kingdom low flying system. Each low-level sortie in the United Kingdom may involve up to 24 aircraft.

RAF Fast-jet Aircrew

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many person-days have been spent by Royal Air Force fast-jet aircrew on operational deployments to actual or potential areas of combat operations in each year since 1981.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Goose Bay Training Base

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amounts paid to the Canadian Government in each year since 1980 for use of the training facilities at Goose Bay, Labrador; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures into (a) contributions to personnel, operations and maintenance expenditure, (b) contributions to common user building, infrastructure, facility and equipment expenditure, (c) payments for dedicated user buildings, infrastructure, facilities and equipment and (d) contributions to expenditure on environmental research and mitigation measures.

Mr. Hanley: Amounts paid for financial years prior to 1986-87 are not readily available. For financial years 1986-87 to the end of September 1993 the breakdown is as follows:

Tornado Incidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the action taken as a result of the incident involving a Scandinavian Airlines MD-80 and a Tornado from the trinational training establishment in the Manchester air traffic control zone in November 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The crew of the Tornado involved in the incident on 4 November 1992 were formally interviewed by their squadron commander upon their return to the Tornado trinational training establishment and extensively debriefed on the procedures for dealing with the situation which had arisen. A review of TTTE procedures was conducted at RAF Cottesmore in particular relating to briefing for low level flying and emergency pull-up procedures. These are re-emphasised at all pre-flight briefings and are rechecked by squadron authorising officers.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint airmiss working group report on the airmiss between an Army Lynx helicopter and an RAF Tornado over the North Yorkshire moors on 12 January 1993.

Mr. Hanley: A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Tornado F3 (Fuel Tanks)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and circumstances of all incidents involving the inadvertent jettisoning of underwing fuel tanks by Tornado F3 aircraft from RAF Leeming.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Circumstances
15 January 1991	The cause was not positively determined, although it was considered the most likely cause was the inadvertent hitting of the selective jettison button by the pilot.
5 October 1992	Inadvertent operation of the selective jettison button by the navigator as he tried to resolve a fault in the underwing stores management panel.

Both incidents were fully investigated and the lessons to be drawn were disseminated throughout the RAF.

Phantom

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of an incident at Bentham, North Yorkshire, in September 1991, in which a Phantom aircraft lost part of its engine during flight.

Mr. Hanley: On 11 September 1991 a RAF Phantom aircraft was flying at 500 ft and 420 knots over north Yorkshire when an explosion was heard from the right engine. The engine was shut down and the pilot diverted to RAF Leeming. On investigation the engine pressure and high pressure turbine assemblies were found to have seized. Small pieces of engine debris fell on the roof and car park of the Angus Fire factory in High Bentham, causing some minor damage. There were eight claims as a result of this incident, all of which have been settled.

Exercise Luce Belle

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the reason for the exclusion of the Buccaneer aircraft from the Exercise Luce Belle noise measurement programme.

Mr. Hanley: The Buccaneer's primary role is maritime strike/attack; it does not conduct a significant amount of low flying over land in the United Kingdom low flying system. It was excluded from Exercise Luce Belle on that basis.

Military Aircraft (Radio Communication)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those military aircraft types in United Kingdom military, and United Kingdom-based United States military service, which do not possess radios capable of communicating on very high frequency civil air traffic control frequencies.

Mr. Hanley: All United Kingdom military aircraft are capable of communicating on very high frequency civil air traffic control frequencies. United Kingdom-based United States F15C and F15E aircraft are not capable of communicating on VHF frequencies, but would communicate with air traffic control using VHF frequencies.

Instrument Meteorological Flights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations governing flight by military aircraft in instrument meteorological conditions at less than 3,000 ft altitude outside controlled or regulated airspace; and what measures are taken to ensure separation of aircraft flying in these conditions from other air traffic.

Mr. Hanley: Military aircraft are not permitted to operate below 3,000 ft above mean sea level in instrument meteorological conditions outside controlled or regulated airspace except: when they are taking off or landing; when they are descending to or climbing out from authorised low-level flight; or when special dispensation has been granted. In these circumstances, aircrew will as far as possible avoid areas of known airborne activity or will make use of air traffic services to maintain separation from other aircraft. In addition, military aircraft conduct low flying training in instrument meteorological conditions in the highlands restricted area using terrain-following radar.

Military Aircraft (Live Weapons)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each year since 1989 and by (a) location and (b) aircraft type when a military aircraft carrying live weapons has landed at a civil airport in the United Kingdom as a matter of urgency; and if he will show in his answer the type of weapons being carried.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Skyguard

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) date and (b) locations when the Skyguard surveillance system has been operated since its inception.

Mr. Hanley: Since its introduction, Skyguard radar has been deployed to the following locations to monitor low flying:

Location	Dates
Knaresborough, North Yorkshire	27 to 29 June 1989
Penrith, Cumbria	1 to 3 August 1989

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish for each service that has been market tested in his Department in 1993 (a) the cost of the testing process, including consultancy costs, (b) the result of the test, (c) the name of the successful contractor, (d) the value and duration of the contract, (e) the number of staff involved, (f) estimated annual cost reductions and (g) whether the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 were deemed to apply.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is currently analysing the outcome of the 1992-93 "Competing for Quality" programme with the efficiency unit in the Cabinet Office. Much of the information requested in the question will, once it has been finalised, be published in aggregate form in the "Citizen's Charter Second Report".

Ships (Medical Provision)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what medical provision is provided on board Royal Navy (a) aircraft carriers, (b) landing ships, (c) destroyers, (d) frigates, (e) minesweepers, (f) minehunters, (g) patrol boats and (h) other small craft in terms of qualified doctors, nurses and other staff.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Aircraft Carriers

2×Medical Officers—1 surgeon, 1 anaesthetist
1×Dental Officer
1×Operating Department Assistant
1×Laboratory Technician
6×Medical Assistants

(b) Landing Ships

1×Medical Officer
1×Dental Officer
7×Medical Assistants

(c) Destroyers and Frigates

The complements of all destroyers and frigates include a medical assistant; in addition, vessels designated to lead destroyer or frigate squadrons and those operating independently, or on directed tasks, carry a medical officer.

(d) Minesweepers, Minehunters, Patrol Boats and Other Small Craft

These ships are classed as minor war vessels and carry no dedicated medical personnel, but all minor war vessels Coxswains undergo special first aid training at the Royal Naval medical staff school.

Pregnant Women

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has of the amount of money that will be spent in 1993-94 and 1994-95 in compensation to women who had to leave the armed forces because they became pregnant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is not possible to estimate reliably the amount of money that will be spent in 1993-94 and 1994-95 in compensation to women who were compulsorily discharged from the services on grounds of pregnancy between 9 August 1978 and August 1990.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women in each year since 1980 who left the forces because they became pregnant subsequently rejoined the forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women have left each of the armed forces in each year since 1980 because they became pregnant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers of women who left the Armed Forces in each year since 1980 because they became pregnant, are as follows:

	Female officers			Non-commissioned females
Financial year	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force	Total
1979-80	4	13	7	55	174	162	415

Financial year	Female officers: Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force	Non-commissioned females: Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force	Total
1990-91	3	17	12	60	167	124	383
1991-92	4	17	15	78	177	140	431
1992-93	3	16	18	85	204	112	438

Notes:

1. Actual figures for the numbers of female officers leaving on pregnancy are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate effort. The figures provided are therefore estimates based on the percentage of non-commissioned females leaving on pregnancy.
2. Prior to August 1990, service women who became pregnant were compulsorily discharged. In August 1990, maternity leave was introduced and pregnant service women could choose whether to leave or take maternity leave. The figures for 1990-91 cover both those who were compulsorily discharged prior to August 1990 and those who opted to leave after that date.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Ministry has had with the Equal Opportunities Commission about conditions covering women employed in the forces who became pregnant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no formal discussions about conditions for service women who became pregnant between my Department and the Equal Opportunities Commission. The commission was, however, made aware in 1990 of the introduction of maternity leave for servicewomen.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent in compensation to women who had to leave the armed forces because they became pregnant; how many women have received compensation; what is the (a) maximum, (b) minimum and (c) average amount paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £7,822,943 has so far been paid in compensation to women who were compulsorily discharged from the armed forces on grounds of pregnancy between August 1978 and August 1990 when maternity leave was introduced. Compensation has been paid to 1,679 claimants. The average amount paid is £4,659. The maximum awarded by a tribunal is £172,921—but this will be the subject of an appeal by the MOD to the employment appeals tribunal. The minimum payment has been for £500.

Creches

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the military bases where creches are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Creche and child-minding facilities are available to service personnel and dependent parents on bases in the United Kingdom and overseas as a result of local initiatives. Details of these facilities are not, however, held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Child care legislation places no statutory obligation on the MOD to provide creche or child-minding facilities for service personnel or their dependants, and, as with the civilian population at large, service personnel are responsible for making their own arrangements for the care of their children and for meeting the costs involved.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total amount paid out to date in compensation under provisions of the citizens charter (a) in total and (b) by relevant Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: An estimated £9,383,000 in total has been paid out in compensation under provisions of the citizens charter. This is broken down as follows:

Department	Compensation paid (nearest £000)	From	To
British Rail	4,427	April 1992	30 November 1993
London Underground	184	August 1992	7 January 1994
Northern Ireland Railways	2	November 1992	19 January 1994
HM Customs and Excise	14	January 1992	31 December 1993
Benefits Agency	4,071	April 1992	March 1993
Contributions Agency[1]	76	April 1991	March 1993
Employment Service	89	April 1992	March 1993
Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland[1]	520	April 1991	20 January 1994

[1] These figures represent payments made from April 1991, four months before the Contributions Agency and Northern Ireland Social Security Agency charters were introduced.

In addition, in the financial year 1992-93 the Inland Revenue paid £389,000 in compensation for "serious error" as defined in the code of practice "Mistakes by the Inland Revenue"; and between January 1992 and 31 December 1993 HM Customs and Excise paid £532,000 in repayment supplements.

The privatised utilities also compensate customers for failure to meet service standards. Details of payments are not held centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest estimate of the number of inquiries dealt with to date under the citizens charter (a) in total and (b) by relevant Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since April 1992, over 5,000 letters have been received in the citizens charter unit. Individual Departments and agencies will, of course, receive their own citizens charter correspondence, but my Department does not hold records on this.

Iraq (Visits)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each of the visits made by Ministers or officials of his Department to Iraq since 1982, giving details of dates, names of Ministers or officials and the purpose of visit in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to the information available, there is no record of either Ministers or officials of the Office of Public Service and Science having visited Iraq since centralised departmental records were begun in 1986.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 235

SESSION 1993–94

11th January—21st January, 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
